TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

Right Reverend Father in God,

HENRY,

Lord Bishop of LONDON;

A N D O N E

Of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, &c.

My Lord,

YOUR Generosity to Strangers, which all the World owns and must admire, hath Encourag'd me to Publish these Papers under the Protection of your Venerable Name. They are of such a Nature, as may in a great measure expect a favourable Reception from your Lordship, who are one of the Fathers of our Church; And may not be ungrateful to those, who would know what Luminaries shone, and what Learn'd Men Flourish'd even in those dark and ignorant days of Christianity.

My

The DEDICATION.

My Lord,

I will not trouble your Lordship with a long Account of Du-Pin's Performance, whom you very well understand in the Original; and much more the Fathers of whose Writings and Lives he has given us an Extract in this Collection. Whether I have done him Justice or no, your Lordship is the best Judge. Such therefore as it is, I submit it and my self to better Judgments, and Humbly Present it to your Lordship, as an Acknowledgment of the Honour I have of being one of,

My Lord,

Your Lordship's

Most Humble, and Dutiful Servants

William Jones.

TO THE READER.

THE greatest Part of the Historians, who have deliver'd their Opinions concerning the Character of the Tenth Century, have represented it as an Age of Darkness, Ignorance and Obscurity, accompany'd with Notorious Disorders and Irregularities. The Authour of a Treatise, call'd, The Perpetuity of the Faith, has undertaken to Vindicate it from these Censures, and to make it appear on the contrary, That it is one of the most Happy Ages of the Church, and that it's Disorders being only such as were common to the Preceding, it has some very remarkable Advantages: But a third Writer, who would seem to keep the middle Way between both these Extremes, appears (in my Opinion) to have come nearer to the Mark. For if on the one side, the Authour of the Perpetuity has well observ'd, That there were Holy Men, and some clear-sighted Persons in that Century; it cannot be deny'd on the other side, That Ignorance, Vices and Irregularities were not generally very predominant. The inconsiderable Number of Authours, who wrote; the few Works they left; the Rudeness and Barbarism of their Stile; the Matters contain'd in their Dissertations; and the Complaints that even those Writers themselves make, of the Disorders which prevail'd in their Time; are evident Proofs, That the Censures pass'd upon that Century, are not without sufficient Ground: And if a due Comparison be made, between the Writers, the Works, the Subjects treated of, the Constitutions of Councils, the Church-Discipline, and the Manners of the Christians of the same Age, with those of the preceding; it cannot but be readily acknowledg'd, That it is in many Respects inferiour to them.

To the READER.

'Tis true indeed, that there were Irregularities in all the Ages of the Church, but that they were Commensurate to those which were so common in the Tenth Century ; or that they were spread abroad so far, or become so general, is an Assertion, which cannot be maintain'd with any manner of probability : For who can avouch with assurance, That that Age had as great a share in Learning and Eloquence ; was as fruitful in Illustrious Personages and Ecclesiastical Writers ; or was as productive of Excellent Works and Regular Constitutions, as the preceding Centuries ? Who would adventure to compare the Popes John IX, X, XII, and XIII. and the other Bishops of Rome, who liv'd in the Tenth Century, I will not say, to S. Leo, or S. Gregory ; but even to those Popes, who were less eminent in former Times ? Or who would attempt to set up Ratherius, Atto, Flodoard, Luitprand, Metaphrastes, and other Ecclesiastical Writers, whose Number is very small, not to say in opposition to S. Athanasius, S. Basil, S. Ambrose, S. Augustin, Eusebius and Theodoret ; but even to the more Common Authours of the preceding Ages ? Upon the whole, it ought to be certainly determin'd, That 'tis not without good Reason, that that Century, in comparison of the fore-going, and even of those that follow it ; has been generally stil'd, The Age of Darkneß, Ignorance and Obscurity. However it must be acknowledg'd, That 'twas not altogether Dark, and that it brought forth some Lights, which penetrated the Darkneß, and dispers'd part of the Obscurity. The most Ingenious M. Du Pin follow'd these Luminaries, and took them for his Guides, in writing the Ecclesiastical History of the Age in which they flourish'd, and in giving an Impartial Account of the Matters treated of by them ; which he has done with that Clearness, Generosity and Integrity, which is so inseparable from the Character of this Great Man.

An Account of the most Considerable Transactions in the Eastern Church, during the Tenth Century.

AT the beginning of this Century, Leo the Philosopher, one of the most Learned Emperors the Greeks ever had, govern'd the Empire of the East. This Prince having had three Wives successively, and no Issue Male by either of them, being desirous of a Son to succeed him, marries a fourth Wife, by name Zoe, by whom he already had a Son before the Nuptials. But a third Marriage being prohibited in the East, and Leo himself having enacted a Law against such as should contract such a Marriage, Nicholas the Patriarch of Constantinople, refuses to marry this Prince to this fourth Wife, deposes Presbyter Thomas who ventur'd to do it, and excommunicates the Emperor himself. Leo had recourse to the Pope for his Approbation of the Marriage; and because such successive Marriages (how often soever contracted) were tolerated in the West, he easily obtain'd from Pope Sergius the point he desired. This Pope sent his Legats into the East to confirm the Marriage of Leo; but the Patriarch of Constantinople would not give the least ground, nor acknowledge the Emperor's Marriage as valid, or Leo's 4th Son Constantine Porphyrogenneta as lawful Heir to the Crown. The Emperor did all he could to change his Mind, but finding him fix'd in his Resolution, he banish'd him in the beginning of the year 901, and plac'd in his Room Euthymius, who held the Patriarchal See of Constantinople till about the end of Leo's Reign: For Nicholas himself assures us, that this Prince, touch'd with the remorse of what he had done, recall'd him from his Exile, and re-establish'd him a little before his Death: In which matter he is rather to be credited, than those Authors who tell us that he was recall'd by Alexander the Brother of Leo, which happen'd after the Death of this Prince, in the year 911, the time when he was declar'd Governor to Constantine Porphyrogenneta. Let it be how it will, Euthymius fell into disgrace, and was banish'd, and dy'd shortly after: And Nicholas's Interest so far prevail'd, that after the Death of Alexander, who did not out-live his Brother above thirteen Months, blissh'd:

The Letters of Nicholas
Patriarch of Constantinople to the Pope and others.
 Months, he was chosen Tutor of the Young Emperor. It was at this time, that he wrote a long Letter to the Pope, acquainting him of the whole Contest with the Emperor Leo about his last Marriage, and stoutly maintain'd, contrary to the Practice and Opinion of the Church of Rome, that to marry a third or fourth time was absolutely unlawful. But the Patriarch having received no answer from Rome, wrote another to Pope John, wherein he offers to observe a fair Correspondence and Union with the holy See, provided he would own that a fourth Marriage was not to be permitted to the Emperor, unless by way of Indulgence or Consideration of his Royal Person, and that in itself it was unlawful. The same Patriarch wrote several other Letters, viz. to Simeon Prince of Bulgaria, recommending the Legats which the Pope sent him: One to the Prince of Armenia, upon the Conversion of several Armenians, who had abandoned their Errors: another to the Prince of the Saracens, to dissuade him from persecuting the Christians: One wrote from the Place of his Exile to the Bishops, who had own'd Euthymius for their Patriarch; and two other Letters of Compliment, one to the Prince of Lombardy, and the other to the Prince of the Amalphytans.

The usurper on the Clergy of Constantinople.
 The Empress Zoe, who had taken the Government into her own hands, and had expelled the Patriarch Nicholas from Court in the year 914, was her self divested of her Authority in the year 919, and thrust into the Monastery of Saint Euphemia, by Patricius Romanus, whom Constantine had made his Partner in the Throne. Hitherto the Clergy of Constantinople were divided into two Parties, one declaring for Nicholas, the other for Euthymius; but were re-united in the year 920, and made a Treaty of Union in an Ecclesiastical Convocation, by which (without dissualling any thing that was past) they absolutely prohibited for the future a fourth Marriage, under the pain of Excommunication to be inflicted on those who should contract such Marriage, and to be in force during the continuance of such Marriage. They likewise inflicted a Penance of five years on such as should marry a third time being above forty years old: And a Penance of three years on such as should re-marry after thirty years of Age, if they had any Children by their former Marriages.

The Patriarchs of Constantinople who succeeded Nicholas.
 By this Regulation was the Church of Constantinople restor'd to its former Quiet, the Peaceable possession of which Nicholas enjoy'd to his Death, which happen'd in the year 930. Stephen the Arch-bishop of Anasæa was his Successor, who preided over this Church almost three years. After his Death the Patriarchal See of Constantinople was design'd for Theophilact the Emperor's Son; but he being under age, this Dignity was repos'd by way of Trust in the hands of one Tripso a Monk. He being once in possession refus'd to resign his Place to Theophilact; but the Emperor made use of one, who cunningly procur'd a Blank Paper sign'd by the Patriarch's own hand, which he fill'd up with a Resignation of the Patriarchship, as acknowledging himself unworthy of it. Whereupon he was depos'd in a Synod held at Constantinople in the year 944, and Theophilact was constituted in his place. But this Man led a Life far different from what a Patriarch ought to lead, and was more taken up with his Horses and his Hounds, and other such like Diversions, than with discharging the Duty of his Place. He died in the year 956 of a Drop-sie, occasioned by a fall off his Horse, which flung him against a Wall. The Emperor constituted in his Room Polycut, a poor Monk, but one of extraordinary good Morals, who was Ordain'd by Basil Bishop of Cæsarea, and not by Nicephorus of Heraclæa, to whom that Ordination did of Right belong. The liberty which this Patriarch took of reproving the Great Men at Court, immediately drew upon him a great many Enemies, who inclin'd the Emperor to think of Deposing him. He was confirm'd in this Resolution by Theodorus of Cisica, but notwithstanding he was so bent upon it, he died without doing any thing therein. His Son Romanus, who was suppos'd to give his Father a Lift into the other world, succeeded him in the year 960, and caus'd his Son Basil to be Crown'd by Polycut. But this young Prince and his Brother Constantine, not being of age to enter upon the Government when their Father died in the year 963, Nicephorus Phocas was proclaim'd Emperor by the Army, and Crown'd by Polycut. A while after this Patriarch had a warm debate with the Emperor: For this Emperor having marry'd Theophanes, the Widow of Romanus, Polycut threaten'd to excommunicate him unless he would Renounce her: (1.) Because this was the second Marriage Nicephorus had contracted, without submitting to the Penance due to those who were Guilty of Bigamy. (2.) Because it was reported that Nicephorus had stood Godfather to one of Theophanes's Children, the Emperor propos'd this Question to the Bishops who were then in Constantinople, and to the chief of his Council, who left him at his Liberty to keep Theophanes as his Wife: And Polycut himself did not insist any more on the Dissolution of the Marriage, after that the Emperor had assur'd him upon his Oath, that he had never stood Godfather to any of Theophanes's Children, which was confirm'd by Stylien, chief Secretary of State, who made a Recantation of what he had formerly said about it. This Emperor began his Reign with success, and re-took a great many Provinces of Asia from the Saracens; but he loaded his People with Taxes, and seiz'd upon the Revenues of the Church to give to his Soldiers. After the Death of any Bishops he would send a Com-

military to seize upon their Temporalities, and prohibited the chusing any others in their stead, without his consent and orders, which was confirmed in a Synod. At the same time he would fain have had a Ratification of this Proposal, "That all Soldiers who died in the Field, should be declar'd Saints as the Martyrs were; but the Bishops oppos'd it. However, they could not persuade two of their Brethren who had born Arms, and fought against the Enemy, to relinquish their Ministerial Functions; several amongst them of a more Martial Genius approving of this their Conduct. The exactions of Nicephorus, and the bad success of his Arms in Italy, having render'd him Odious to the people of Constantinople, he was kill'd in an Insurrection of them, and John Zempes, Reign'd in his stead in the year 969. Polycletus refus'd to Crown him, till he had banish'd the Murderers of Nicephorus, sent Theophanes from Court, and promis'd to give to the Poor, as an Expiation of his Fault, the Estate which he had when a private man. This was the last Action of Polycletus, who dy'd five and thirty days after he had Crown'd this Prince, in the beginning of the year 970, having held the Patriarchal See of Constantinople fourteen Years. Basil the Monk succeeded him, who had the Government of that Church till the Death of John Zempes, which happen'd about the year 975 or 976, after which the two Sons of Romanus being upon the Throne, and having re-call'd their Mother Theophanes, Basil the Patriarch was depos'd in Council, and Anthony Studita succeeded him. But he did not enjoy the Patriarchship long; for the year after Bardus, surnam'd the Hard, having revolted and taken upon him the Quality and Ensigns of Emperor, Anthony of his own accord quitted his place and withdrew. The See of Constantinople became Vacant during four Years, the time he surviv'd. After his Death, Nicholas, surnam'd Chrysoberge succeeded, who had Sisinnius for his Successor in the year 993. Basil and Constantine, who had subdued Bardus, Reign'd still as Emperors. Basil liv'd to the Year 1025, and his Brother Constantine liv'd three Years after him.

During this whole Century, the Greek Church, which was upon its Declension; prov'd very Barren, both of famous Men and good Authors. We find among them but very few who made it their business to compose, and their Works are very inconsiderable, both in respect to the Matter, and to the Manner wherein they were writ.

Simeon Metaphrastes.

One of those who wrote most was Simeon, surnam'd Metaphrastes, so call'd from Simeon his turning the Antient Lives of the Saints into another sort of a Style than that Metaphrastes wherein they were formerly written. He was an Officer in the Palace, Lord High Chancellor, and flourish'd in the Tenth Century, chiefly under the Reign of Constantine Porphyrogenneta. For tho he had been employ'd under the Reign of Leo, yet he writ nothing till Constantine's time, as appears by the Life of Saint Theotista, which is his first Piece, as is observ'd in his Panegyrick written by Psellus, another Psellus than that who liv'd in the time of Constantine the Iconoclast, of whom we spoke in another place. He apply'd himself to study, and enquire into the Lives of the Saints, and having made a large Collection of them, those which he did not like he undertook to make over again, not only by casting them into a different style, but also by adding to, or subtracting from them, what he thought Convenient, and running them down into the form of a Panegyrick rather than History. We have a great many of them of his Composing, and most under his name, as well in printed Collections as in MSS.; but they are mix'd with several others, Compos'd by various Authors. There are some among the Anonymous which may be ascrib'd to him. It would be very difficult to make the distinction, had not the Ingenious Allatius given himself the trouble of doing it, with a great deal of accuracy, in his Dissertation concerning the Writings of the Simeons, wherein he gives us a Catalogue of the Lives of the Saints, which, in Manuscript or Print, belong properly to Metaphrastes, and which of them belong to other Authors. He reckons above an hundred which are Genuin, and almost as many more that are Spurious, whose Authors are unknown; and near four hundred and fifty, whose Authors he discovers. They who have the curiosity to search further into this matter, may consult Allatius himself: As for our part, we don't think it worth our while to croud such a tedious and useless Catalogue into our Work. Besides these Lives of the Saints, Metaphrastes has compos'd several Sermons on the solemn Festivals of the year, which are to be met with in Manuscripts; and a great many Hymns and Prayers which are inserted in the Ecclesiastical Writings of the Greeks. He likewise digested four and twenty Moral discourses taken from the Works of S. Basil, and Printed together with them, [and likewise publish'd by themselves in Greek at Paris, 1556.] And in the Libraries there are a great many Collections of Moral Sentences taken out of S. Macarius, and an hundred one and thirty Sentences or Rules more, all compos'd by Metaphrastes. Lastly, Leo Allatius has publish'd nine Letters and several pieces of Poetry of the same Author, together with a Discourse of the Lamentation of the Virgin Mary on the Passion of our Saviour.

John Cameniates.

John Ca-
meniates.

ABOUT the same time liv'd John Cameniates, Lecturer of the Church of Theſſalonica, who wrote the History of the taking and ſacking that City by the Saracens in the year 904. It was ſet forth by Leo Allatius in his collection of the Greek Writers.

Constantine Porphyrogenetta.

Constantine Por-
netta.

Constantine Porphyrogenetta is reckon'd one of the Authors of this Century. He was ingenious himſelf, a Lover of Learned Men, and very well verſ'd in the Sciences. We have of his writing an History of the Image of our Saviour ſent to Abgarus King of Edessa, and brought from Edessa to Conſtantinople in the year 944. This piece was publiſh'd by Father Cambesius, in his Collection of the Authors who wrote the History of Conſtantinople, and printed at Paris 1664. He likewiſe wrote the Life of his Grand-Father the Emperor Baſil the Macedonian; which is to be met with in the Collection of Allatius. In the year 1617 Meurſius ſet forth ſeveral Political Treatiſes of this Emperors compoſing, viz. A Treatiſe concerning the Government of the Empire, directed to his Son Romanus; a Book of Inſtitutions, two Books of the Dignities of the Eaſtern Empire, and ſeventeen Novels. He likewiſe compos'd ſeveral Hiſtorical and Political Pandects, extracted out of all the Hiſtorians, and rang'd under three and fifty Heads, of which we have only two remaining, viz. the Seven and Twentieth, which contains the Extracts of Embaſſies, publiſhed in Greek by Hoeſchetius, printed at Ausbourg in the Year 1603, and in Latin at Paris in the Year 1609: And the Fiftieth on the Virtues and Vices, ſet forth by Monſieur Henry de Valois, and printed at Paris in the Year 1634.

Hippolitus the Theban.

Hippolitus

Hippolitus the Theban lived in the ſame Century. He compos'd a Chronicon, ſeveral Fragments whereof are to be met with in the third Tome of the Antiquities of Caniſius, and in Monſieur Cotelier's Notes. 'Tis to this Hippolitus that we ought to attribute the ſmall Treatiſe of the Twelve Apoſtles ſet forth by Father Cambesius in the Second Tome of his Additions to the Bibliotheca Patrum, [Printed at Paris in the Year 1648.]

Eutichius the Egyptian, of the Country call'd Said in Egypt, born in the year 876, by Profeſſion a Phyſician, and Patriarch of Alexandria from the Year 933 to the Year 940, compos'd ſeveral Treatiſes in Arabick. Thoſe which have been Tranſmitted to our times, are a Treatiſe of Phyſick, a Diſpute between an Heretick and a Chriſtian, an Hiſtory of Sicily from the time of the taking of that Iſland by the Saracens, and Annals from the beginning of the World down to the Year 937, containing ſeveral remarkable Tranſactions both of Eccleſiaſtical and Prophane Hiſtory, and which he has intituled a Methodical Diſpoſition, or Composition of precious things, or the Substance, or Marrow of Hiſtory. Selden in the Year 1642 printed at London, a Fragment of his Treatiſe concerning the Election and Ordination of the firſt Patriarchs of Alexandria, which Eutichius aſerts had been done till Alexander's Time, by twelve Presbyters of that Church, who choſe one among themſelves for Patriarch, and laid their hands upon him. He likewiſe there maintains that there was not a Biſhop in all Egypt till the time of Demetrius. This very Treatiſe has ſince that been publiſhed entire by Selden, and printed in the Year 1658 at London, in two Volumes in 4^o both in Arabick and in Latin. 'Tis full of Fables and very Vulgar Stories.

Nico of Armenia.

Nico of Armenia.

Nico of Armenia was very young, when without his Parents conſent he ſhut himſelf up in the Monastery of the golden Rock, ſituate between Pontus and Paphlagonia. After he had there led for a long time a very aſtute life, in the Year 961. he was ſent out on a Miſſion by his Superior. He preached in Armenia, and in other Provinces of the Eaſt, and from thence went to the Iſle of Crete, which had lately ſhaken off the Yoke of the Saracens. He purg'd this Iſland from thoſe Pagan ſuperſtitious which were ſtill in uſe among them, and brought over a great many perſons to the Faith. He retir'd afterwards to Lacedaemonia, from whence he was ſent for to Corinth, by his Prayers to put a ſtop the incuſions of the Bulgarians. He dy'd in the year 998. He is said to be the Author of a little Treatise of the Religion of the Armenians, containing an Abridgment of their Errors, which is to be seen in Latin in the Bibliotheca Patrum, together with a fragment against irregular and rash ex-communications, where he says that they recoyl back on those persons who dart them out too rashly.

Nicephorus the Philosopher.

WE may likewise reckon among the Authors of this Century, Nicephorus the Philosopher, who made Funeral Orations on the Death of Anthony Patriarch of Alexandria. Nicephorus the Philosopher.

Moses Bar-Cephas.

LASTLY, to these we may joyn Moses Bar-Cephas Bishop of Syria, who compos'd in Syriack a Treatise concerning Paradise, divided into three Books, set forth in Latin by Masius. Moses Bar-Cephas.
Printed first at Antwerp, in the year 1569, and afterwards in the Bibliotheca Patrum. 'Tis a very large Commentary on what was said concerning Paradise in the Book of Genesis. In the first Book he treats of the Earthly Paradise: In the second, of the Mystical Paradise, that is to say, of the Mystical Significations of that which is call'd the Earthly Paradise; and in the last he treats of the Errors of Hereticks concerning Paradise, and the Objections that may be brought to the contrary. In this last Book he maintains, that Adam was created Mortal, and that God would have render'd him immortal by his Grace, if he had not sinn'd: however, he refutes Theodore and Nestorius, who had maintain'd that the Sin of Adam was not the Cause of the Death of Mankind.

CHAPTER II.

An Account of the Church of Rome, and other Italian Churches during the Tenth Century.

THOUGH Historians have differ'd in their Judgment, concerning the Tenth Century in general; yet they all agree in their accounts of the wretched State and Condition of the Church of Rome, and those who have been most favourable in their Censures, could not but own that it was in a strange disorder. "At that time (crys Cardinal Baronius) How deform'd, how frightful was the face of the Church of Rome! The Holy See was faln under the Tyranny of two loose and disorderly Women, who plac'd and displac'd Bishops as their humour led them: and, (what I tremble to think and speak of) they plac'd their Gallants upon St. Peter's Chair, who did not so much as deserve the very name of Popes. For who dare say that these infamous persons, who intruded without any form of Justice, were lawful Popes? We do not find that they were chosen by the Clergy; or that they consented in the least to their Election. All the Canons of Councils were infring'd, the Decrees of Popes trampled under foot, the antient Traditions despis'd, the Customs and Ceremonies usually observ'd in the Election of Popes neglected, and the Holy See became a prey to Avarice and Ambition. In such terms as these does this Cardinal, who cannot be suppos'd to be an Enemy to the Church of Rome, lament the sad estate wherein it was in this Tenth Century: and a long time before him, Arnold Bishop of Orleans, who probably might have been an Ey-witness of some of these Disorders, breaks out into this Complaint: "O miserable Rome! Thou that formerly didst hold out so many great and glorious Luminaries to our Ancestors, into what prodigious darkness art thou now faln, which will render thee infamous to all succeeding Ages?" We may trace the beginning of this disorder from the Promotion of Formosus to the Pope-The State of the Church of Rome in the Tenth Century.
dom, which sow'd the Seed of the Divisions which afterwards ensued. This Formosus being Bishop of Ostia, had been depos'd by John VIII. in a Synod held at Rome, and constrain'd to swear he would continue a Lay-man all the rest of his Life. He was depos'd for these three Reasons. (1.) Because having been sent by Pope Nicholas I. into Bulgaria, he made the King of the Bulgarians swear that he would not admit of any other Bishop besides himself, that should be sent thither by the Holy See. (2.) Because he had already endeavour'd to be translated from the Church of Ostia to that of Rome, and made Parties for for the attaining of his end, contrary to the Laws prescrib'd in the Canons. (3.) Because he had abandon'd his Church without the Pope's leave, and that having left Rome, he was suspected to have conspir'd against the Empire and the Church. This Sentence of John VIII. was repeal'd by his Successor Marinus, who re-call'd Formosus, re-establish'd him in his Bishoprick, and declar'd the Oath he had been forc'd to take to be null and void. However he still kept up the design he had laid of advancing himself to the Popedom; and he so well form'd his intrigue, that after the Death of Steven V. he had so powerful a Party as to carry it, against Sergius a Deacon of the Church of Rome, who had been elected by a great part of the Clergy. Formosus hinder'd his Ordination, drove him out of the Church, and forc'd him to fly to Tuscany to the Marquis Adalbert, who declar'd himself his Protector. Formosus was ordain'd on the 27th of May in the year 891. The year after he crown'd Guy Duke of Spoleto Emperor, and a while after confer'd the same Title on Lambert the Son of that Prince. But no sooner was Arnulphus King of Germany fall'n down into Italy, but Formosus invited him to Rome, designing to make him an instrument of wreaking his revenge on those Romans who had affronted him. Arnulphus enter'd the City by force, caus'd the chief of the Enemies of Formosus to be beheaded, and was for this piece of Service crown'd Emperor by this Pope in the year 896. No sooner was Arnulphus gone off, but the Romans renew'd their Conspiracies against Formosus, who dy'd about the latter end of this year.

Boniface, whom the People put up in his stead, was a very unworthy man, who had been degraded from his Subdeaconship, and the order of Priesthood. A few days after he was Outed by Adalbert, and Stephen VI. advanc'd to the Chair. This man immediately declares himself an Enemy to the memory of Formosus; calls a Council, where he nulls all the Ordinations made by Formosus; dug up his Corps, and having dress'd him up in his Pontifical Robes, he condemn'd him as if he had been alive: and after he had censured him for his Ambition in quitting the Bishoprick of Ostia, and usurping S. Peter's Chair, contrary to the Canons of the Church, he caus'd him to be stripp'd of his Robes, cut off his three Fingers, wherewith he gave the Blessing, and threw him into the Tiber. A base and barbarous Proceeding this! and such as has struck Horror into all those who have wrote about it. For tho the Promotion of Formosus was not agreeable to the Canons, and might prove a very ill precedent; yet such a disingenuous Cruelty exercis'd to no purpose upon a dead Carcass was a certain demonstration of the Spite and Malice, or rather of the Madness wherewith his Enemies were possess'd. And in truth all this Tragedy was begun by Sergius, and supported by the Authority of Adalbert, who bore at that time the greatest sway in Rome. But his Interest afterwards grown weaker, Stephen was severely used by the Romans, and cast into Prison, where he was Strangled about the latter end of the Year 900, if his Epitaph is to be credited in the case.

The Romans advanc'd one Romanus in his place, who sat but a few months on the Chair: however he had so much time as to condemn and disannul all that his Predecessor had done against Formosus. The man who succeeded him nam'd Theodorus, was of his mind, but he died within twenty days.

After his Death the Romans chose a Monk, Deacon of the Town of Tivoli, Son of Rampealdus, who went under the name of John IX. This man seeing Italy divided by the Factions of those who made their Prerensions to the Empire, behaved himself very cautiously in the beginning of his Popedom. The Emperor Arnulphus dy'd about the end of the Year 899, and Guy of Spoleto died within a short time after, so that Italy was disputed between Berenger, Lewis the Son of Beson, and Lambert the Son of Guy. The Princes of Italy, weary of the Government of Berenger, especially Adalbert, Marquis of Tyrol, the Father of another Berenger, who was afterwards King of Italy, had call'd in Lewis; but Berenger assisted by Adalbert, Marquis of Tuscany, having hemm'd him in, oblig'd him to return, and made him renounce his Pretensions to the Kingdom. A while after Adalbert, who had supported the Interests of Berenger, re-call'd Lewis, who re-too's part of Italy; but those who had invited him in, soon betray'd him, and deliver'd him into Berenger's hands, who caus'd his Eyes to be put out. Berenger swoln with his success comes to Rome, and forces Pope John IX. to Crown him Emperor: But no sooner was he gone from Rome, but the Pope sent for Lambert, who resided privately in a corner of Italy, and declar'd him Emperor.

Since by this Action he found himself oblig'd to acknowledge Formosus for Lawful Pope, because it was he who had crown'd Lambert, he held a Council, wherein he cancell'd all the proceedings against that Pope. After so bold an undertaking, he durst not stay at Rome, where the Interest of Berenger was most powerful, but retir'd to Ravenna, where in another Council of 74 Bishops, he confirm'd what had been done at Rome. The Italians, who love to have a great many Masters, and to change the Government, acknowledg'd Lambert, and his Forces became so considerable, that Berenger durst not attack him, but retir'd to Verona. All this happen'd in the year 904.

The year after John IX. dy'd, and Benedict IV. succeeded him, who was not upon the Chair above a year or thereabouts, and did nothing of any note. He who was set up in his Room, call'd Leo V. was Outed forty days after by one of his Domesticks, nam'd Christo-

Christophilus. He did not enjoy this Dignity long; for that Sergius, whom we formerly mentioned, and who had been the Competitor of Formosus, being come to Rome, seiz'd on Christophilus, put him in Prison, and stepp'd himself into St. Peter's Chair. The first thing he did was to condemn Formosus, to declare his Ordinations Null, and to cancel all that John IX. had done in his favour. Afterwards he degraded those whom Formosus had ordain'd, and either ordain'd them over again, or ordained others in their stead. This man is esteem'd a Monster, not only for his Ambition and the violent proceedings he was Guilty of, but also upon the account of his loose Morals. He had a Bastard by Marosia the Daughter of Theodora, who being a long time before highly in the Favour of Adalbert, bore a great Sway in Rome. This Bastard Son of his was afterwards promoted to the Popedom by the Intrigues of this Marosia, and took upon him the name of John XI. as we shall shew in the Sequel. Sergius enjoy'd the See which he had usurp'd, only three Years; he died in the Year 910. After him Anastasius came, of whom History is silent. About this time Lambert was trayterously murder'd, as he was hunting, by a Count of Milan. After his Death Adalbert, whom he had taken prisoner some time before, was set at Liberty, and Berenger was the only man who pretended to the Title of King of Italy and Emperor. The Popedom of Anastasius did not last above two years and some few months; after whose Death Landon was promoted to the Chair, no doubt by the Interest of Theodora. For that wicked woman made use of him to prefer one of her Favorites, nam'd John, to the Archbishoprick of Ravenna. Let us see in what terms Luitprand relates this matter: "About this time (says he) Peter Archbishop of Ravenna, which was esteem'd the chiefest Archbishoprick next to that of Rome, sent frequently to Rome a Deacon of his Church, call'd John, to pay his due respects to the Pope. Theodora, that impudent Whore, having seen him, fell desperately in love with him, prevail'd upon him to maintain a shameful familiarity with her. While they liv'd thus lustfully together, the Bishop of Bologna dying, this John was chose in his place. But before he was consecrated, the Archbishop of Ravenna dies also; and Theodora prevails upon John to quit the Bishoprick of Bologna, and to accept of this Archbishoprick. He thereupon returns back to Rome, and was ordain'd Archbishop of Ravenna. Within a while after the Pope (namely Landon) who had ordain'd him dies, God calling him to give an account of his unjust Proceedings in ordaining John. Theodora upon this, that she might not be far from her Lover, made him again to relinquish the Archbishoprick of Ravenna, and to seize upon St. Peter's Chair.

Landon an

Pope.

Tho' John was so shamefully promoted to the Popedom, yet he enjoy'd it a long time very peaceably; and was acknowledged as lawful Pope by all the Churches. But as God never suffers the Crimes of men to go unpunish'd, unless for a season, thereby to make his Justice the more conspicuous, so the conclusion of his Popedom was tragical, and he fell by the same steps, by which he had been advanc'd. This Theodora we speak of, had two Daughters, more wicked and more debauch'd than her self, call'd Marosia and Theodora. The first of these after she had prostituted her self to Pope Sergius, was marry'd to Guy, the Son of Adalbert Marquis of Tuscany, who, aspiring to be as absolute in Rome as his Father had been before him, took it ill that Pope John should prefer his Brother Peter, and thought he gave him too great an Authority. He thereupon resolv'd to divest him of it, and taking the opportunity when the Pope was with his Brother in the Lateran Palace, with a very few attendants, he order'd an Assault to be made by the Souldiers he had rais'd, who put the Pope into Prison, having first kill'd his Brother before his face. He there dy'd some time after, either for Grief, or rather by an untimely Death. This happen'd in the year 928.

Leo VI. who succeeded him, had a design, if Historians may be credited, of restoring Leo VI. Italy and the City of Rome to its former Quiet: but he had not time for it, being upon the Chair no longer than six Months and fifteen days. 'Tis said he likewise dy'd in Prison, Stephen as his Predecessor did before him. Stephen VII. who succeeded him, enjoy'd the place but two years, one month, and a few days.

Marosia, upon this vacancy of the Holy See, thought there could be no better way of making her self absolute in Rome, and raising her Family, than by placing the Son she had by Pope Sergius, upon the Chair. Tho' by reason of his Birth, his Age, and his Conduct, he was very unworthy of that Promotion. He took upon him the Name of John XI. and was ordain'd in the year 931. Some time after Guy dy'd, and his Brother Lambert was declared his Successor. But Marosia invited Hugh, Son of Count Thibold, Duke of Provence, and King of Arles, and promis'd to make him Master of Rome, in case he would marry her. He not willing to let such an opportunity slip, came forthwith to wait upon her at the Castle of Angelo, and marry'd her, tho' she were his Brother's Widdow. For this Hugh was the Son of Bertha, who had been marry'd first to Thibold, and then to Adalbert, the Father of Guy: The Romans receiv'd him very kindly: But afterwards finding he put the slight upon them, they sought nothing so much as an opportunity of ridding themselves of his Government. Soon after an opportunity presented it self: For Alberic, who was likewise the Son of Marosia, being disgusted with his Father-in-law,

Alberic comes Ma- for affronting him whilst by his Mother's Order he fill'd him out a glass of Wine, excited the Romans to throw off the Yoke of King Hugh, representing to them how deep a disgrace it was for Romans to be subject to the Burgundians. They thereupon quickly abandon'd his Interest; and having chosen Alberic their Leader, they set upon the Castle of St. Angelo, with so much expedition, that Hugh having not time to throw any of his Troops into the place, was forc'd to provide for his own safety; Marosia was seiz'd upon by Alberic's Order, who likewise secur'd his Brother, Pope John, and kept him close Prisoner during the remainder of his Popedom, which expir'd in the year 935. The City was govern'd a long time by Alberic, who changed the form of the Government, made himself Consul, and commanded in chief with a Prefect and Tribunes.

The Wars of Italy.

Whilst these things were in Action, Italy was disputed between several Princes, who all pretended to the Sovereignty thereof. The Italians being weary of the Government of Berenger, in the Year 924. conferr'd the Sovereignty on Radulphus King of Burgundy, Grandson to Conrad and Adelaid the Daughter of Lewis the Godly. Berenger seeing himself turn'd out of Possession, brought the Huns into Italy, who haras'd all Lombardy; but having pass'd the mountains, they were defeated by Radulphus in Languedoc. At the same time Berenger using his Endeavours to re-estate himself in the Kingdom of Italy, was slain by his own men at Verona. After his Death the Title of Emperor of the West was not conferr'd on any one, at least not by the Pope and Italians, till Orbo I. in the Year 962. By Berenger's Death Radulphus became sole Sovereign of Italy, but the Inconstancy of the Italians, which always put them upon driving out one Sovereign by another, caus'd them to submit to Hugh Count Arles, Son to Count Thibold and Bertha the Daughter of Lotharius II. Radulphus after he had received Intelligence that they had trayterously kill'd his Father-in-law, Burchard Duke of Suabia, retired to his own Kingdom of Burgundy, and left Hugh in quiet possession of Italy. We have already shown after what manner he became master of Rome, by the means of Marosias, and also how he was outed by Alberic. He reveng'd himself on Lambert the Brother of Guy the affront he received from his Sister-in-law, and having apprehended him, he caus'd his Eyes to be put out, and bestow'd the Dukedom of Tuscany on his Brother, who proved no more faithful to him than Lambert. The Italians presently re-call'd King Radulphus, who put himself into a posture of re-entring Italy, and of engaging in a fresh War with King Hugh; but these two Kings thought it most proper to come to an accommodation, on condition that Radulphus should renounce his pretensions to the Kingdom of Italy, and Hugh should yield to him all the Country he had then in possession beyond the Alpes. Notwithstanding this accommodation, the Italians continuing still resolv'd to abandon Hugh, invited Arnulphus Duke of Bavaria, the Bastard Son of Arnulphus the Emperor, to come and take possession of the Crown. This Prince enters into Italy with an Army and advances as far as Verona, where he was received by Count Milo and Ratherius Bishop of the place. Hugo came immediately with an Army and sat down before the place, and having defeated a considerable party of the Troops of Arnulphus, he oblig'd him to think of making his Retreat, and of taking Count Milo along with him. The Count no sooner understood his Design, but he went over to King Hugh, and Arnulphus perceiving he was abandon'd by him, withdrew in great haste to Bavaria. The City of Verona immediately surrender'd to King Hugh, who sent Ratherius Bishop of that City, a Prisoner to Parvia. Hugh, puff'd up with this success, after he had caus'd his Son Lotharius to be proclaim'd King, endeavour'd to surprize the City of Rome, and Besieg'd it; but perceiving he could not have his Aim, he treated with Alberic, and gave him in Marriage his Daughter Elda, in hopes, that afterwards he might make himself Master of Rome; but Alberic, as subtle a Politician as himself, would not relinquish the place, nor put it into the Hands of his Father-in-law.

Manasses.

Much about this time Manasser, Archbishop of Arles, King Hugh's Kinsman, thinking he might make his fortune greater under the Government of his Kinsman, quitted his Church at Arles, and comes into Italy, and obtain'd, contrary to all form of Law, the Bishopricks of Verona, Trent, and Mantua, to which he annex'd the Marquisate of Trent.

Leo VII.

Whilst Alberic govern'd Rome, the Holy See was fill'd by Popes of a blameless life; but they found themselves in a Capacity of wishing, rather than of doing good. Leo VII. who succeeded John XI. in the year 936, was call'd by Flodoard the Servant of God. His good Intention was apparent by his sending for Odo the Abbot of Cluny, to manage the Treaty between Hugh and Alberic. He likewise wrote two Letters, of which we will speak hereafter, which shew him to be a lover of Ecclesiastical Discipline. The pontificate of this Pope lasted no longer than three years and a few months. The Romans chose in his place in the year 939 a German, who went under the name of Stephen VIII. This Election was very highly resented by Alberic, who thought that a Roman would have been more for his Interest: Therefore suspecting that he favour'd Hugh, and held a private correspondence with Orbo, he caus'd him to be ill treated. They mangled his Face so barbarously, and render'd it so deform'd, that he durst not appear any more in publick. This Pope sent a Legat into France call'd Damasius, to the Princes of France and Burgundy, exhorting them to acknowledge Lewis, the Son of Charles the Simple for their Lawful King, and and threatening to excommunicate them, if they did not do it. He likewise sent for Odo again into Italy, to mediate the Peace between Hugh and Alberic, but all to no purpose, for both Odo and the Pope dy'd before it was concluded.

Marinus II. succeeded Pope Stephen in the year 943. who was reputed to be a man of singular Piety; and we have an account in the life of St. Ulric, Bishop of Ausbourg, that he foretold to this Saint the Death of his Predecessor Adalberon, and wish'd that he should succeed him; which happen'd thirty years before he was Pope. All the time of his Popedom he was very serviceable to the Church of Rome, in reforming the Clergy and the Monks, in repairing Churches, and in taking a particular care of the poor. He did likewise what he could to promote Peace among the Christian Princes. He concluded that between Alberic and Hugh, and wrote several Letters in order to make up the breach between Otho King of Germany, who endeavour'd to enter Italy, and Lotharius, the Son of Hugh, who oppos'd his design. He call'd to Rome the Prior of Mount Cassin, and bestow'd on him the Government of the Monastery of S. Paul in Rome. 'Tis likewise said that he wrote a Letter to Sico Bishop of Capua, wherein he charges him with his ignorance of the Canons; with his want of Learning; with his holding too great an intimacy with secular persons; and with his having endeavour'd, contrary to all form, to confer a Benefice on one of his Deacons, which belong'd to a Monastery. He granted several Privileges to the Benedictin Monks, whom he favour'd in a great many instances.

Agapetus II. who succeeded Marinus, was likewise a holy man, who govern'd the Church of Rome with a great deal of prudence. He sent into France a Bishop, whose name was Marinus, to assist in the quality of a Legat in that Council held at Agelheim in the year 948. about the Contests between King Lewis and Prince Hugh; and Hugh of Vermandois and Artaldus, pretenders to the Archbishoprick of Rheims. The cause was there determin'd in favour of Artaldus, who was confirm'd in that Bishoprick. Hugh of Vermandois was declar'd an Intruder and excommunicated; and a Letter was written to Prince Hugh the White, in the name of the whole Council, and to his Adherents, to admonish them to return to their Allegiance, under the pain of excommunication. The Sentence of this Council was confirm'd the year following in a Council held by Agapetus, wherein Prince Hugh was excommunicated, till such time as he should give satisfaction to King Lewis.

Under this Pope's Pontificate Italy felt another Revolution. Adalbert, Marquis of Ivrea, had two Sons, Berenger by Gilla, the Daughter of Berenger King of Italy; and Anschaire by Ermegarda, Daughter of the Marquis of Tuscany. These two Princes inherited the power of their Father and Grand-Fathers by the Mother's side, and govern'd a part of Italy. The first was prudent, ingenious and politick; the second was valiant and bold. King Hugh had marry'd his Niece Villa, the Daughter of Boson to Berenger, but he began to be jealous of the growing Greatness of those two Brothers, and resolv'd to put a stop to it. He began with Anschaire, whom he caus'd to to be set upon by Sarlio, who having made the Spoleitians and Camerines to revolt, defeated the Troops he had rais'd for his own defence, and kill'd him in the Skirmish. Berenger, desirous to revenge the Death of his Brother, conspir'd against King Hugh. This Prince having intelligence thereof, took up a resolution in his Council to send for him, under pretence of making up a Reconciliation, and then to put him to death; but his young Son Lotharius, who had been present in Council, could not forbear advertising Berenger thereof, who, upon the receipt of this Intelligence, fled forthwith to Herman Duke of Suabia, who presented him to King Otho. Hugh sent to demand him, but Otho was so far from delivering him up, that he took him under his Protection. A while after Berenger returns to Italy, at the head of some Troops; and having laid Siege to a Fort which was held out by Adelard, the Clerk of Manasses, he became Master of it, by promising the Archbishoprick of Milan to that Bishop, and to the Clerk the Bishoprick of Cuma, in case he should become Master of Italy. Big with these hopes, Manasses importunes the Princes of Italy in his behalf. Milo Count of Verona, was the first who declar'd for Berenger, and receiv'd him into his City. The Bishop of Modena soon follow'd his example, as did likewise the City of Milan, where the Princes of Italy came to wait on Berenger, having deserted King Hugh, who was retir'd to Pavia. From this place he sent his Son Lotharius to Milan, conjuring Berenger and the Princes of Italy, to acknowledge him for their King; and that for his own part he had taken a resolution to retire into Provence. The people mov'd with compassion towards Lotharius, who was not then above fourteen or fifteen years old, acknowledged him their King; with the consent of Berenger; and they wrote to Hugh, acquainting him, that he might (if he pleas'd) reside still in Italy. This Berenger order'd, with a design of seizing upon his Treasures, which he was carrying off to Provence: for Hugh and Lotharius were only Titular Kings, while the whole power of governing was lodg'd in the hands of Berenger. Hugh could not bear this, but cunningly retir'd into Provence, where he dy'd a short time after; leaving his Estate to his Niece Bertha, the Widdow of Boson, Count of Arles. This Revolution happen'd about the year 945. Lotharius still retain'd the name of King of Italy, but did not long enjoy it; for about four years after, whether out of grief to see himself slighted, or whether by the means of some poison, he fell mad, and dy'd childless, about the latter end of the year 949. Berenger presently caus'd himself to be proclaim'd King, and to be crown'd with his eldest Son Adalbert, and that he might render his new Authority the stronger, he sought in Marriage for his Son, Adelaid, the Widow of Lotharius, Daughter to Radulphus II. and Sister to Conrad, Kings of Burgundy. This Princess having refus'd the offer, he besieg'd her in Pavia, took her, and sent her Prisoner to a Castle call'd le Garde: however, she escap'd thence by the help of a Priest, and fled to Atho her Kinman, who undertook to defend her in the Fort of Canossa, where she secur'd her self. Berenger immediately sat down before the place with all his Forces. But in the second year of the Siege, this Queen seeing her self reduc'd to the last extremity, sent to beg King Orho's Assistance, and with her self offered him the Kingdom of Italy. The love of Glory rather than Interest inclin'd this Prince to cross the Mountains. He delivers Adelaid, marries her, and takes her along with him into Germany, leaving his Army with Conrad, Duke of Lorraine, to make an end of the War. Conrad press'd so hotly on Berenger and his Son, that they were forc'd to lay down their Arms, and submit to Orho, whom they went to wait upon in Germany. He having given them an Oath of Allegiance and fealty, restor'd their Kingdom to them, only excepting the Veronese and Friul, which he gave to his Brother the Duke of Bavaria.

During all these Revolutions in Italy, Rome was very quiet under the Government of Alberic, who would not suffer Orho to enter the place, though the Pope Agapetus had invited him thither. The Death of Alberic, which happen'd in the year 954, made no alteration in Rome, for his Son Ottavian, not above 16 years old, having taken his place, continu'd the same form of Government: and not satished with the Temporal power, he was minded to annex to it the Spiritual Authority, by getting himself advanc'd to St. Peter's Chair, after the Death of Agapetus, which happen'd in the year 955. He was not at that time above 18 years of age at most, and was the first Pope that changed his Name, by assuming that of John. He was truly the Twelfth of that name, tho several count him the Thirteenth, being led into that mistake by the fabulous story of Pope Joan. This Man was so far from having any of those qualities requisite for so great a Dignity, that he was a Monster in Debauchery and Irregularity. He began with making War against Pendula Prince of Capua, in order to turn him out of his Estates: but his design did not succeed, and he was forc'd to retire, and to sue for Peace. The Power of Berenger and Adalbert became so great, that they began to be a Terror both to the Pope and the Romans. Ever since Orho had re-establish'd them in the Kingdom of Italy, they had continued to conspire against him and cruelly to oppress their Subjects. Orho, willing to bring them to Subjection, had sent his Son Luitolf into Italy to give them Correction. This young Prince had almost chas'd them out of their Dominions, when he dy'd in the year 958, not without suspicion of being poison'd, and so left his Conquest imperfect. After his Death, Berenger and Adalbert were re-established in their Kingdom, and continued to exercise their Tyranny not only to the other Italians, but also to the Romans. This was the reason why John XII. sent two Legats to Orho, praying him ardently for the Love of God, and the Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul, (they are Luitprand's words) to come and deliver the Church of Rome from the incroachments of these Tyrants, and to restore it to its primitive health and liberty. Walbert Archbishop of Milan, turn'd out of his Church by that Manasses, we formerly mention'd, and Waldon, Bishop of Cuma, turn'd likewise out of his Bishoprick, and several other Lords divested of their Demeasns, went at the same time to prefer their complaints to Orho; who being affected with the miseries of Italy, march'd thither, after he had crown'd his Son Orho at Aix la Chapelle, though a lad of but about seven years of Age. Upon his Arrival Berenger, his Wife, and his Son, being abandon'd by his Subjects, withdrew from the Towns and the open Country, and betook themselves each of them to a Cittadel. Orho was every where receiv'd with great Acclamations, recovers Pavia, was crown'd King of Lombardy at Milan by the Archbishop, and from thence he march'd to Rome, where he receiv'd the Imperial Crown in the beginning of the year 962, at the hands of John XII. with the Universal Acclamations of both Clergy and Laity. He spent some time there with the Pope, and having restor'd to the Church of Rome that which of right belong'd to it, according to his promise, he made Pope John and the principal men of the City, to swear by the Body of St. Peter, that they would bear true Allegiance to him, and never furnish Berenger or Adalbert with any Supplies. After this he return'd to Pavia, with a full design of putting an end to the War, by taking those Castles which still held out for Berenger. He began with taking the Isle of St. Jula, whither Berenger's Wife was retir'd, and restor'd it to the Church of Novar. In the mean time, Adalbert, seeking for assistance in every place, retir'd at last to the Saracens, and under hand solicited Pope John to come over to his Party. This Pope, whose inclinations and intentions did not suit with those of the Emperor Orho, being as much a Slave to Vice and Debauchery, as that Prince was a Lover of Goodness and Virtue: This Pope, I say, that he might have the liberty of indulging his Lusts, made privately a League with Adalbert, and invited him to Rome, promising upon Oath to aid him against Orho. The Emperor being informed of it, sent several of his Attendants to Rome, to know what were the reasons which induc'd the

Pope to enter into an Alliance with Adalbert. And when the Romans could give no other account, than that it arose only from the contrariety of Pope John's Morals and Conduct, to those of the Emperor; that Prince return'd this prudent Reply: "The Pope is as yet but a Child, he may be better'd by the Examples of good men; I hope to reclaim him from his extravagancies, by a good honest reproof, and by wholsom Advice, and then we will say with the Prophet, Behold the Change made by the Hand of the most High. So without troubling his head much with the secret practices of the Pope, he laid Siege to the Castle of Leo in Umbria, whither Berenger and his Wife was retir'd. Thither the Pope sent Leo, chief Secretary of the Church of Rome, and Demetrius, one of the principal Roman Lords, to excuse his falling into the follies incident to youth, promising, that for the future he would be another kind of man: He gave them likewise orders to complain of the Emperor's retaining Bishop Leo, and Cardinal John a Deacon, who had failed in their Duty towards him; and of his not keeping the promise he had made him, because he caus'd those whom he took to take the Oath to himself, but not to the Pope. The Emperor return'd this Answer, "That he was glad of the promise which the Pope had made of reforming, and becoming a better man for the future: That for his part he had religiously observ'd his promise; that he had indeed promis'd to restore to the Church of Rome, all the Territories which of right did belong to it; but before he could do that, he must first take them, and render himself Master of them: That he had neither seen the Bishop nor the Cardinal, whom they charg'd him with entertaining; but that he had heard that being sent from the Pope to the Emperor of Constantinople, on a Negotiation against him, they had been taken at Capua, together with others whom the Pope sent to the Huns, to engage them to fall upon him: That these proceedings were prov'd by Letters sign'd by the Pope, and seal'd with the Papal Seal. Otho dismiss'd the Pope's Deputies with this Answer, and with them sent two Bishops to Rome, to make an ample justification for him; with orders, in case the Pope would not believe what they told him, to offer to prove it by the Combat of two Champions. John XII. received these Envoys very coldly, and to amuse the Emperor, he sent to him eight days after John the Bishop of Narni, and Cardinal Benedict a Deacon, to Negotiate with him. Before they return'd, Adalbert came to Civita Vecchia, and from thence to Rome, where he was receiv'd very kindly by the Pope. No sooner had the Emperor intelligence thereof, but he comes to Rome with his Forces in August 963, being invited by the Romans themselves; part of whom had seiz'd the Castle of St. Paul, and held it out against Adalbert. Upon his arrival, John XII. and Adalbert went off; the Romans receiv'd Otho, and took a new Oath of Allegiance to him, promising that they would neither chuse nor ordain any Pope without his consent and approbation. Three days after, upon the request of several Bishops of Italy, and the people of Rome, he held a grand Council in St. Peter's Church, where there met the Emperor, for the Archbishop of Aquileia, who was falln sick in Town; Radulphus the Deacon, Walbert Archbishop of Milan, Peter of Ravenna, an Archbishop and Bishop of Saxony, Orger Bishop of Spire, and Rubius Bishop of Parma, with about 33 Italian Bishops more, fourteen or fifteen Cardinals, and a great many Officers of the Church of Rome, with several Lords and a Representative for the people. The Emperor demanded of the Assistants, why the Pope was not present in this Council; they reply'd, that they wonder'd he should ask them a thing which was so well known to the whole World: That John was not one of those, who being cover'd with Sheeps cloathing, are inwardly Ravenous Wolves; but that he committed publicly and in the Eye of the world diabolical Actions, without putting himself to the trouble of concealing them. The Emperor told them it was but reasonable to express in particular, the heads of his Accusation, and afterwards to debate what ought to be done. Then Cardinal Peter a Priest, said he had seen him celebrate the Mass without communicating: John Bishop Narni, and a Cardinal Deacon of the same name, declared that they had seen him ordain a Deacon in a Stable extra tempore: Benedict, and the other Priests and Deacons of Rome declared, that they knew him to have conferr'd Orders for Money, and to have ordain'd a Child of ten years old Bishop of Todi. That it was not necessary to bring Witnesses to attest these Sacrileges, since they were so visible, that all that could be said about them, would not express the one half of what they would appear to be. As for the Adultery whereof he was accus'd, they said, that indeed, they were not Eye-witnesses of the Fact, but that they knew for certain, that he had abus'd the Widdow of Ranier, Stephanis, his Father's Concubine, the Widdow Ann and her Neice, and that he had made his Court the very sink of Debauchery: that he went publicly a hunting: that he had put out the Eyes of Benedict, his spiritual Father, whereof he dy'd: that he had cut off the Privy-Members of Cardinal John the Subdeacon; whereof he likewise dy'd: that he had been the cause of a great many Fires; and that he was seen with a Sword in his hand, an Helmet on his head, and a Coat of Mail on his body. The Clergy and Laity there present cry'd out that they had seen him drink a health to the Devil, and swear by the Heathen Gods in his play at hazards: that he never took care to say his Office, or to make the Sign of the Cross. Upon these accusations, the Emperor ordered Liutprand Bishop Otho returns to Rome and causes John XII. to be depos'd. The Council at Rome against John XII.

The Council of Cremona to tell the Synod in Latin (for they could not understand the Saxon Language, at Rome in which he spoke) that he conjur'd them in the name of God, the Blessed Virgin, and the gainst John XII. Apottles to advance nothing against the Pope, but what was certain and would bear good proof. They all replied that they were willing to be Anathematiz'd, if Pope John were not guilty of the Crimes laid to his Charge, nay and of far more shameful and horrid than had been mentioned. That if he would not believe them in this, yet that could not be call'd in question of which the Emperors whole Army were Spectators, viz. that he appeared in Armour from Top to Toe at the Head of his Forces; and that if the Tiber had not between him and the Emperors Army, he would have been taken prisoner in that Equipage. The Emperor acknowledg'd that this was true, and all his Souldiers were Witnesses to it. The Synod were of Opinion that it was necessary to write to the Pope, that he might come and clear himself of the Crimes laid to his Charge. The Letter was written in the name of the Emperor, of the Bishops of Liguria, Tuscany, Saxony, and France, who resided then at Rome. They acquainted John, to whom they gave the Title of Pontifex Summus, and that of Universal Bishop, that having demanded of the Clergy and Laity of Rome the reason of his absence, they had related such abominable things of him, as would make the most impudent to blush: that he was accused of Homicide, of Perjury, of Sacrilege, and of Incest with two of his Relations: That it was likewise reported of him, that he had drank a Health to the Devil, and sworn by Jupiter, Venus, and the other Heathen Deities in his play at hazards: that they earnestly intreat him to come and clear himself of these Accusations, assuring him upon Oath that nothing should be done against him but what was agreeable to the Canons. This Letter bears date November 6. 963. Pope John XII. having received it, return'd this answer. "We hear you design to make another Pope; but if you do, I excommunicate you by the Almighty God, so that you shall not be capable of ordaining any man, or of celebrating the Mass. This Letter being remitted to the Synod, to which the Archbishop of Treves, and three Bishops of Emilia and Liguria were likewise come; they made the Pope this Reply: That the Letter he had sent was a sign of his folly and want of Prudence: that he should have allerdg'd some reasonable excuse of his absence, and sent his Deputies to give the Synod an account thereof: that they would submit to him, provided he delay'd not coming to clear himself of the Crimes laid to his charge; but that if he would not do that, they would not value his excommunication, which they might with Justice retort upon him. This second Letter of the Council to the Pope bears date November 20. and was sent by Cardinal Adrian a Priest, and Cardinal Benedict a Deacon: They went as far as Tiber to give it him, but they could not meet with him there, for he was rid into the Country before they came. Wherefore not meeting with any person that could inform them where he was gone, they brought the Letter back to the Council, which was sitting a third time. The Emperor presented to them the Complaint which he in particular had to prefer against John, viz. That forasmuch as that Pope had sent for him to assist him against Adalbert, and had afterwards taken an Oath of Allegiance to him, yet he had since invited this same Adalbert to Rome, and put himself at the head of the Revolters. Then the Bishops, the Clergy, and the Laity of Rome said, that it was necessary to cure this extraordinary Wound, by as extraordinary a Remedy: That if the debauch'd Morals of Pope John XII. had injur'd the Emperor only, he might have met with some toleration; but since he was the ruin of so many, by the scandal and bad example he had given, they requir'd the Emperor that this Monster (whom it was impossible to reclaim from his Vices) should be turn'd out of the Church of Rome, and that another Pope of an exemplary Life should be set up in his room. The Emperor approv'd of this Resolution, and declar'd it was his desire, that they would choose one who was worthy of sitting in St. Peter's Chair. He had no sooner done speaking, but those who were present cry'd out unanimously, that they chose the Venerable Leo, chief Secretary of the Church of Rome, to be their Pastor, and Sovereign, and Universal Pope of the Roman Church, rejecting John the Apostate because of his irregular Life. Having repeated this their Vote three times, they, according to custom, conducted Leo to the Lateran Palace, consecrated him afterwards in St. Peter's Church, and took an Oath of Fidelity to him. After this the Emperor Orto, supposing he had nothing more to fear in Rome, dismiss'd part of his Troops, that they might not be a grievance to the people: but the Romans, won over by the promises of John, soon after rose up in Arms, and made Barricades to inclose and cut off Orto. But he was rescu'd by the bravery of his Troops, defeated the Seditious, kill'd part of them, and oblig'd the people to give him Hostages. Pope Leo the Eighth of that name, willing to ingratiate himself with the people, prevail'd so far with the Emperor by his intreaties, that he perswaded him to restore the Hostages before his departure. But no sooner was this Prince withdrawn to pursue Adalbert, who lurk'd about Camerin and Spoletto, but the Women whom Pope John had debauch'd, stirr'd up the people to revolt afresh. The Seditious had a design of putting Leo to death, and receiving John; but the former found means of flying to the Emperor: as for the latter, he no sooner enter'd Rome, but but he us'd the Friends of Leo very barbarously, among others Cardinal John a Deacon, ^{The Re-e-} whose right-hand he caus'd to be cut off; Aso chief Secretary, whose Tongue he cut out, ^{Stabli-} and cut off two of his fingers and his Nose; and Orger Bishop of Spire, whom he caus'd ^{ment of} to be whipp'd cruelly, and would not let him go, but in hopes by his means to obtain the ^{Pope John} Emperor's pardon. John to authorize his Proceedings by an Act that should have some ^{XII.} shew of Justice, held a Synod February 26. in the year 964, where assisted sixteen Bishops of Italy, and some Cardinals. These Prelates, devoted to the will and pleasure of this Pope, condemn'd the Synod which had depos'd him, and elected Leo in his stead: They pronounc'd a Sentence of Deposition against Leo: anathematiz'd all those who favour'd him: declar'd his Ordinations null: conven'd those whom he had ordain'd to the Council; and after they had oblig'd them to declare in writing, that he who had ordain'd them, having no power to do it, had not conferr'd any Order upon them, they stripp'd them of their habits: they constrain'd Benedict Bishop of Porto, and Gregory Bishop of Albania, to confess they had done amiss in ordaining Leo, and they suspended them for a time: and because Sico Bishop of Ostia, who was one of those that had ordain'd him, did not appear before the Synod, they declar'd him depriv'd of his Priesthood, without any hopes of being restor'd: they declar'd all those who had contributed to the Ordination of Leo, or favour'd him, or acknowledg'd him afterwards, to be depos'd or excommunicated.

The Emperor Orho being inform'd of what pass'd at Rome, prepar'd for his return thither, to punish John according to his deserts; but God prevented his Vengeance, for that infamous wretch receiv'd a mortal Wound as he was sporting himself one night with a Lady out of Town, of which he dy'd within eight days after, on the fourteenth of May, without receiving the Sacraments. The Romans persisting in their revolt, were before hand with the Emperor, by choosing Cardinal Benedict a Deacon, and placing him upon the Papal Chair, upon his promise of never quitting it. A while after the Emperor came with his Army, sat down before Rome; and without being terrified at the Excommunication thunder'd against him by Benedict, he constrain'd the Romans, pinch'd with Famine and want of necessaries, to open the City Gates unto him on the 23 of June. As soon as he enter'd Rome, that he might do nothing irregular, he held a Synod, where he caus'd Benedict to be brought in his Pontifical Habit. He demand'd of him by Cardinal Benedict the Arch-deacon, by what Authority, and according to what Laws he had usurp'd that Dignity in the Life time of Pope Leo, whom he himself had elected, and why he had violated the Oath he had taken with the rest of the Romans, not to chuse any Pope without the Consent of the Emperor. Benedict acknowledg'd his fault, and begg'd the Emperor's Pardon, he divested himself of his Pontifical habit, and put them, together with the Pastoral Rod, into Leo's hands. Leo divested him likewise of his Cope, and declar'd him depriv'd of all Sacerdotal and Priestly Dignity, leaving him only the Order of Deacon, in consideration of the Emperor Orho; but he prohibited him from staying at Rome, and banish'd him. This Council by a solemn Decree, related by Gratian, granted to the Emperor the right of choosing a Pope, and of investing Bishops and Archbishops, and forb'd the choosing a Pope without his Consent, or ordaining a Bishop elect, till he should receive investiture from the Emperor. There is another Decree of Pope Leo, whereby he grants to the Emperor Orho all that Pepin and Charlemagne had given to the Church of Rome; but this is such a dubious Piece, as deserves no credit.

The tragical Death of Pope John XII.

Benedict the Anti-pope.

Benedict is depos'd and Leo VIII. re-established.

Orho having thus quieted the City of Rome, departed thence after the Festival of S. Peter, in order to return to Lombardy, taking along with him the Antipope Benedict as Prisoner, and carrying off with him a great many Bodies of the Saints. He lost in his March a great many of his Men by Sicknefs, kept his Christmas at Pavia, and the next year return'd into Saxony, after he had given his Instructions for the Affairs of Italy. Benedict dy'd at Ham-burgh in July 965, after he had edited the Germans by his Piety, and made it appear that he deserv'd to have been Bishop of Rome, if he had been rais'd to that Dignity according to the Canon. Leo dy'd likewise the same year. After his Death the Romans sent Deputies to the Emperor Orho, to know his pleasure concerning the Election of a Pope. Some Authors have writ, that Benedict not being dead when Leo dy'd, the Emperor Orho had a design of re-establishing him, if he had not dy'd in the very interim. Let the case be how it will, John Bishop of Narni, who was his Creature, was the man whom he design'd to advance to that Dignity; and 'tis very probable that he told his Intention to the Roman Deputies. He was thereupon elected, and plac'd in the Holy See, and is the Thirteenth of that Name. But whereas he was supported by the Emperor, and wedded to his Interests, he treated very haughtily the principal Lords of Rome, who affect'd to retain the Liberty they enjoy'd under Alberic. This was the reason why they declar'd against this Pope, and resolv'd to turn him out of his Popedom. They caus'd him to be arrested by Roger the Prefect of Rome, being assisted by Jeofry Count of Campagna, whither John was sent Prisoner. This Jeofry being kill'd some time after, and Roger being dead, the Romans being afraid of the Emperor Orho, who was preparing to come into Italy, set the Pope at liberty, and permitted him to return to Rome. However this did not hinder the Emperor from coming by great marches marches to Rome: upon his arrival he arrested the Consuls, the Prefect, and the Decemviri (a Body of ten men who were instead of a Senate, and the Grand Council of the City). He punish'd them after an exemplary manner, for he sent the Consuls and the Prefect Prisoners to Germany; and after he had caus'd the last to be shamefully dragg'd and whipp'd through the Streets of Rome, he hang'd up the Decemviri. 'Tis reported that he likewise ordered the Bodies of Josfy and Roger to be dug up, and after they were dragg'd through the City, to be cast into the Common-shore. Having by these severe Proceedings struck an Awe into the minds of the Romans, after he had kept his Christmasts in the year 966 at Rome, he went to Ravenna with Pope John, where he held a Synod about Easter, in the year 967, wherein several Regulations were made in the Ecclesiastical Discipline; of Ravenna and the Emperor restor'd to the Church of Rome the Towns and Territories, which had been granted it formerly by Pepin and Charlemagne. They likewise excommunicated Hirrol Archbishop of Salzburg, because he would officiate and wear the Pall, tho he had lost his sight; and because, being charged with several crimes besides, the Popes had prohibited him from exercising any Episcopal function, and Frederic was put in his place, who was now Confirm'd. They likewise rais'd the Bishoprick on which the Town of Magdeburgh depended, to an Archbishoprick, by the Consent and Approbation of Hatto Archbishop of Mayence, and Hildevard Bishop of Halberstat. From Ravenna the Emperor went into Tuscany, and sent for his Son Orho, in order to have him crown'd Emperor by the Pope, which Ceremony was perform'd at Rome in the Christmasts hollydays, in the year 967. After this Expedition of Orho, Pope John enjoy'd the Popedom very quietly whilst he liv'd. He rais'd the Bishoprick of Capua to an Archbishoprick, in recompence of the kind usage he met with there during his Imprisonment. He sent a Legat into Polonia, to instruct the Polonians, who desir'd to be converted. He likewise sent a Legat to the Vandals, and wrote several Letters, wherein he recommended to the Bishops the observation of the Church Discipline. 'Tis observ'd that he with a certain Ceremony blest a new Bell belonging to the Church of Saint John of the Lateran, and that this is the first instance we have of such Benedictions, on which the Title of Christning was afterwards improperly impos'd. This Pope dy'd September 6. 972. Donus alias Domnus succeeded him, who dy'd at the end of three months, without having done any thing of note. After him Benedict VI. had the Popedom: some there are who pretend, that he was in possession of it before Donus dyed. Let the case be how it will, he surviv'd him, but came to a tragical end. For Orho dying May 7. 973, a Roman Lord of great Authority, nam'd Cincius, caus'd the Pope to be seiz'd on, and committed him Prisoner to the Castle of St. Angelo, where he was strangled some few days after.

returns to Rome.

This bloody design was put in Execution by the insinuation of Franco, surnam'd Boniface, a Cardinal Deacon, whom Gerbert terms the most impious monster of Mankind, who rather deserved the name of Maleface, than that of Boniface. This man, tho all o're besmear'd with the blood of Benedict, yet seizes upon the Papal Chair in the year 974. But the Romans could not endure him long; and having found out a Bishop named Benedict, of the Family of the Alberics, they set him up in opposition to Boniface, who was forced in the year 975. to fly to Constantinople, whither he carried the things which he sacrilegiously rifled from the Vatican Church before he went off. This Benedict was put up in his stead, and enjoy'd the Popedom very peaceably till the tenth of July, in the year 984, on which day he dy'd. During these Revolutions, the Empor Orho II. was wholly taken up in Germany, against the Bohemians, and Lotharius King of France; and he was no sooner out of that Fatigue, but he was engag'd to begin a new War in Italy against the Greeks, who, with the assistance of the Saracens, designed to re-take Apulia and Calabria. At first he had some advantage over the Enemy, but afterwards he was entirely defeated and taken Prisoner: However, he found a way to make his escape, and having rally'd some Troops, he assaulted and took the City of Benevent, because the people of that Country had betray'd him. From thence he return'd to Rome, where he dy'd of grief on December 6. 983. After his death there arose a debate about the choice of an Emperor; some would have Henry Duke of Bavaria, Nephew to Orho the Great, to be crown'd: the Italians were for an Italian Emperor, nam'd Crescentius, but the Germans whose interest was strongest at Rome, caus'd Orho III. the Son of the last Orho to be crown'd Emperor, with the Consent of Pope Benedict, who did not survive Orho II. above six Months.

Peter Bishop of Pavia was put in his place, and took upon him the name of John XIV. He was Lord High-Chancellor to the Emperor Orho, and it was doubtless by the recommendation of this Prince, that he was advanc'd to this Dignity; but he did not enjoy it long; for Boniface return'd from Constantinople in the year 985, and having rous'd some of his own faction, and won the people by distributing among them the money he had rais'd, by the sale of those rich Ornaments he had carry'd from Rome, he render'd himself very powerful in Rome, seiz'd on Pope John, loaded him with Irons, shut him up in the Castle of Saint Angelo, where he starv'd him to death at the end of four months; but he himself did not survive above four months, and dy'd hated by all the World, even by those of his own faction, who, after his Death, us'd his body very contumeliously. Upon the Death of this Tyrant, Tyrant, the Clergy and Laity of Rome were left at liberty to elect a Pope. The choice fell on a Priest nam'd John, the fifteenth Pope of that name. The beginning of his Popedom was disturb'd by the fear he had that Crescentius, who having taken upon him the title of Consul, seiz'd on the Castle of S. Angelo, would not use him so kindly as he did his Predecessor. Under this apprehension he withdrew into Tuscany, from whence he sent several Deputies to Otho, praying him to come to his assistance. It was this that inclin'd the Romans, who knew by experience what they were to fear from such kind of Visits as the Emperors made, to send an honourable Embassage to the Pope, earnestly to entreat him to return, by giving him all the assurance he could desire. He hearkened to them, and was receiv'd with all the signs imaginable of submission and respect. From that time forward he enjoy'd the Holy See very peaceably till about the latter end of his Popedom, at which time he was again so disturb'd by Crescentius, that he was forced to pray the Emperor Otho to come to his assistance. This Prince immediately march'd with an Army into Italy, and stopp'd some time at Ravenna. During his stay there, John XV. dyed in May 996. The Romans were oblig'd by an order from the Emperor to elect in his place Bruno his Cousin-german, who took upon him the name of Gregory V. but Crescentius soon after outed him, and set up in his stead John Bishop of Placentia. This Action was not long unpunish'd, for Otho came immediately with his Army, and being soon Master of Rome, re-establish'd Gregory. John secur'd himself with Crescentius, in the Castle of Saint Angelo. The Emperor besieg'd it, Crescentius held it out very vigorously, and it would have been very difficult to have taken it, had not he been kill'd treacherously. The Antipope John was taken, his Eyes were scratch'd out, his Nose and his Ears were cut off, and in that posture was he led through the Streets of Rome, mounted on an Ass with his Head towards the Tail, and forc'd to say as he went along, Whoever shall dare to dispossess a Pope, let him be serv'd like me.

Gregory V.
Anti-pope

'Tis said that Gregory, to prevent the trouble which might afterwards arise in the Election of an Emperor, order'd that for the future it should be made by a certain number of German Princes, which he appointed; which was done at the instant, and by the authority of the Emperor Otho, and to favour those of his own Nation, and doubtless with the approbation of the Romans. This Pope did not survive his Election above two years and eight or nine months. Otho caus'd Gerbert to be elected in his place, who took upon him the name of Silvester II. He had been formerly Archbishop of Rheims, and was then Archbishop of Ravenna, having been oblig'd, as we shall hereafter declare, to quit his first Archbishoprick. He was a man of great Learning, and much in favour with Otho, which inclin'd him to prefer him, before all others, to that Dignity, supposing he could not find a person more worthy to fill the Chair, or in whom he could more rely. We shall have occasion to speak of the Actions of this Prelate, before he was Pope, in the History of the Churches of France during this Century; and of what he did or wrote while he was Pope, in the History of the following Century, to which it belongs, for he was not promoted to Saint Peter's Chair till about March, in the year 999.

An Account of the Roman Writers in the Tenth Century.

AFTER what has been related of the State of the Church of Rome during the Tenth Century, and of the Qualifications of those who govern'd it, 'tis no wonder that we have so few Monuments of this Church, either of Councils held at Rome, or of Letters written by the Popes.

John IX.

John the Ninth has left us four Letters, and the Acts of two Councils. The first of these Letters is directed to Harvey, Archbishop of Rheims, who sent to know of him how he should deal with the Normans, who, after they had been baptiz'd, had led lives wholly Pagan, and were transported to that degree of Extravagance, as to kill the Christians and Priests, to sacrifice to Idols, and to eat of such things as had been offered in sacrifice to them. John IX. after he had congratulated the Archbishop's happiness, in the conversion of Normandy, returns him this Answer, that the persons he mention'd being but newly converted, and not fully instructed in the Christian Religion, ought not to be dealt with according to the rigor of the Canons, but with some sort of gentleness and moderation. That however, if there were any among them, who would submit to all the severities of Penance, he ought to proceed against such according to the Canon. Agreeable to this Letter, Harvey sent to Guy, Archbishop of Roan, a Memorial containing the institutions of Councils and Popes, the Authorities of the Fathers, and the Example of Saints, concerning the Mercy and Moderation which ought to be exercis'd towards the greatest Sinners upon their sincere conversion and repentance.

The Letters of John IX.

John's

John's second Letter is directed to Stilian Bishop of Neocesarea: He congratulates his stedfastness to the Church of Rome, from whose communion nothing was able to separate him, and declares to him, that he hopes that by his Prayers he would prevail upon God to put an end to the Schism, which was of 40 years continuance. He likewise declares, 'tis his intention that the Decrees of his Predecessors against Photius and his Adherents, should continue in their full force, and exhorts him not to act contrary to them.

The third Letter of John is directed to the Clergy and Laity of Langres in France, who had petitioned his Authority for re-establishing of Argrin, their Bishop, who had been turn'd out of his Bishoprick by the Sentence of Stephen the Predecessor of Pope John. He being well informed that this Bishop had been elected canonically, that he was turn'd out upon false grounds, and that there had been never another put in his place, re-establishes him by this Letter, notwithstanding the decree of Stephen, wherein he tells them, "That he did not revoke what was done, but that he altered it for the better, for the benefit of the Church, and out of pure necessity, as his Predecessors had done upon several occasions. He wrote the very same Words at that time to Charles the Simple, and prays him to re-invest Argrin in his Bishoprick, which is his fourth Letter. We have two Letters likewise of Pope Benedict on the same subject, wherein writing to the Bishops of France, to the Clergy and Bishop of Langres, he confirm'd the sentence of his Predecessor in favour of Argrin, and very earnestly presses for his Restitution.

The Letter of Hatto
Archbishop of Mayence
to John IX.

We have likewise two Letters of the Bishops of Germany directed to this Pope. The first is writ in the name of Hatto, Archbishop of Mayence, and his Sullragans. After protestation made, that there were no Churches more submissive to the Holy See than Theirs, nor any Bishops paid greater deference to it than they did, they acquaint him that the Emperor Arnulphus being dead, his Son Lewis had been elected in his place, by the Advice of the Princes, and with the consent of the People, according to the Ancient custom of continuing the Kings of France always in the same Line. They told the Pope, that the reason why they did it without his permission, was, because all the Passes that open'd from Germany to Italy, were in the possession of the Barbarians, so that they could not send Deputies to Rome, nor could the Pope send his Legats to them: that having at last found an opportunity of conveying this Letter to his hands, they pray'd him to confirm by his Benediction the choice which they had made. After this they inform'd him of the Complaints which the Bishops of Bavaria made, upon the account that the Sclavonians, who had possess'd themselves of Moravia, and were declar'd Rebels against the French, pretended that they were out of their Jurisdiction, and would have a distinct Metropolitan of their own; and they accus'd the Bavarians of entering into Alliance with the Pagans, and partaking of the disorders which they committed. They assur'd the Pope, that this accusation was a malicious calumny, and gave him to understand, that if he should grant the Moravians a Metropolitan, and permit them to withdraw themselves from the Jurisdiction of the Bishops of Bavaria, he would be the cause of great disorders; for this would give them an occasion of rising against the powers to which they ought to be subject, and of making a new War with them. They added, that they gave him this caution with so much the more freedom, because they thought themselves oblig'd to inform him, when ever any thing happen'd to the Church of Rome which deserv'd correction, that so some speedy and necessary Remedy might be apply'd thereto.

The Letter of the Bishops of Bavaria to
John IX.

The Letter of Theotmarus, Metropolitan of Bavaria, and of the other Bishops of that Province upon the same subject is as strong. 'Tis written not only in the name of the Bishop, but also in the name of the Clergy and people of Bavaria. They remonstrated to the Pope, that having learn'd from his Predecessors, and the Holy Fathers of the Church, that the Bishop of Rome, had always taken care to maintain the Peace, Union, and Discipline of each Church, they could not tell how to believe what they had notice of every day, that there was issued out of the Apostolical See (the Origine of the Christian Religion, and the source of their sacerdotal Dignity) a Decree unjust, and contrary to the Doctrine and Authority of the Church: but that an Archbishop called John, and two Bishops who gave out that they were sent by the Pope to the Moravians, had given occasion for this Report. That these People were formerly Dependents on their Prince, and on their Bishops, who had converted them: That the Bishop of Passaw had always liberty of entering among them, and of holding Synods there, till such time as they rose up in Arms, and renounc'd Christianity. That of late indeed they boasted that they for a summ of Money had prevail'd upon the Pope to send three Bishops, who, in the Bishoprick of Passaw had undertaken such a thing, as they could not believe proceeded from the Holy Apostolical See, being so directly contrary to the Intention of the Canons; namely, to canton that Bishoprick into five parts, and to place an Archbishop and three Bishops into that Diocess, without the consent of the Archbishop and Bishop. They cited two Canons of Africa, and several passages out of the Letters of Pope Leo and Celestine, wherein this very thing was prohibited. They add, that his Predecessor had consecrated Wichinons Bishop, at the instance of the instance of the Duke of Zutphen, but withal, had sent him not into the Dutchy of Passau, but into a Conquer'd Country. They likewise complain'd, that his Legats giving credit to the Stories of the Sclavonians, accus'd them of several falsities. They likewise took notice that their Prince was descended from the House of the King of France, who were Christians, whereas the Moravians and Sclavonians were originally Pagans and Enemies to the Christian Religion. They prais'd their King Lewis, and observ'd how zealous he was for Religion and the Holy See. They refuted the Reports which the Sclavonians had rais'd of their entering into a prophane Alliance with the Huns, and of their supplying them with money to go into Italy. They said that the Sclavonians were the persons who were in confederacy with the Huns, when they pillag'd, burnt, and ravag'd all before them. That for their parts, they design'd to have oppos'd their entering Italy, and to have march'd to the Assistance of Lombardy; and that they might be in a condition to do it, they desired a Cessation of Arms from the Sclavonians, but could not obtain it. They concluded by conjuring the Pope not to give credit to the calumnies which the Sclavonians cast upon them, nor suffer such a division in their Church.

One of the two Councils held under John IX. conven'd at Rome, and the other at Ravenna. The Institutions of the former are divided into twelve Articles.

The first condemns the Proceedings of the Synods held under Stephen VI. against the Body of Formosus, which they had dug out of his Grave, cited and judg'd in a full Synod, which was an Action without all Precedent. In this Article is forbidden all such usage for the future, because a dead body cannot be cited into a Court of Judicature, since 'tis impossible he should answer the Accusations laid to his charge.

The second grants a full pardon to the Bishops, Priests, and other Clergy-men, who out of fear of being ill treated themselves, assisted at that; And Orders that for the future no such constraints shall be us'd, but that the Bishops when they convene shall be left to a perfect Liberty and Freedom.

The third imports, that since Formosus had been translated from the Bishoprick of Oppido to that of Rome, purely out of necessity, no person could make it a Precedent for the future, and it shall not be allow'd to promote any person to any higher degree of Dignity, who has been declar'd to have forfeited an inferior Order, unless he has been re-establish'd canonically; as the people had done in advancing Boniface I. who had been depos'd from the Subdeaconship, and afterwards from Priest's Orders.

The fourth restores those Clerks to their Orders, who were ordain'd by Pope Formosus, and had been depos'd in a passion.

The fifth renews the Canon of the African Council against Re-ordinations, Re-baptizations, and Translations; and prohibits the ordinary Bishops in those Churches, which were provided with Bishops, unless those who were in possession had been depos'd according to the Canon.

The sixth confirms the consecration of Lambert for Emperor, and condemns that of Berenger.

The seventh condemns the Acts of the Council of Rome against Formosus, to be burnt.

The eighth declares Sergius, Benedict, and Marinus Priests; and Leo, and Pascal, and John Deacons, to be lawfully condemn'd and separated from the Church, and anathematizes those who should acknowledge them as Clergy-men, or should endeavour to re-establish them.

The ninth excommunicates the persons, who had dug up the body of Formosus, and cast it into the Tiber.

The tenth, for the prevention of those Violences, and that scandal which sometimes happen'd in the Election of Popes, ordains that for the future, none should be made, but what were elected by an Assembly of the Bishops and Clergy, in pursuance to the Desires of the Senate and People, and in the presence of the Emperor. This Canon likewise forbids the exacting of unreasonable Oaths and Promises.

The eleventh is levell'd against an abuse very prevalent at that time, of robbing the Pope after his Decease, not only of his Patriarchal Seat, but of all others which belong'd to him in Rome, or thereabouts.

The twelfth was against another abuse which prevail'd at Rome. The secular Judges apprehended such Women as were suspected to be bad Livers, and by the severity which they us'd to them, oblig'd their Masters or their Relations to redeem them at a dear price: and afterwards those who had redeem'd them, whether Clerks, or Laicks, thought they might freely enjoy them without the fear of a Reprimand, since the publick censure was paid upon them; which was the cause of a very great disorder. The Council to put a stop thereto, granted the taking cognisance of and passing Judgment on these offences to the Bishops, with a power of citing the Refractory before the civil Magistrates.

Some time after, the Pope being come to the Emperor Lambert at Ravenna, they there conven'd a Council of 74 Bishops, who confirm'd what had been done in the Council of Rome, and approv'd of the ten following Institutions.

By the first it is ordain'd, that the Canons of the Holy Fathers, and what is contain'd in the Registers of Charlemagn and his Successors concerning Tents should be observ'd.

Afterwards the Emperor propos'd two Articles. By the first, all persons whatsoever are forbidden to arrest, or offer any injury to those who should make their Appeals to his Imperial Majesty.

By the second, the Emperor confirms the Ancient Privileges granted or confirm'd by his Predecessors to the Church of Rome.

The Pope afterwards propos'd the following Articles.

First, A confirmation of what was enacted in the Council of Rome, in favour of Formosus.

Secondly, The punishing of the Outrages committed on the Territories of the Church of Rome, which had oblig'd him to have recourse to the Emperor.

Thirdly, A Renewing of the Treaty made between the Holy See, and the Emperor Guy, Lambert's Father.

Fourthly, That the Edicts which were not conformable to the conditions of this Treaty should be repeal'd.

Fifthly, That the Estates granted by the Letters Pattents of the Prince, to the prejudice of that same Treaty, should be restored to the Church.

Sixthly, That the Emperor shall break off the Leagues which the Romans, the Lombards, and the French had made together, contrary to the Interests of the Holy See and the Empire.

Lastly, That the Emperor shall protect the Church of Rome, prevent its being disturb'd, and use his utmost care to restore to it its ordinary Revenues, which were now wasted.

These Articles being approv'd by the Bishops, the Pope recommended to them the Appointing a Fast and solemn Litanies upon their Return to their Respective Dioceses.

[The four Letters of Pope John IX. and his Acts of the two Councils are extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 483.]

John X.

of John X.

WE have three Letters of John X. which relate to the Affairs of France. The two first are about the Affair of Hilduin, whom Charles the Simple had turn'd out of the Bishoprick of Liege. This Hilduin being supported by Gisbert, who held part of Lorraine against Charles the Simple, and by Henry the Fowler, King of Germany, was ordain'd Bishop of Tongres, or Liege, by Herman Archbishop of Cologne, plac'd into the possession thereof, and rild the effects of it. Charles the Simple nominated Richerus to this Bishoprick, and caus'd him to be elected by a party of the Clergy and Laity of Liege, who were come to him to complain of the extravagances of Hilduin. This Prince thereupon wrote a Letter to all the Bishops of his Kingdom, wherein he made it appear by the Registers and Canons, that Hilduin was not fit to be a Bishop. (1.) Because he was a Rebel and Traytor against his Prince. (2.) Because he procur'd himself to be ordain'd by Faction and Violence. (3.) Because he rild the Treasures of the Church of Liege, to bestow on those who were the Instruments of his Ordination. (4.) Because he had pretended that the King had conferr'd on him the Bishoprick of Liege. (5.) Because being cited thrice by Herman, to make his appearance before the Synod, he had not complied therewith. After this remonstrance, Charles exhorts the Bishops of his Kingdom to joyn with him, in turning this Usurper out of the Bishoprick of Liege.

The Letters of Charles the Simple about Hil-duin.

'Tis very probable that he wrote likewise to Pope John X. upon this very subject, and that this gave occasion to that Pope to write to Herman, citing him, and Hilduin, and Richerus to come to Rome, that he might decide this difference; of which he inform'd Charles the Simple in another Letter. The two Competitors obey'd, and came both to Rome, where the Cause was decided in favour of Richerus, who was ordain'd Bishop of Liege by the Pope, and Hilduin was excommunicated. This contest began in the year 920, and ended in the year 922.

The third Letter of Pope John X. is directed to the Bishops of the upper Narbonnois. The Church of Narbonne which was the Metropolis of that Country, being vacant, Agins had been elected into it according to the Canon; but a powerful man named Gerard, possess'd himself of that Archbishoprick, having counterfeited Letters from the Pope. John X. disowns them in this Letter, and declares that he would not give him a grant thereof when he came to Rome, tho he was ignorant of his Treachery and Knavery: but that being since fully inform'd of the matter, he orders them not to acknowledge him any longer for Bishop, since he had been neither elected by the Clergy and Laity of that Town, nor ordain'd by the Bishops of the Province. By the same Letter he sends the Pall to Agins. [These three Letters of John X. are extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 574.]

Leo VII.

WE have likewise three Letters remaining of Leo VII.

The First is directed to Hugh, Duke of France, and Abbot of S. Martin of Tours. The Letters of Leo VII. He therein enjoins him, under the pain of excommunication, not to suffer any Women to stay, or so much as enter within the inclosure of that Monastery.

The Second is directed to Gerard, Archbishop of Lorch in Germany. He grants him the Pall, and permits him to make use of it, not only on the days of consecrating the Holy Chrism, and of the Resurrection of our Lord, but also on the Festivals of Christmas, of the Blessed Virgin, of the Apostles, of St. John the Baptist, of St. Lawrence, of St. Stephen, and of all those Saints whose Bodies lay interr'd in his Church, and on the Day of his own Consecration, and of the Dedication of the Church; during the consecration of Bishops and Priests, and the Sermons to the new Converts. He exhorts him to behave himself so, as that the Sanctity of his Morals may be suitable to the Dignity of that Ornament, and afterwards makes a very edifying Moral discourse upon that subject.

This Gerard came afterwards to Rome, and consulted with the Pope about several Questions, to which he gave an answer directed to the Bishops of France and Germany. The first of these Questions is concerning Necromancers, Magicians, and Wizards, whether they ought to be admitted to Penitence: The Pope reply'd, that the Bishops ought to bring them over to repentance by their exhortations, that so they might live like Penitents rather than dye like Criminals. He adds, that if they slighted the censures of the Bishops, they ought to be punish'd according to the Rigor of the civil Laws. The second Question is, whether the Bishops ought to say Pax Vobis, or Dominus Vobiscum: the Pope reply'd, that they ought to act conformably to the custom of the Church of Rome, wherein Pax Vobis was said on Sundays, the principal Festivals, and on the Festivals of the Saints, on which days they likewise said Gloria in excelsis; and that Dominus vobiscum was us'd in the time of Lent, the Ember-Weeks, the Vigil of Saints, and on Fast-days. The third Question is, to know whether the Lords Prayer ought to be said at the benediction of the Table: The Pope reply'd, No, because the Apostles recited it at the consecration of the Body and Blood of JESUS-CHRIST. The fourth is, whether a man might marry with his God-mother, or God-daughter: The Pope reply'd, that such Marriages were forbidden. The fifth has respect to those Priests who marry publicly: The Pope orders, that they shall be depriv'd of their Dignity, but that their Children should not be endangered thereby. The sixth is, whether Suffragan Bishops can consecrate Churches, ordain Priests, or Confirm: The Pope prohibits it, according to the tenth Canon of the Council of Antioch. The seventh is, concerning those who marry their Relations without knowing it, and who afterwards upon the knowledge thereof, confess it to the Priest: the Pope orders, that they shall be parted and enjoy'd Penance. The last is, concerning those who rob Churches: the Pope declares, that the Bishops ought to proceed against them with all the Authority God has put into their hands. At the end of this Letter he adds, that he constituted Gerard his Vicar in Germany; and exhorts the Bishops to joyn with him in reforming those abuses, which the Incursions of the Pagans, and the persecution rais'd by false Christians had introduc'd.

These Letters of Leo are writt'n in a pretty good Stile, and full of good Maxims, and confirm the Judgment which Flodoard has pass'd upon him; that he was a great Servant of God. [His Letters are extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 594.]

Agapetus II.

WE have likewise a Letter of Pope Agapetus II. wherein he adjusts the difference which A Letter of was then on foot between the Church of Lorch and that of Salzburgh, concerning Agapetus the Right of Metropolitanship, by giving the Priority to the Archbishop of Lorch, whose II. See was the most ancient Metropolitan, together with a Jurisdiction over the Eastern Pannonia, and over the Country of Avarois, of the Moravians and Sclavonians, and by granting to the Archbishop of Salzburgh, whose See was rais'd to an Archbishoprick by Leo III. the Right over the Western Pannonia.

There is another Letter of this Pope, which is a Privilege in favour of the Abby of Cluny. [Both these Letters are extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 618.]

A New Ecclesiastical History

John XII.

The Letters of John XII. WE have two Letters of John XII. One, by which he grants the Pall to Dunstan, Archbishop of Canterbury: and the other, whereby he excommunicates Issuard and his Adherents, who had seiz'd upon the Lands and Estates belonging to the Abbey of S. Simphorien in Provence. [These Letters are extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 641.]

John XIII.

The Letters of John XIII. There are four Letters of John XIII. The first is directed to the Bishops of Bretagne, whom he exhorts to acknowledge the Archbishop of Tours for their Metropolitan. The second is directed to Edgar King of England, wherein he promises him to turn out of the Church of Winchester, such Prebendaries as lead a scandalous Life, and to put some Monks into their places. The third and fourth are two privileges which he grants, one to the Monastery built by Berenger Bishop of Verdun, the other to the Monastery of S. Remy of Rheims. [These four Letters are extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 663.]

Benedict VI.

The Letter of Benedict VII. Pope Benedict VII. by his Letter to the Bishops of France and Germany, confirms the Arbitration made in favour of the Church of Lorch by his Predecessor Agapetus, and sends the Pall to Pilgrin, who was Archbishop of the place. [This Letter is extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 718. It was first publish'd by Lambeck Com. Lib. 2. C. 8. p. 645. who likewise gives us a Diploma of this Benedict concerning the privileges of the Monastery of Gembours, anno Dom. 983. which is to be met with in Lambeck's Book p. 901.]

John XV.

The Letters of John XV. They give the Title of the Letters of John XV. to a Treaty of Peace between Etheldred King of the West Saxons, and Richard Duke of Normandy; to a Monitory which this Pope sent to Arnold and Baldwin, Counts of Flanders, admonishing them to make Restitution of the Revenues belonging to the Abbey of S. Riquier; and to another such like Monitory sent to the Bishops of Picardy, exhorting them to procure the said Restitution to be made. [These three Letters are extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 731.]

Gregory V.

The Letters of Gregory V. Gregory V. restor'd to John Archbishop of Ravenna, the Church of Placentia, which had been rais'd by his Predecessor to an Archbishoprick, and put that of Monferrat under its Jurisdiction: This is the subject of the first Letter of this Pope.

By the second he grants the Pall to Gerbert, Archbishop of Ravenna, and confirms and grants several privileges to that Church.

The third letter of this Pope is, a Privilege which he grants to the Abbey of S. Ambrose of Millan.

The fourth is directed to Queen Constantia, the Wife of Robert King of France, whom he exhorts to punish those who had pillag'd and burnt the Demeans of a Bishop of France called Julian. [These four Letters are extant Concil. Tom. IX. p. 752. Baluzius publish'd another Letter of his, concerning the privileges of the Abbots of Mons major.]

This is all we have remaining of the Writings of the Popes, which were in possession of the Holy See during the Tenth Century.

Ratherius Bishop of Verona.

Ratherius Bishop of Verona. Among the famous men who flourish'd in Italy during this Century, none was of greater Repute than Ratherius, Bishop of Verona. His life has something in it extraordinary, upon the account of the many cross Accidents which he met with. He was a Monk in the Abbey of Lobbes, where he grew into great esteem for his Learning. Happy had he been, had he stay'd quietly in that peaceable Harbour, and not expos'd himself, as he did, to the Waves of a tempestuous World. But whether he was called to another Post because of his Abilities, or whether he had some other motive to incline him to it, it, he follow'd the fortune of that Hilduin, who had usurp'd the Bishoprick of Liege, Ratherius and was afterwards turn'd out of it. Hilduin retir'd into Italy, and after the Death of Bishop of Notger, Bishop of Verona, he was put into the possession of that Bishoprick by King Hugh, Verona. who promis'd to advance him to a more considerable See when occasion should offer, and then to bestow that of Verona on Ratherius. A while after that Prince having determin'd to translate Hilduin to Milan, sent Ratherius to Rome, to procure Pope John XI. to approve of this Translation. Whilst Ratherius was upon this Negotiation at Rome, King Hugh alter'd his mind, and design'd to bestow the Archbishoprick of Milan upon some other person. However, Ratherius brought a Letter from Rome, whereby the Pope approv'd of the Instalment of Hilduin, in the Archbishoprick of Milan, and granted him the Pall, and another Letter, whereby he requir'd in his own Name, and in the name of the Church of Rome, that Ratherius should be made Bishop of Verona. This displeas'd King Hugh, who had other designs in his head; however, he could not tell how to deny the Requests of the holy See, and of the Lords that were about him. He was the more inclin'd to grant it, because Ratherius being then sick, he believ'd he would quickly march off to the other world. But he recover'd of his distemper, and was ordain'd Bishop in the year 931. Hugh being very much enrag'd against him, swore that he should be never the better for his Ordination, and would oblige him to be contented with only a part of the Revenue of his Church, and to swear that he would not require any more of it during his Reign and his Son's Reign. Ratherius was not willing to submit to such an unreasonable proposition, whereupon this Prince caus'd him to be persecuted, and sought for pretences of turning him out. The War of Arnulphus furnish'd him with a favourable opportunity of doing it; for Arnulphus becoming master of Verona, Ratherius was accus'd of being one of his party; and when Hugh had retaken the Town, he sent him Prisoner to Pavia, where he was under confinement two years and an half. Being releas'd thence, he was oblig'd to go into exile, where he spent five years, after which he returns into Italy, in hopes of being restor'd to his Bishoprick. In his return he fell into the hands of Berenger, who kept him in prison three months and an half by the Advice of Manasses: afterwards he was brought to Verona, and receiv'd by Milo, Count of that City. He stay'd there two years, under the Government of that Count, who would not allow him any liberty. In the mean time Manasses, Archbishop of Arles, being translated to Milan, bethought himself of ordaining a person for the Church of Verona, and some time after Ratherius receiv'd an Order from the Emperor Lotharius to withdraw. He did very willingly, he says, in obedience to that Order, that which he would have done of himself, if he had not been forbidden by the Gospel to relinquish his Flock. He takes no notice whither he retir'd at this time, but the Abbot Fulcuin tells us, that he stay'd some time at Provence with a Nobleman's Son call'd Roesfeing, that afterwards he return'd to Lobbes, where he was very kindly receiv'd by Riquier who was still living, and that at last he was sent for by the Emperor Orbo, who plac'd him near the person of his Brother Bruno. This Bruno having been made Archbishop of Cologne, in the year 953. bestow'd on Ratherius the Bishoprick of Liege, vacant by the death of Farabert, who had succeeded Hugh, the Successor of Riquier. But bad Fortune always attended him, for he was oppos'd by a prevailing party, who turn'd him out two years after, and put up in his place one Baudrey, a person of Quality in that Country. Spite of these crosses, he had a mind to be re-entat'd in his Bishoprick of Verona, and attempted it when Orbo came into Italy a second time. At first he met with some difficulty, because the place was fill'd by Milo's Grandson, whose ordination had been ratified by the Holy See. However, he insist'd upon it, wrote very powerfully to Pope John XII. and to the Bishops of France and Germany, cited them to a Council, and prevail'd so far as to be re-establish'd in a Synod held at Pavia. But he was no sooner re-entat'd in his See, but he had new controversies between himself and his Clergy, so that he took up a Resolution to retire. About the year 966. he came into France, where he purchas'd Lands, and bought the Abbeys of S. Amand of Aumont, and of Alne, in the last of which he dy'd in the year 972.

This Bishop has compos'd several Treatises, a great part whereof hath been recovered and publish'd by Father Dachery, in the second Tome of his Spicilegium.

The first has a very fantastical Title: 'Tis entitul'd, A Treatise of the Perpendiculars of Ratherius Bishop of Verona, or the Vision of a Thief, hang'd among several others. It is dedicat'd to Hubert Bishop of Parma, and he therein reprehends that slight which the Clergy put upon the Canons. The Work is divided into two parts. In the first he complains, that he had formerly been turn'd out by the Clergy of his own Church, who could not endure that he should concern himself with the distribution of the Ecclesiastical Revenues of his own Diocess, tho it was part of the Pastors Duty; and who were not willing he should exercise himself in any other Function, than that of consecrating the Chrism, and of confirmation. Being harass'd by their continual Rebellion, he undertook in this Writing to shew that their Attempt was a manifest Contempt of the Canons: and for the proof thereof, he began by collecting those Canons which related to the Authority of Bishops, and which granted to them the Administration of the Goods belonging to their own Churches.

Ratherius
Bishop of Verona.

Afterwards he made it appear by an Argumentation, that Bishops not being only oblig'd to feed their Flocks spiritually, but also corporally, they had a right to take cognizance of the state and distribution of the Church Revenues, so as to divide them among the Clergy according to justice and equity. He shews that this equity had been perverted in the distribution which was made in the Church of Verona; because the most powerful ran away with the greatest share thereof, and enrich'd themselves at other mens costs, and that the Priests and Deacons kept all to themselves, without parting with any to the rest of the Clergy. He adds, that these latter, in whose behalf he spoke, did not much concern themselves about it, upon two accounts: First, because they were very glad they had this pretence to excuse themselves from doing the Church any service: Secondly, because they hop'd hereafter to have the same advantage. Whereas they objected, that the custom of the Church of Verona was quite contrary, he maintains that they ought not to prefer an evil custom to the Intention of the Canons, and to the Laws of the Church. It was again objected to him, that it was a reflection upon a Bishop to degrade himself so far, as to distribute amongst the Clergy, and to appoint each their Allowance of Corn, of Wine, and of Money. He reply'd to this, that it was not at all requisite that the Bishop should do this himself, but that he might do it by his Priests and Deacons, if he could find any among them whom he could trust: which way was authoris'd by the example of the Apostles, who made use of Deacons to distribute the Alms which were collected by their Order; and by the practice of S. Sixtus, who committed the distribution of the Treasures of the Church to S. Lawrence: upon which he makes this remark, that St. Lawrence speaking to S. Sixtus, told him, that he had dispos'd of his Treasures, calling the Treasures of the Church, the Treasures of the Bishops; because the Bishop is as it were the Husband of the Church. He proves the same things out of the Civil Laws, which gave the Bishops a power of treating about the privileges of the Church. He afterwards invieghs against that general contempt, which all sorts of Christians, from the meanest Laick to the Pope himself, cast upon the Canons and Laws of the Church: and he with a great deal of heat declaims against the irregular Lives of the Ecclesiasticks of his time, who made no scruple of violating the Canons openly in matters of moment, as well as in small things. He reproves very sharply, and charges them with several Disorders, which he describes in a plain and naked dress. He speaks against those persons of Quality, who were mark'd out for Church Preferments, and advanc'd thereto by all manner of contrivances, how unfit soever they were for such an employ: He calls them Thieves, false Shepherds, whose blessing turn'd to a curse; persons excommunicated by the Canons a thousand times over, who render the Authority of Bishops contemptible, and were the cause why men set so slight by their excommunications and absolutions.

In the Second part of his Treatise, Ratherius more particularly falls upon the Immodesty of the Clergy, which was at such a height in his time, that one could scarce (says he) find a man fit to be ordained a Bishop, or any Bishop fit to ordain others. He takes notice that of all the Nations in Christendom, the Italians were the persons who had the least regard for the Canons, and the least esteem for the Clergy: * The reason he gives for it is that the Ecclesiasticks of their Country were the most irregular in their Conduct, the most Immodest in their outward behaviour, and the most remiss in the discharge of their Duty. Here reckons up several horrible Stories, and charges them chiefly with an Infamous Converse with Women. In the conclusion he gives them to understand that they had still place left for Repentance, and earnestly exhorts them thereto. This Work was compos'd by Ratherius some time after he was last re-established in his Bishoprick of Verona by the Emperor Otho about the year 962.

[* This is likewise one great reason of that general Contempt which our modern Clergy labor under; and which will in all succeeding Ages cast a scorn and reproach on all such irregular Clerks of what Church or Nation soever they be.]

The Second Treatise is intituled: A Deliberative Determination made at Liege. He there alleges forty reasons, why he thought himself oblig'd neither formally nor tacitly to renounce the Government of his Flock, nor to abandon it to those who had robb'd him of it. These Reasons are strong and short, and are of the Nature of Aphorisms: In the conclusion he says that he formerly made use of them for the Bishoprick of Liege; but that the Sixteen first were likewise applicable to that of Verona. He ends with an Imprecation against those who persist to harass and disturb him. This Work was written at that time when he solicit-ed his re-establishment in the Bishoprick of Verona.

The third Treatise is intituled: Qualitatis conjectura ejusdam. He therein exposes under an unknown Name, all that his Enemies laid to his charge, and how they contrived all his actions in a wrong sense. 'Tis a continu'd piece of Gallery on their Spite and Malice; and wrote about the end of his Life, when he had taken up his resolution to retire: for he therein observes that it was forty years ago since he began to aspire to Greatness and Authority, without being ever able to attain it. Lastly, he complains that the Emperor himself had forsaken him.

The following Treatise is compos'd upon the variance which hapn'd between him and the Clergy of Verona after his re-establishment. He says that it was no new thing, and that it began at the time of his Ordination: That it proceeded, (1.) because his morals and those of his Clerks were a contradiction to each other. (2.) Because he prefer'd the observation of the the Canons to those Customs which were introduc'd by the Devil. (3.) Because he had restrain'd them from keeping company with Women, according to the Injunction of the Council of Nice. (4.) Because he would not permit the unequal distribution of the Church Goods among the Clergy. That 'tis upon this last account the quarrel between him and them is founded, as he had already demonstrated in a Letter written to Hubert, which is his first Treatise. He declaims very strongly against the general irregularity of all the Clergy, which he describes with very little Caution. He tells us the reason why he undertook to discourse of the distribution of the Goods of his Church, was, because the Clerks, who had received an order from the Emperor to leave off that familiarity which they held with women, excus'd themselves from so doing under a pretence of their Poverty. That it was upon this account he entred upon this particular, that they might all have wherewithal to live.

Ratherius
Bishop of Verona.

The Apologetick Treatise of Ratherius, is not an Apology of his whole Life, but he therein only gives an account how he had employ'd a sum of money, which the Emperor put into his hands for the re-building the Church of S. Zeno. One of his Enemies, nam'd Marcian, found fault with what he did, and would have had him distributed it amongst the Poor. Ratherius makes it appear that he ought not to do it. (1.) Because it was design'd for the rebuilding of the Church. (2.) Because there were not very many poor in his Diocese, and that several persons contributed to their subsistence: whereas on the contrary, there were very many Churches demolish'd, or at least very much out of repair, for the rebuilding of which nothing was bestow'd; that thereupon he suppos'd he might even employ a part of that Portion of the Church Goods intended for the Poor on such a good work. He tells us, that his Antagonist had ventur'd to go to Rome without his Licence, and that he had by Bribes procur'd Letters from the Pope, which excommunicated him and the Bishops his Successors, in case they should concern themselves with the distribution of the Church Goods. He says, that it was impossible but that this Excommunication would be the cause of a great deal of trouble: for if he should slight the Anathema of the holy See, he should give a very bad Precedent; but on the other hand, if he should submit to it, he should be no longer a Bishop, since he who is made a Bishop, at the same time is made an Overseer, not only in spiritual things, but also in the Temporalities of his Church, as it is ordain'd by a vast number of Canons. This Treatise was compos'd by Ratherius, after his last re-establishment.

The following was wrote much about the same time. 'Tis a discourse directed to his Clergy, wherein he upbraids them of their Rebellion. He there tells them that he had resolv'd to excommunicate them, as they had deserv'd; but he had delay'd doing it, in hopes they would have reform'd of themselves: That he tarry'd for a Commission from the Emperor, who should report to his Imperial Majesty the Reasons of both sides, upon which the Emperor should determine what he pleas'd, and he would obey his Orders.

This Treatise is followed by a Charter, whereby Ratherius institutes several Clerks into a Monastery, in the place of the Abbot and Monks, whom he was oblig'd to turn out, because of their Irregularities. He therein appoints that they should sing the Office, and that every one of them should have his share of Corn, Wine, Pulse and Money, without dividing the Lands and Vineyards.

The following Treatise is an Injunction of Ratherius against the Marriage of a Clergy-mans Son of Verona, which was perform'd on a Sunday in Lent. He declares that it is irregular, and that no Marriage ought to be celebrated during Lent, nor on Fast-days, nor on Sundays, nor on Holydays; and orders that all those who should commit such a fault, should fast for forty days; that is to say, that when others of the faithful eat at nine of the clock, they should stay till noon ere they eat: when others fast till noon, they should fast till three a clock: and when others fast till three a clock, they shall abstain from eating till night. He exhorts them likewise to be charitable to the poor during this time. He declares that he would undergo the same penance himself for being backward in opposing such an irregularity. He excommunicates such Offenders as would not submit to this Penance, and declares that God would consign them over to eternal Damnation.

After this Treatise there are five Letters of his writing. The first is directed to Martin Bishop of Ferrara, wherein he acquaints him that his Clergy laid several Crimes to his charge, particularly that of ordaining several Infants for money. He exhorts him to repent, and to behave himself better for the future.

The second Letter is writ in the name of all the Clergy of Verona, and directed to him, who was then in the Holy Apostolical See, to the Senate, and to all the faithful of the Church of Rome. It was compos'd by Ratherius some time after his Re-establishment, that is about the year 963, during the contest between John XII. and the Emperor. Upon which account in the direction of his Letter he names only in general, "The Bishop who is in the Holy Apostolical See, whoever he be. Domino Sancte Sedis Romana, quicumque est, Apostolice." In this Letter he desires to know what he ought to do with those Clergymen of Verona, who enter'd into Orders whilst that Church was govern'd by Intruders.

Ratherius
Bishop of

ders. He drew up a collection of those Canons, which declare such Ordinations to be invalid: however, he declares in the name of his Clergy, that their Bishop having refer'd the decision of the case wholly to the judgment of the holy See, they earnestly entreated that See to assist them, and deal favourably with them in that particular.

The Letter which follows precedes in date that which we have been just now speaking of; Ratherius wrote it to Pope John XII. in his own name, to desire his re-establishment. He styles the Pope the Bishop of the Chief See, i. e. of Rome, Archbishop of Archbishops, and Universal Pope, if it were lawful to give that title to any Mortal. He therein describes his own misfortunes, and the history of his own Life, and entreats the Pope to judge whether he ought to be Bishop of Verona, or no.

The fourth Letter is writ upon the same subject, and directed to the Bishops of Italy, France, and Germany; he therein implores their Assistance, and cites his Adversary to a Council, that his Cause might be determin'd there.

The fifth Letter is imperfect: 'tis a dedicatory Epistle of some Work, directed to a Bishop. These particular Letters are follow'd by a Synodical Letter, which Ratherius publish'd in a Synod which he held after his last re-establishment, in order to instruct his Clergy, who were very ignorant. He recommends to them at first the getting by heart the Apostle's Creed, that which was sung at Mass, and the Creed of S. Athanasius. He explains to them the mysteries of the principal Festivals of the year, exhorts them to say Mass, and to communicate on the Festivals and Sundays; and advertizes those who would enter into Priests Orders of what they ought to know and practice, in order to their Ordination; which he reduces to these heads: They must bring Certificates out of the Church Registers, whether they be free-born, and of the same Diocess. If they are born Slaves, they must produce their Letter of Freedom: and if they be of another Diocess, Letters of recommendation from their Bishop, call'd now Letters Demissory. They must learn by heart, and be able to explain the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and to read distinctly, and to explain the Epistle and Gospel. They must know how to administer the Sacraments of Baptism, of Penance, and of Extream Unction, and how to perform the Ceremonies for the Burial of the Dead, and for the Blessing of Holy Water. They must be well vers'd in Singing and in the Calender, and they must have a Martyrology and a Penitential. He adds, that he would not admit any into Priests Orders, unless they had spent some time in his City, either in a Monastery, or under the Discipline of some Learned Man, and were men of some Learning themselves. He informs his Clergy that the Ecclesiastical Revenues being divided into four parts, whereof only one belong'd to them, they ought not to encroach on those which belong'd to the Bishop, to the Poor, and to Building. He orders that a Regular observation should be made of Lent every day alike, except Sundays; that during Advent they should abstain from eating of Flesh, and from the celebration of Marriage. He requires that abstinence in the last case should likewise be observ'd in the Octaves of Easter and Whitsontide, in the time of publick Prayers, in the Vigils of all the Festivals, on all Fridays and Sundays; that they should fast till † None all the Passion-Week; that on Easter Eve no Priest should say Mass before ten a clock, nor solemnly Christen any before that hour. He declares that the Priests can enjoy Penance, and give Absolution for secret Sins, but for publick Offences they ought to apply themselves to the Bishop. Lastly, he would have them omit the Festivals, which fell out in Lent, except those of the Virgin Mary, the Apostles, and the Saints, whose bodies lay interr'd in their Church. There is insert'd in this Synodical Letter, a discourse containing likewise several Advices and Instructions for Ecclesiasticks, the which is attributed to Pope Leo IV. and S. Ulric. 'Tis very plain, that 'tis foreign to this subject, but 'tis difficult to determine whose piece it is.

The Treatise of Ratherius, entituled a Journal of his Travel to Rome, is a piece wherein he threatens his Clergy to go to Rome, and impeach them there, that so he might reduce them to their Duty. He tells them, that tho they might be very sensible that he design'd to go to Rome, yet they were ignorant of his design in going: That he did not go thither to put up his Prayers there; having read in the Gospel that the time is come, when Men shall no longer Worship God on this Mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, and that God being a Spirit, he ought to be worshipp'd in Spirit and in Truth, which every one might do at home in his own Closet. That he did not go thither by the Emperor's Order, having receiv'd no such orders from him, but only to send his Soldiers thither: That he did not go thither to learn any thing, since the Scripture gave him sufficient instructions what to do: but that he went thither to the Synod of Bishops which were to meet at Rome by the Emperor's Order, to know of them how he should behave himself in the Discipline of his Church, and particularly whether he might tolerate his Clergy's having Women amongst them. He observes that he could apply himself to no place so properly as to Rome, for instruction how he ought to demean himself in that case. "For, (says he) where can one be better inform'd of the discipline of the Church than at Rome? There are the most eminent Doctors in the World: 'Tis there the Heads of the Universal Church do flourish: 'Tis there they examine the constitutions of Episcopacy, and the institutions of other Ecclesiasticks: There they approve of those that ought to be received, and reject those that Ratherius ought to be rejected. Nothing that is disannull'd there, can be of force elsewhere; and nothing Bishop of which is ordered there can be abolished. Whether then can I better apply my self for the Cure of Verona. my Ignorance, than to the source and fountain-head of all Wisdom? To this Consideration he adds the Equity and Justice of the Emperour, and the personal Deserts of Pope John (viz. the Twelfth of that Name, who scarce deserved such an Encomium) and the hopes that they would call a general Council, which he wishes might prove beneficial to the Church.

He explains the question he would propose to them; namely, whether those who infring'd and openly condemn'd the Canons, ought to be endur'd in the Church: He adds, that he would not so much as mention the Injuries he had formerly suffer'd from them, nor those which they still continued to heap upon him; but that he knew not how to refrain speaking of that which pass'd in the last Synod which he held, wherein he had not the Liberty of Reforming his Clergy, and in which there was not the least notice taken of his Synodical Letter. He enlarges himself very much on the necessity there was of observing the Canons; and was extremely concern'd, upon the account that these Canons prohibited the Clergy, who had been guilty of such Crimes, from Celebrating or discharging their Ministerial Functions. For (says he) if they do not confess their Faults, they are in danger of being Damn'd; and if they do confess them, these Canons prohibit them from discharging their Functions. Since the Case stands thus, the Church would be unprovided of Ministers, since the Number of the Wicked was so great. He exhorts them to Repentance, and to recite a Prayer, which, he says, he met with in the Psalteries, wherein God is to be implored for their Salvation and Conversion, through the Intercession of the Virgin, and all the Saints. However, soasmuch as the Difficulty still remain'd; he concludes, that he goes to Rome for the removal of it.

To those Treatises of Ratherius are annex'd several Sermons. The first and most considerable is a large Instruction upon Lent. He therein blames those who did not observe it according to the Canon, either fasting only one part of that Holy time, or else breaking out into Excess; or lastly, breaking the Fast on Holy Thursday and Saturday. He takes notice, that in his time they fasted in Lent only till Noon: That on Holy Saturday Mass was not Celebrated among the Latins till about Night, and that they fasted that day till Mass was over: But that in the Greek Church they began the Solemnity of Easter at Nine of the Clock in the Morning; that their Lent was longer. After this he recommends Prayer, Alms-giving, and Repentance; and shews with what mind, and after what manner they ought to put these into Practice. Lastly, to these Instructions he adds a Dissertation against the Error of the Anthropomorphites, into which he perceiv'd several of his Priests were fallen out of Ignorance, not being capable of imagining a God unless he had a Body. By several Arguments he Demonstrates that God is a pure Spirit. He likewise refutes a foolish and superstitious Opinion, that St. Michael Sang Mass in Heaven every Monday. He concludes with Exhorting his Clergy to live regularly.

The Persons, whose Errors he had declar'd against in this Sermon, accus'd him (either out of Malice or Ignorance) of having deny'd that JESUS CHRIST had a Body, and of having condemn'd the Devotion of those who went every Monday to hear Mass in the Church of St. Michael; so that he was oblig'd to explain himself, by declaring that he never said that JESUS CHRIST, that is, the incarnate Wildom, had not Eyes, Hands, or a Body; but only that the Divine Subtance had none; and that he never said, that it was ill done in going to the Church of St. Michael to hear Mass; but that he had said, and would maintain, that it was a great piece of Folly to assert, that St. Michael Sang Mass, and Superstition to believe, that it was better to go to St. Michael's Church on Mondays, and Pray to him on that Day, than on any other day of the Week.

There are besides four Sermons on Easter-day, and three on the Ascension, which likewise contain very useful Instructions of Morality, taken for the most part out of the Holy Scriptures and the Fathers.

These are all the Works of Ratherius, which are extant in the Second Tome of the Spicilegium. There is still in the Twelfth Tome, a Letter of the same Author upon the Eucharist: He wrote it to a Bishop, who having met him in a Convocation of Bishops held by Conrad, had ask'd him, whether he had Sung Mass that Week or no? He complains, that this Question was propos'd to him, rather to try him, than out of Charity; and answers him, that perhaps it were to be wish'd, that neither of them had Celebrated it on Christmas-day; declaring wihal, that he had no good Opinion of him. He leaves the World to judge, which of the two who receiv'd the Eucharist unworthily, is most in danger of his Salvation; whether he who receiv'd it seldom, or he who receiv'd it often. He adds, that were they to read the Homilies of St. Chrysostom on the Epistle to the Hebrews, perhaps the One would abstain altogether from Celebrating, and the Other from doing it every day. From this point of Morality Ratherius passes to another of Doctrine, and ask's him, to whom he writ; whether he understands figuratively these words, which are spoken in giving the Sacrament; The Body of JESUS CHRIST preserve thee to Everlasting Life. He tells him, that if he understood them in that Sense, he was miserably blind; and assures him, that he ought to believe, that as in the Marriage of Cana in Galilee, the Change of the Water into Wine was Real, and not Figurative; so the Wine is by the Priest's Benediction made the real Blood of JESUS CHRIST, and the Bread the real Flesh, and not only in a Figure: That if the Taste and the Colour gument to prove Transubstantiation. The Fallacy of it is apparent. For the change of Water into Wine, at the Marriage of Cana in Galilee, was reckon'd a Miracle, and such as only a God could do: But the change of Bread and Wine into the real Body and Blood of Christ, by a words speaking of the Priest is more Miraculous, and shews the Priest to be endowed with a greater Power than our Saviour himself had, which I presume no Romanist, if he be in his Senses, will be so bold or so blasphemous as to assert. And as for his other Argument to elude the Evidence of our Senses, 'tis altogether as vain; unless it can be proved, that we ought to believe things which contradict our Sense and Reason, as well as those which are above them. The One we grant, the Other we deny. The Mystery of the Incarnation, of the Blessed Trinity in Unity, and the like, are above our Sense and Reason, but contradict neither. But the Mystery of the Transubstantiation, is not only above, but contradicts the joint Testimony of our Senses and Reason at once. So that I leave the World to judge which of the two Opinions is most Orthodox; whether Ours which says, that Christians do by Faith receive very Christ, in the receiving the Elements of Bread and Wine, which remain still the same; or Theirs, which says, that the Bread and Wine are chang'd into the real Body and Blood of Christ, by a Mystical Transubstantiation.]

seem to suggest the contrary, yet we are not to stick here; and that as the Mud whereof Man was form'd chang'd its Figure, tho' the Subtance still remained, so we ought to believe, that tho' the Colour and Taste of the Bread and Wine remain, yet we receive the real Flesh and the real Blood of JESUS CHRIST: That if one should ask, what is become of the Substance of the Bread and Wine? it might be answered, That the Bread perhaps vanishes after an invisible manner; or that 'tis changed into Flesh. But that the Gospel teaches us, that this Flesh and this Blood, are the Flesh and the Blood of the Body of JESUS CHRIST: That we ought not to be over-inquisitive about the rest, since 'tis a Mytery of our Faith: because being a Mytery it cannot be comprehended; and being a Mytery of Faith, we should believe it, without going about to explain it.

Foulcuin Abbot of Lobes, speaks of almost all these Works of Rathierius, which we still have, and likewise makes mention of some others which are lost; viz. a Treatise Entitled The Combat, or the Mental Meditations of one Rathierius, Bishop of Verona, and Monk of Lobes, which he writ during his first Exile, and address'd to the most Learned Prelates of his Time: A Treatise Entitled, The Frenzy, because he therein talks like a Mad-man against Baudry: Several Sermons for Holy Thursday, for the Feast of Pentecost, and for several Festivals of the Blessed Virgin, and several other pieces. The same Author adds, that Rathierius in his Exile at Cume, meeting with a Copy of the Life of St. Usinar, corrected the Solecisms thereof, and sent it to Lobes; and that afterwards being in Provence, he Compos'd a Treatise of Grammar, which he Dedicated to Roëfing's Son, under the Title of Spera-dorsum, or, A Shelter for the back side.

The Style of Rathierius is obscure and intricate, but pure enough in the Terms: his Expressions are lively and smart, and his Reasonings just enough. He was well acquainted with the Canons, had thorowly read the Latin Fathers, and very pertinently made use of their Authority and Principles. He reproves with sharpness the Vices and irregularities of his Time, without sparing any Man, and particularly levels against the corrupted Morals of Ecclesiastics, which he did not stick to detect and describe in very lively Colours, and perhaps with a little too much Picquancy.

ATTO Bishop of Verceil.

Atto Bishop of Verceil.

A TTO or Hatto Bishop of Verceil, (not the same with the Bishop of Basil, of the same Name, whom we mentioned in the foregoing Century) is more moderate and less obscure than Rathierius. He was the Son of Aldegaire, and presided over the Church of Verceil, from the Year 945. till about the Year 960. His Works were a long time conceal'd in the Vatican Library, and were at last made publick by Father Dachery, in the Eighth Tome of his Spicilegium.

The first is a Capitulary for the Clergy of his Diocess, containing an Hundred Heads or Articles, almost all extracted and copied from the Councils of Laodicea, Carthage, Toledo, and others, from the Decretals of Popes both true and false, and from the Capitulary of Theodolphus, only excepting a very few, of which perhaps he is the Author. These are the Fourth, wherein he enjoyns his Priests, Deacons, and Sub-deacons, to learn the Catholick Faith (that is, the Creed of Athanasius) by Heart: The Fifth, which is a general Admonition to the Ecclesiastics, to discharge their Duty, and lead exemplary Lives: The Tenth, whereby he ordains, that when they Consecrate the Body of JESUS CHRIST, it should be an intire Oblation, i.e. a whole Loaf unbroken; and that the Priests should celebrate the Mass Fasting. The eighteenth concerning the Institution of Catechumens, the Baptism of Mutes, and the Obligation of Godfathers, to instruct those for whom they stand Sureties. The Twentieth, whereby 'tis order'd, that in all Churches where Baptism is Administred, there should be a Deacon with the Priest, and enjoyns Priests who have no Deacons, to make speedy choice of some fit Person, and get him to be ordain'd Deacon. The Twenty ninth which enjoyns the Conferences of the Priests, on the First day of the Month, a Custom established in the Ninth Century, as appears from the Capitularys of Hincmarus and Riculphus. The Thirty ninth, which imports that for the future all Bishops should be enjoy'd not to ordain Deacons till they had oblig'd themselves to continue in Celibacy. The Seventy fifth, whereby he imposes a Penance on such, who by their slovenliness should Belch after they had receiv'd the Eucharist. The Seventy seventh, which which imports that those who shall be Baptiz'd or Confirm'd, shall abstain, during the time prescrib'd by the Bishop, from eating Meat, and for eight days from the use of Marriage, and that no Clerk should be ordain'd till he had received both these Sacraments. And the Ninetieth, which concerns the Pennances which Priests ought to impose on Publick Offenders, and after what manner they ought to present to the Bishop such Persons as will not submit to Penance.

The next Treatise is about the Persecutions and Troubles which the Ecclesiasticks suffer'd. It is divided into three Parts. The first treats of the Troubles they suffer'd in being censur'd in their Persons. The second, of those they met with in their Ordinations: and the third, of those they endur'd in their Revenues. In the beginning he takes notice that the Church will always have its Persecutors, but that they will never get the Mastery; and that the Church being founded on the Solid Rock of the Apostolical Faith, will always stand by Faith, by the Love of JESUS CHRIST, by the Use of Sacraments, and by the Observation of the Commandments of God. Happy House!
(says he) it is not overthrown by Storms, nor shatter'd by Floods, nor shaken by Winds; against which the Gates of Hell will never prevail, tho' assaulted by them continually; which yields neither to secret Temptations, nor to open Persecutions, nor to the Attacks of Malicious Spirits, nor to the Corruption of Vices and Impieties. After he had thus express'd himself in general concerning the Persecutions of the Church, he says that one of the most usual in his time, is that when the Wicked are corrected by their Superiours, they persecute those who teach them, and openly assault them, that by this means they may evade the submitting to Ecclesiastical Punishments: that to prevent this abuse, it was or-dain'd in the Canons, that Bishops should not be accus'd but by Men of unspotted Reputation, nor judg'd by any other Judges than those of their own choosing, nor Condemn'd by any other Authority than that of the Holy See, altho' it was allow'd for Metropolitans and Bishops of the Province to hear and examine their Causes. After having establish'd this Point of Civil Law on the false Decree-als of the Popes, he says that in his time, they did not only not observe these Precautions in the Accusation of Bishops; but that they would not so much as give them leave to make their own defence, and would oblige them either to bring their Brethren to swear that they are innocent, or to provide a Champion to fight for them. He shews that these two Methods of judging the Crime or Innocence of any Man, which were then in use, are both of them unjust and unlawful, especially among Ecclesiasticks. The first, because it does not follow that all those who cannot produce Witnesses to swear to their Innocence, are guilty; and that it had been always the Custom of the Church to acquit those who were not convicted of the Crimes laid to their Charge, without obliging them to bring others to swear for their Innocence. The second Method, (1.) Because it was only in use among Laicks, who did not approve of it themselves. (2.) Because it often happens that the Innocent are vanquish'd, and the Guilty crown'd as Victors. (3.) Because this was to tempt God. (4.) Because it being unlawful for Ecclesiasticks to fight themselves, 'tis altogether unjust to oblige them to find Champions in their stead, in order to be acquitted: 'Tis to put them into an incapacity of clearing themselves of one Crime, unless by committing another. He then makes this Objection to himself; But must we suffer all the Faults which Ecclesiasticks may commit to go unpunish'd? He answers, that there are some Persons who ought to suffer it; and that there are other Persons whose duty it is to reprove and punish them according to the Power invest'd in them for that purpose, and with the necessary Precautions: but that a rash Judgment should not be pass'd on those who have receiv'd a Power to judge the very Angels; That the Clergy ought not to be judg'd by Laicks, but by Bishops; and that Laicks ought not to concern themselves with punishing their Crimes, unless they are appeal'd to by the Bishop of the Diocess. And yet (says he) the quite contrary is now observable; For the Civil Authority inroads on the Ecclesiastical; and the latter is now crush'd by the former, which ought to support it. So that as in the Election of Prelates, the Will of the Prince is follow'd more than the Decrees of the Holy Fathers; even so in their Condemnation, more regard is had to gratifie their Humours, than to proceed according to Canon Law. And from hence it happens, that by the Injustice of unrighteous Judges, the Offences of the Guilty are no Bar to the holding their Dignity; and Dignity does not exempt any Person from an unjust Accusation.

The Second Part is about the Authority which Princes had usurp'd in the Ecclesiastical Ordinations of Bishops: He says that they ought to be made by those who have a Right thereto according to the Canons and Customs of the Church; but that Princes absolutely require that their Edict should be of universal force in the case: That he, whom they chose, must be receiv'd, tho' never so wicked; and that the Man, whom others shall elect, should be rejected, tho' never so deserving: That the Faults of those whom they chose, how great soever, were look'd upon as nothing: That they had no regard to the Vertues, but to the Riches, the Parentage, and the Services of the Persons: That many were ordain'd for Money, others by Recommendation, or because they are Relations, or in recompence of some Service they had done: That there are some Princes so blind, as to prefer Infants to Bishopricks, who had not so much as one of the necessary Qualifications; and who are oblig'd to be under the Care of Tutors and Masters, even while they are the Masters and Judges of a whole Diocess.

In the last Part he reprehends the Abuse which prevail'd in his time, of rifling the Revenues of the Church, when the Episcopal See was vacant by the Death, or by the Expulsion of a Bishop. He cites in the three Parts several Canons, and a great many fine Passages out of the Fathers, to back his own Arguments.

To these Treatises are annex'd Eleven Letters of Atto, Atto Bishop of Verceil.

The first is directed to a Bishop nam'd Waldon, who was at variance with his Prince. He exhorts him to submit to his Prince, and produces several Passages out of the Fathers concerning the Obedience which is due to Kings. This Waldon is doubtless the same with him whom Berenger had made Bishop of Cumæ, and who afterwards prov'd treacherous to him, and withdrew to the Emperor Otho, as Luitprand relates it.

The three following Letters are directed to the Faithful of his own Diocess: The two first are against those, who pretended to Divine and Prophecie of things to come: and the last is against those who would feast on Fridays.

The fifth is directed to a Bishop nam'd Aso. He therein shews by the Ecclesiastical and Civil Laws, that Marriage is prohibited between those who had contracted a Spiritual Affinity by Baptism, contrary to the Advice of that Bishop, who found fault that one Thierry, who had marry'd his God-father's Daughter, was divorc'd from her, and Excommunicated till such time as he made his Appearance in a Court of Judicature before the Archbishop and Bishops.

The sixth is a Letter of Gungon Deacon of the Church of Navarre, wherein he sends Atto the Copy of a Letter, pretended to be Pope Zachary's, to Theodorus Bishop of Pavia, about the Prohibition of Marriage between those who have contracted a Spiritual Affinity.

The seventh is a Letter of Amorose, a Priest of Milan, directed to Atto, whereby he gives him to understand that these sorts of Marriages were likewise prohibited in his Church; and desires he would let him know the meaning of the Titles Priestesses and Deaconesses, mention'd in Zachary's Letter.

Atto replies in the eighth Letter, That the Priestesses and Deaconesses were Widows chosen to assist the Women in the Administration of the Sacrament of Baptism. He does not approve at all their Opinion, who pretend that the Deaconesses were Abbeses: and he observes that these Titles of Priests and Deacons might likewise be given to Women.

The ninth and tenth are directed to the Ecclesiastics of his own Diocess, against those who kept company with lewd Women, with whom they maintain'd a scandalous Familiarity, and whom they kept and maintain'd out of the Revenues of the Church.

In the last, he advises the Bishops, his Brethren, upon what was necessary to be done in case the Kings of Italy, (viz. Berenger and Adalbert mention'd formerly) fearing their Enemies, should require him and the rest of the Bishops to continue Loyal to them, not only by the Oath of Allegiance, but by exacting Hostages from them. He gives them to understand that 'tis not his Opinion that they ought to give them any. (1.) Because he is not sensible, that the Holy Scriptures and the Fathers have commanded any thing else than to be loyal and subject to one's Prince, and to do one's best to preserve the publick Peace of the State, and to provide for the Safety of one's King. (2.) Because 'tis a sort of Punishment inflicted on the Innocent for another's Fault, which is contrary to Justice. (3.) Because 'tis the exposing of a Man's Life for some Temporal Interest, and the leaving it to the changeable Will of others. (4.) Because 'tis such a new and strange thing, as would make the World believe either that the Bishops of whom these Hostages were requir'd, are more disloyal than their Predecessors, or else that the Princes are more odious. Whereupon he exhorts his Brethren to pray to God for the Safety of their Princes, and to beg him to infuse into them a good Opinion of the Loyalty of the Prelates of their Kingdom, and that he would preserve them steady and constant in their Fidelity.

There is still in the Manuscript at Rome another piece of Atto, intitled The Poliptick, or The Perpendicular, which serves as a Reproof of Vice, and a Recommender of Vertue; and seventeen Sermons which 'tis impossible to Transcribe, because the Manuscript is so torn in this place, that one cannot read it. There are likewise several things wanting in the Works which are copied out; all which might be supply'd by the Manuscript which they say is in the Archives of the Church of Verceil; but the Canons of that Church would never communicate them, nor suffer them to be copied, notwithstanding the importunity of Father Dachery made by Cardinal Bona, and the Ambassador of the Duke of Savoy: whether 'tis because they knew not where this Treasure lay, or because they were minded it should be dormant there.

The Works of this Author are nothing else almost but a Collection of Citations out of Scripture, the Canons, and the Fathers, which were very applicable to his purpose. What is his own, is writ with some spirit, and after a lively and natural manner.

LUITPRAND.

LUITPRAND, or LIUTPRAND, is one of the greatest Ornaments of Italy. Tribemius assures us that he was an Italian, and descended from a Family of Pavia: Others suppose that his Family was Spanish. However it be, his Father was sent by Hugh King of Italy to the Emperor at Constantinople; and being return'd from that Embassy, he embrac'd the Monastick Life, leaving Luitprand very young. He was brought to Pavia, and made Deacon of that Church. His Relations presented him to Berenger II. to be his Secretary. He serv'd him a long time, and was sent Luitprand. Ambassador by that Prince about the Year 948. to Constantine Porphyrogenetta Emperor of the East. Some say that soon after his return he was Bishop of Cremona; but 'tis more likely that he was not advanced to that Dignity till Orbo I. had render'd himself Master of Italy: for he soon fell into disgrace with Berenger, who persecuted him and all his Family; so that he was forc'd to fly into Germany, where he compos'd his History, on the top of which he only assumes the Title of Deacon. He came into Italy with Orbo, and assist'd at the Council held at Rome in the Year 963. against John XII. in the quality of Bishop of Cremona, where he was the Emperor's Interpreter. In the Year 968 he was sent Ambassador by that Prince to Phocas Emperor of the East, and has writ himself the Relation of that Embassy, which contains very excellent Remarks on the Manners of the Grecian Emperors of that time. His History is dedicated to Raimond Bishop of Elvira in Spain. It is divided into six Books, and begins with the Reigns of Leo Emperor of the East, and of Arnulphus Emperor of the West, and ends at Luitprand's Embassy from Berenger to Constantine. But the last Book is imperfect; and instead of continuing the History, a Fragment is added, containing the History of the Expulsion of Berenger, of the Condemnation of Pope John XII. and of all that happen'd at Rome till Pope Benedict was outed of his Popedom. The Fragment seems to me to be Luitprand's, if we may judge by the style, and certainly it belongs to an Author of that time. The third Book is intitled, The Counterpoison, that is, The Revenge; because therein he undertakes to revenge himself of the base usage he had receiv'd from Berenger. This History, and the Relation of his Embassy to the Emperor Phocas, are the only genuine Pieces of Luitprand. For the Book of the Lives of the Popes from S. Peter down to Fermosus, is not writ in Luitprand's style, nor is it mention'd in Sigibert or Trithemius. Some believe that it belongs to a more ancient Author, but they are mistaken; for it ends with a passage copied out of the History of Luitprand, which is a farther evidence that this Work is none of his; But what time soever it was of, 'tis nothing else but a vile Copier of Anastasius the Librarian. As for the Chronicon which goes under the name of Luitprand, 'tis apparently a spurious Piece, which ought to be reckon'd among the Romances made in the form of ancient Chronicons by the Spaniards.

Luitprand's style is harsh and rough, but strong and vehement. He wrote his History in a paradoxical manner, but such as is not pleasant, without observing the Regular Order and Series of Times. He therein speaks particularly of the Affairs of Italy, and of that which concern'd the Empire of the West, and therein likewise inserts something of the Empire of the East, and of the History of the Popes.

His History was printed at Basil in the Year 1532. The Relation of his Embassy at Ingolstat in the Year 1600. The Book of Lives of the Popes, which is foisted on him at Mayence in the Year 1602. And all his works together, with the spurious Chronicon, were publish'd by Ferom of Higuera the Jesuit, and printed in Folio at Antwerp in the Year 1640.

CHAP. III.

An Account of the Churches of France.

IN the Tenth Century the Church of Rheims was look'd upon as the chief Church of France, The Dignity of the and its Archbishops had the principal share in the Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs of that Kingdom. The Privileges which the Popes granted to them, the great Revenues which they Church of posses'd, and which were considerably augmented at that time, the Prerogative which they Rheims. had of Consecrating Kings, the Post they held in the Assemblies both of Church and State; their Quality, their Reputation, and their Personal Merit, rais'd them to a higher pitch of Power and Dignity than any Prelate could hope for. But forasmuch as all great Dignities are envied and eagerly thirsted after, and the higher the Post is, the more 'tis expos'd to storms and dangers; 'tis not at all to be wonder'd at that there were so many Artifices us'd to come into this Archbishoprick, so many heats to keep in it, and if those that had the possession of it, have been subject to so many Scandals, as the ensuing History will make appear. But because the Ecclesiastical Affairs of the Churches of France, and particularly of that of Rheims, bear so near a Relation to those of the State; and because the Changes of Kings, and the Revolutions of the Government have likewise produc'd very many Alterations in the Affairs of the Church: 'Tis necessary to begin with giving you a Scheme of the State of the French Monarchy, and of the Succession of the Kings who govern'd France during the Tenth Century.

After

The State of France after the Death of Charles the Gros.
[* Other Historians say he was Son to Lewis the Bald.]
The Reign of Charles the Simple.

After the Death of Charles the Gros, which happen'd in the Year 888. * his Son Charles surnam'd the Simple, being still in his Minority, the Neustrians met at Campeign, elected Odo or Eudes, Count of Paris, and Duke of France, to govern the Kingdom, gave him the Quality of King, and caus'd him to be crown'd by Gautier Archbishop of Sens. On the other side, Radulphus the Son of Conrad, made himself Master of the Country between Montjou and the Appenine Mountains; that is, Savoy and Steuzeerland, and caus'd himself to be crown'd King of Lower Burgundy. Lewis the Son of Borzon, seiz'd on the Country which lies from Lions to the Sea, between the Rhone and the Alpes, and went under the name of King of Arles or Provence, and caus'd that Kingdom to be conferr'd upon him by a Council held at Valence on purpose in the Year 890. Thus France was divided into three Kingdoms: The Kingdom of France, which comprehended Normandy, Aquitain, and the Dutchy of Burgundy; the Kingdom of Arles; and the Kingdom of Lower Burgundy. Eudes was not long in quiet possession of a Kingdom to which he could pretend no Right. Charles the Simple had his Partisans, who sent for him from England, whither his Mother had carry'd him, and caus'd him to be Crown'd at Rheims in the Year 893. He immediately enter'd into possession of a part of the Kingdom, and rais'd a Civil War between the two Parties; which within a while was appeas'd, and wholly ended by the Death of Eudes, which happen'd on the Thirtieth of January 898. By his Death Charles the Simple took possession of the Kingdom of France, not of that of Arles, nor of Lower Burgundy. In the Year 918. he added Lorrain to his Dominions, having conquer'd it from Henry the Falconer, after the Death of Conrad. But the Malecontents among the French Nobles, took an occasion from this War, to cut him out new Work, and elected Robert the Brother of Eudes King, who was Crown'd at Rheims on the Twentieth of June in the Year 922. so that Charles was forc'd to quit Lorrain to come and fight Robert. This last was kill'd in Battle, but his Party elect-ed in his room his Brother-in-Law Radulphus II. Duke of Burgundy. Charles the Simple struck up on Alliance with Henry the Faulconer, to whom he remitted Lorrain, upon condition that he should aid him; but he was treacherously taken in the Year 923. by Hebert Count of Vermandois, who kept him Prisoner in Thierry Castle. The Queen his Wife withdrew into England with her Son Lewis. From that time Charles the Simple was always in the Power of Hebert, or Hugh le Blanc Count of Paris, Robert's Son, who kept him Prisoner till his Death, which happen'd in the Year 929. Upon his Death Radulphus was left in quiet possession of the Kingdom to the Year 936. at which time he dy'd without Issue, leaving the Dukedom of Burgundy to his Brother Hugh the Black, and the chief Authority of France to Hugh the White, Count of Paris and Orleans, and Duke of France, his Brother-in-Law. However, this Man had not the Heart to take the Crown upon him, being afraid of Hebert Count of Vermandois, and Gisalbert Duke of Lorrain; and he thought it more advisable to send for the Son of Charles the Simple out of England, who upon that account was call'd Lewis d'Outremere. He was receiv'd without any Opposition, and Crown'd at Laon in the Year 936. Lewis during his Reign had great Contests with the Counts Hebert and Hugh, and was sometimes at War, sometimes at Peace with Orto King of Germany. But at last, having accommodated Matters with Hugh, he dy'd peaceably in the Year 954. leaving the Title of King to his Son Lotharius, an Infant of Fourteen or Fifteen years of Age, and the Administration of the Government to Hugh, to whom the young King granted the Dutchy of Burgundy and Aquitain. Hugh dyed in the Year 956. and left four Children, of whom the Eldest, nam'd Hugh-Capet, was declar'd Duke of France in the Year 959. by Lotharius, who gave him likewise Poitou. Lotharius reign'd peaceably Three and Thirty years, having after the Death of Hugh the White, reassum'd the Royal Authority. But this was lost in the hands of his Son Lewis, surnam'd the Fainthearted; who surviv'd his Father only sixteen Months under the Tutelage of Hugh-Capet, and was the last King of the Carolignian Line. For after his Death Hugh-Capet was Elect-ed King by the Nobles of Nayon, about the end of May in the Year 987. and afterwards Crown'd at Rheims, without any regard had to Charles Duke of Lorrain, Brother to Lotharius, whom they hated, because he had taken an Oath of Allegiance to the King of Germany for his Dutchy of Lorrain. The next year Hugh-Capet caus'd his Son Robert also to be Crown'd. However Duke Charles was not altogether out of hopes of re-investing himself in the States of his Ancestors, and having seiz'd on Laon and Rheims, he made War for some time with Hugh; but was taken in the Year 991. in the City of Laon, and carried Prisoner to Senlis, and from thence to Orleans, where he was shut up in a Tower, wherein he dy'd three years after. And thus the Kingdom of France was transferr'd from the Carolignian Line to that of Hugh-Capet, who liv'd till the Year 996. and left his Son Robert in quiet possession of the Kingdom, which this good King govern'd till the Three and thirtieth year of the ensuing Century. And thus much may suffice for what concerns the Political Estate of the Kingdom of France: let us now proceed to the Ecclesiastical Affairs, wherein the Archbishops of Rheims had a principal share.

FULCUS Arch-Bishop of Rheims.

FULCUS succeeded Hincmarus in the Arch-bishoprick of Rheims, in the Year 882. He was a Person of Quality, who had been a long time at Court. Immediately he sent to Pope Marinus his Confession of the Faith, according to Custom, and receiv'd the Pall from him. In a Second Letter he demanded a Confirmation of the Privileges granted by the Popes to his Predecessors, and made Complaints to him of the Estate bequeath'd by his Brother Rampo, for the building of a Monastery, of which Ermenfroy, who had married his Widdow, had taken Possession. Marinus wrote on this last point to to Gerard Arch-bishop of Sens, in whose Diocess this Monastery was; and to John Arch-bishop of Roan, to whose Diocess Ermenfroy did belong, giving him orders to enjoin him to relinquish the Estate which he had so unjustly possess'd himself of; and if he would not do it, to make use of Canonical Punishments against him. Fulcus wrote likewise to Pope Adrian the Successor of Marinus, to Congratulate his Advancement to the Popedom; and at the same time sent him some Copies of the Privileges granted by the Popes, Leo, Benedict, and Nicholas to the Church of Rheims, to which he desires him to grant a Confirmation. In the same Letter he intreats him to send a Commission to the Arch-bishops of Sens and Roan, to adjust the business of the Monastery, which Ermenfroy had taken possession of, and writes in favour of Frotarius Arch-bishop of Bruges, who was accus'd by a Monk of his Diocess; assuring the Pope, that he had been Elected by the Bishops of his Province, by the Clergy and Laity of his own Diocess, and Confirm'd by Pope Marinus. He sent another very submissive Letter to Pope Stephen, wherein he thanks him for the Honour he did him in writing to him, and in treating with him as a Friend and Brother; Titles which he could not pretend to, thinking it an Honour to be his Servant and Subject. He assures him, that if he were not surrounded, and as it were Besieged by the Barbarians, who were not above five Leagues off his City, and who Beleagu'd Paris; he would have undertaken a Journey to Rome. He informs him of the part he bore in the Snares which were laid against him, and makes his acknowledgments for the favour shew'd by the Pope to his Son Guy, who was the Arch-Bishop's Kinsman. He promises Obedience to the Pope, and exalts the Dignity of the Church of Rheims, which he pretends had been Founded by Saint Sixtus, who was sent by S. Peter, and was the chief of the whole Kingdom. He adds, that Pope Hormisdas had established the Arch-Bishop of Rheims, his Vicar in Gaul; and desires him to confirm the Privileges granted by his Predecessors. He presses him to order Ermenfroy to be Excommunicated by the Arch-Bishops of Sens and Roan; and intreats him to write to King Charles, to oblige him to restore in full to the Church of Rheims the Revenues which belong'd to it.

The Pope answer'd Fulcus, that he was glad to see he had such good thoughts of the Holy See; he assur'd him, that he look'd upon Guy as his own Child; that he was deeply affected with the Desolation of France, caus'd by the Barbarians; that he pray'd God to deliver that Kingdom out of all its Trouble: And Lastly, he acquainted him, that he had sent Letters according to his desire, to the Arch-bishops of Sens and Roan.

Fulcus wrote a Second Letter to this Pope, wherein he renews his complaints against Ermenfroy, who would not obey the Injunctions of the Two Arch-Bishops, and intreats the Pope to cause him to be Excommunicated. At the same time he asks his Advice, whether it be lawful to ordain Bishops every Festival day.

The Pope sent him afterwards several Letters.

The first is a Letter of Consolation, for the Miseries he under-went.

The Second is a Recommendatory Letter, in behalf of a Man who was oppress'd by his Children and Relations.

The Third is directed to the Bishops of France against Frotarius, who had seized upon the See of Bruges, after he had been turn'd out of the Bishopricks of Bordeaux and Poitiers. He enjoins him under the Penalty of Excommunication, to relinquish Bruges, and return to Bordeaux.

The Fourth is in favour of Teutboldus, whom he had ordain'd Bishop of Langres. He therein tells him, that after the Death of Isaac Bishop of that Church, Aurelian Arch-Bishop of Lions had ordain'd in his room a Monk call'd Egilon, without being Elected by either Clergy or Laity, who had Elected Teutboldus, and desir'd the Pope that he might be Consecrated; that being willing to maintain the Privileges of all Churches, he had sent to Aurelian to ordain Teutboldus, provided it appear'd to him, that he had been unanimously elected by Clergy and Laity: That he had sent a Bishop to be upon the spot, to see that this Order were duly put in Execution; but that Aurelian had put a trick upon him, by sending him before to Langres, with a promise that he would be there soon after him; and that instead of being so good as his word, he suffer'd the Bishop to wait for him to no purpose: That the Clergy and Laity had sent an Act of the Election to Rome, and pray'd that Teutboldus might be Consecrated; that he had writ again to Aurelian, requiring him to ordain him; but that instead of obeying his Order, he made it his Business to bring the other into Possession; Lastly, That upon the fresh Instances of the Clergy and Laity of Langres, he had ordained Teutboldus.

du; he enjoys Fulcus to put him into Possession. Fulcus reply'd to him, that he was very willing to put his orders touching Teutboldus into Execution, but that he had been obliged to defer it upon the Instance of King Eudes, who would send his Ambassadors to him, to know his Resolution. He adds, that the Bishops were very glad at his declaring, that he was willing to maintain the Rights and Privileges of Bishops in their full force. He desires to know of him, whether it be lawful for any of his Suffragans to execute the Orders of the King, or of any other without his leave, or to undertake any thing contrary to his Prohibitions.

Other Writings of Stephen in favour of
of Rheims.

The same Pope confirms the Privileges of the Church of Rheims and prohibits all Persons whatsoever from seizing or detaining any of the Revenues which belong to it. He likewise wrote to Fulcus about the difference which happen'd between Herman Arch-Bishop of Cologne, and Aldegairus Bishop of Hamburg and Breme. They had both written to the Holy See upon that Subject, and had been cited thither. Aldegairus came to Rome accordingly, but Herman did not appear. However, the Pope being unwilling to determine a matter of that Consequence, without hearing both Parties, he orders Fulcus to call a Synod in his Name at Worms, with the Bishops his Suffragans and Neighbours; and to cite thither Herman and Aldegairus, with the Arch-bishop of Mayence and his Suffragans, to examine strictly the Pretensions of both Parties. He invites him to come to Rome upon that Affair and others, or at least to send thither some able Person, with the Parties concern'd, that so he might be fully inform'd of all things.

The Letters of Fulcus to Formosus.

The Pope being dead before this Affair was adjust'd, Fulcus wrote about it to his Successor Formosus, praying that he would continue him in the same Commission. He thank'd him at the same time for the Complements he had sent him by the Abbess Bertha; and asks his advice, what ought to be done against one who had a mind to seize on the Estate which his Brother-in-Law Count Everard, had bequeath'd to a Monastery, which he had built in Honour of Saint Calixtus, whose Body he had brought from Rome. He withal declares to him, that he was very sorry to hear that there were some Persons, who gave disturbance to the Church of Rome, and he was ready to stand in its defence. In the Conclusion he gives the Pope to understand, that several Bishops of France requir'd the Pall, which they ought by no means to have, since it would cause them to despise their Metropolitans; and that he ought to take special care about it, because this abuse might be the Cause of a great deal of trouble in the Church of France.

The Letter of Formo-sus to Ful-
cus.

Pope Formosus return'd him this Answer, that he was oblig'd to him for the Concern he shew'd at the unhappy State of the Church of Rome: That the Eastern Churches were likewise disturb'd by ancient Heresies and new Schisms: That the Bishops of Africa had sent their Deputies to Rome, for the adjusting and making up a Schism, which was then on foot between the Bishops of that Country; and that there were several other Deputies at Rome, from divers parts, who requir'd Answers upon several distinct Subjects: That he had resolv'd to hold a Synod the first of March, to which he invited him. He had already invited him to another Synod by a former Letter, whereby he confirm'd the Privileges granted to the Church of Rheims, and prohibited any seizure to be made of the Revenues which belong'd to it. By the same Letter he likewise acquainted him of the Coronation of Guy perform'd by him that same Year.

By another Letter of the Year ensuing, he confirm'd the Donations granted to the Church of Rheims, and gave Fulcus to understand, that he had Crown'd Lambert the Son of Guy Emperor. He likewise reprimands several Laicks who would not be subject to their Arch-Bishop.

Formosus wrote likewise several Letters in favour of Charles the Simple, against Eudes. He sent for Fulcus to Rome upon that Subject, desiring all Acts of Hostility might cease, till his return. Fulcus excus'd himself from this Journey, and tells the Pope that he ought to write to Arnulphus King of Germany, requiring him to assist Charles, and to threaten Eudes with Excommunication if he continued to ravage France. The Pope wrote to each of them; but it could not hinder Eudes from carrying on his Design: And Arnulphus was so far from favouring Charles, that he entred the Kingdom, laid Siege to the City of Rheims; ravag'd the Country, and particularly rifl'd the Revenues which belong'd to the Church. Fulcus made his complaints of this to the Pope. A while after he likewise wrote another Letter to him, wherein he takes Notice, that it was expedient that Lambert should enter into an Alliance with King Charles, and that the Pope should write to Eudes to inform him, that it was highly reasonable, that Charles should enjoy part of his Father's Dominions. At the same time he advises him, about three Persons who lay under perpetual Excommunication, because of the ill usage they shew'd to Teutboldus Bishop of Langres, and to Gautier Arch-Bishop of Sens; viz. whether he might admit them to Penance: and about Heriland Bishop of Teroüane, turn'd out of his Diocess by the Normans; whether he might give him another Bishoprick, and place in his stead a Person who might be more agreeable to the People of the place, and who could speak the Language of the Country. The Pope return'd him this Answer, that he was oblig'd to him for what he wrote with Relation to Lambert; that the three Persons he spoke of, had been condemn'd to a perpetual Excommunication, for having put out the Eyes of Teutboldus, and for having cast Gautier into Prison, and that they ought still to lye under that Sentence.

The Letter of Fulcus to Pope Formosus.

The Letter of Formo-sus to Ful-
cus.

The last Letter which Pope Formosus wrote to Fulcus, related to Berchairus, whom the Laity and Clergy of Chalons had elected their Bishop by the Consent of King Eudes. He complains of the unwillingness of Fulcus to Consecrate him; and that after the Decease of the late Bishop, he had by way of Prevention, caus'd this Bishoprick to be govern'd by Heriland Bishop of Teroüane, who had had been turn'd out of his own Diocess: that afterwards he had ordain'd Mancian, a Man of a profligate Life; and that Bercharius intending to go to Rome, had been Arrested by Conrad the Creature of Fulcus, and sent into Banishment. For this he cites the Archbishop to Rome, with Mancian, Conrad, and several other Bishops.

Fulcus return'd no reply to Formosus, but wrote a Letter of Compliment to Stephen VI. his Successor. However this did not prevent that Pope from citing him to a Synod, to be holden the latter end of September. He excus'd his going thither, and sent several of his Clergy in his room. He gave the Pope to understand, that he wonder'd at the hard Expressions of his Letter; and the more because he had been always very submissive to the Holy See, and had received nothing from it but Kindnesses and Civilities. He imputes this harshness of the Pope to the false Reports he had receiv'd of him. To justify himself, he shews how he had been Educated from his Childhood, in all that an Ecclesiastick ought to know: How afterwards he was call'd to Court by King Charles the Son of Lewis, and continued in it till the Reign of Charlemagne; that he had been elected Archbishop of Rheims by the Bishops of the Province, and by the Clergy and Laity of that City; and how industrious he had been in promoting the interest of that Church. Lastly he adds, that if King Eudes would give him leave, he would go to Rome when the way was open, for he was then enclosed by Zuentsbold the Son of Arnulphus, who had basely us'd and rifled his Church. In fine, he pray'd the Pope to free him from that Tyranny, and not to oblige him to relinquish his Church, at a time wherein his presence was so necessary. These are all the Letters of Fulcus to the Popes, and of the Popes to that Archbishop, of which Flodoard gives us an Extract, in the four first Chapters of the fourth Book of his History.

In his fifth Chapter the same Author mentions the Letters of this Archbishop, directed to the Kings and Princes.

The first is to Charles the Gross, the Son of Lewis of Germany, after the Death of Charles the Bald, wherein he pray'd him to protect France against the Normans, who had ravaged the Country, and laid Siege to the principal Towns thereof.

In a second Letter to the same Emperor, he intreats that he would procure the Pall for him from the Pope, and the Confirmation of the Privileges granted to the Church of Rheims.

The third is directed to Arnulphus King of Germany, wherein he gives him the reason why he had anointed Charles the Simple King. He gives him to understand, that upon the Death of Charles the Bald, the French immediately made their Application to him, to be accepted under his Protection: but that having received no Protection nor Countenance from him, they were obliged to choose Charles for their King, who was the only Man next him of the Royal Blood, and whose Brothers and Predecessors had been Kings: That the reason why they did not choose him sooner, was, because being too young he was not capable of governing the Kingdom, especially at a time when the Normans were ready to rifle and pillage the whole Kingdom: and that they had done it at last without consulting Arnulphus in the Case, according to the Custom of France, which always was, when one King was dead, to put up in his place one of the Royal Family, without consulting any Foreign Power. He likewise answer'd that which they accus'd him of, viz. that he had never Crown'd Charles the Simple, but that he might with the more ease bestow the Kingdom on Guy; and makes it appear, that it was only a Calumny invented by his Enemies. And whereas some were pleas'd to raise a Report, that Charles was not the Son of Lewis the Lisper; he says, that the very sight of him would be a sufficient Evidence to convince them of the contrary; because any one might easily discern in him, the very Air and Features of his Father. Lastly, he intreats Arnulphus to do Justice to this innocent King, and his own Kinsman: To consider that the Kingdom of France had always been an Hereditary Kingdom; and to believe that the French had no other design, than that Charles should be lead by his Counsels, and bound to him in a firm Bond of Amity and Alliance.

In the fourth Letter which is likewise directed to Arnulphus, he assures him of the Fidelity wherein King Charles and himself had observed the Treaties made with that Prince. He informs him, that this King being minded to Attack Eudes, had writ to Guy and the Pope, to engage them on his side.

The fifth was written to King Eudes. He intreats him to grant the Church of Laon liberty to choose a Bishop, in the room of Didon lately Deceas'd.

The sixth was directed to Charles, whom he very sharply reproves for his intention of making a League with the Normans, and of making use of them to reinstate him in his Kingdom. He remonstrates to him, that it was a piece of Idolatry, thus to enter into the Alliance and Interest of Pagans: That the Kings his Predecessors were Servants of the true God; and that he had renounced him, by joyning with Infidels; that this was not the way to reascend the Throne of his Ancestors, but rather to loose it, by pulling on his Head the Wrath of an angry God: That those who gave him this advice were his Enemies, and that if he followed it, he knew not how to continue Loyal to him, nor how to prevent himself from drawing off as many as he could from obeying him, but that he must be forced to Excommunicate him, and condemn him with a perpetual Anathema. He adds, that he wrote these things with extreme grief and concern, because it was his desire, that he might be had in honour both with GOD and Man, and that he might regain his Throne by the help of the Lord, and not by the Assistance of the Devil; because the Kingdoms which God bestows are firm and lasting; whereas those which are acquir'd by Injustice and Rapine are uncertain, and of a short standing.

Fulcus
Archbishop of Rheims.

The seventh was directed to the Emperour Lambert, whom he Congratulated upon the Popes Declaration, that he would look upon him as his own Son. He exhorts him always to bear a due respect and honour to the Holy See, because that was the only way of securing himself an Interest in Heaven, and of obtaining a superiority over all his Enemies. He wish'd him to remember that his Uncle Lambert, who had been an Enemy to the Holy See, Perish'd miserably; and he intreated him to intercede with the Pope for their Kinman Rampon, who had been Excommunicated.

The eighth was Dedicated to Albrade, or Alfrede, the King of Great Britain, whom he Congratulates for the choice he made of a worthy Person to fill the See of Canterbury; because he heard that in his Country they advanced such a sort of Men, as permitted the Bishops and Priests to have Women among them, and the Laicks to Marry their Kindred, as well as those Virgins who were Dedicated to God's Service; and to have a Wife and a Concubine at the same time.

The ninth was directed to Ricbilda, a Queen or Empress, whom he inform'd of the ill Reports which went about of her Conduct, and exhorts her to lead a Life more conformable to Christianity, and to her state of Widowhood, which she had devoted to God.

In the sixth Chapter Floard makes mention of the Letters which Fulcus sent to several Bishops.

The Letters of Fulcus to the Bishops. In the first directed to Frotharius, Archbishop of Bordeaux, he desires that Archbishop to preserve the Revenues of the Church of Rheims, which were in his Diocess, and to Excommunicate such as should seize on them.

The Second is Directed to Reftaing, Archbishop of Arles, on the same Subject.

In the third directed to Herman Archbishop of Colegn, he declares that he had a great desire to hold a Conference with him, and the Bishops of his Province, but that he was prevented by the Incurfions of the Normans: And he prays him to do him Justice with relation to some of the Revenues belonging to his Church, of which several Persons had made a Schism; the Cognizance of this Affair having been referr'd to Wilbert his Predecessor, and now laid before him.

The fourth written to the same Person, relates likewise to the Interest of the Church of Rheims, for some Revenues which were Embezell'd from it.

The fifth is directed to Gontier, Archbishop of Sens, about the business of the Abbess Hildegarda. He intreats this Archbishop not to be so False as he had been, to the Assignments made upon this Account, and to do right to that Abbess.

In the sixth he Congratulates Pleonicus a Bishop of England, for his endeavouring to root out those Disorders of which he had made mention in his Letter to Alfrede, and he exhorts him to continue in his Design.

The Seventh was directed to John a Roman Prelate, whom he put in mind of some Ancient Tokens of Friendship, which he had shewn to him; and intreats him to assure Pope Stephen of his Submission to him, and begs he would stand his Friend in that Affair.

The Eighth, Ninth and Tenth were directed to Dodilon, Bishop of Cambray. By the two first he call him to the Synod, which was to meet about determining the business between Hildegarda and Hermingard: and by the last wrote in his own Name, and in the Name of the Bishops his Suffragans, he enjoyns him to compel Count Baldwin to make due Restitutions of the Church Revenues which he had seiz'd on, to send him the Letter which they wrote to him upon the same Subject; and to go and meet with Bishop Herilon at Arras.

The eleventh was writ to this Herilon, upon the account of Dodilon's having caus'd the Body of Saint Calixtus to be taken away; which had been bequeathed by Radulphus to the Church of Rheims whither it was brought.

The Twelfth was directed to Didon Bishop of Laon, whom he reproves for having refused the Sacraments of Penance and the Eucharist, at the point of Death, to one Walcher, who was Executed for High Treason; and for denying him Burial, and forbidding any Prayers to be made for him.

In the Thirteenth he desires Peter a Roman Prelate to obtain the favour of Pope Formosus, that he might put Heriland, turn'd out of his own Diocess of Teroiane, into Possession of the Bishoprick of Chalons, putting him in mind of what had been done in the Case of Aetardus Bishop of Nants, who had been Translated to Tours.

The Fourteenth was directed to Honoratus Bishop of Beauvais: He complains, that this Bishop was his open and profess'd Enemy; Exhorts him to a Reconciliation, and gives him to understand, that he was accus'd of Rapines: He takes Notice to him of the Excommunication of one nam'd Aldramus, which the Bishop of Beauvais had thunder'd out, and which he said that the Archbishop of Rheims was bound to put in execution: As to this point he tells him, that he was always ready to follow the advice and opinion of other Bishops, but that he knew of no Power which the Church of Beauvais had to command the Church of Rheims; and that this Excommunication was not grounded on a Lawful and Canonical Reason, but only because this Man had left the Interest of Eudes, and embraced that of King Charles. He likewise Summoned him to appear at the Ordination of the Bishops of Senlis and Chalons, and gave him to understand that Pope Stephen had order'd him to send him to Ravenna.

The Fifteenth is a Letter of Compliment to Teutbaldus, Bishop of Langres.

The Sixteenth was directed to Radulphus Successor to Didon Bishop of Laon, whose Promotion to that Dignity he Congratulates, and advertis'd him that he had too rashly Excommunicated one of

of his Diocessans, hinting withal that he gave him his advice as a Friend to a Friend, not being willing to make use of that Authority and Priviledge which the Church of Rheims had from all Antiquity, of succouring all those who made their Application to it, and thought themselves injur'd by their Bishops.

We might likewise to these Letters joyn that of Mancion Bishop of Chalons, directed to Fulcus, and publish'd by Father Mabillon in the third Tome of his Collections, wherein he asks the Archbishop's Advice, how he ought to behave himself with relation to a Priest who was solemnly betrothed to a Woman, and would marry her publickly.

In the seventh Chapter Flodoard speaks of several Letters of Fulcus, directed to Abbots, and to Persons of Note.

The first was directed to an Abbot called Stephen, whom he comforts upon his having been deprived of a Bishoprick to which he had been elected.

In the second he reprov'd Baldwin Count of Flanders, for the many Injuries he offer'd to the Churches of his Country: and among others for having caus'd a Priest to be whip'd; for having turn'd out several Parochial Priests out of their Churches, in order to make room for others of his own choosing; for having unjustly seiz'd upon an Estate which the King had bestow'd on the Church of Noyon; for having seiz'd upon a Monastery, &c. he threaten'd to Excommunicate him, in case he did not forthwith make Restitution, and leave off his Cruelties to the Church.

The third is directed to the Clergy and Laity of Senlis upon the Election of a Bishop.

The fourth to the Clergy of Laon upon the same Subject.

The fifth to the Monks of Corby, whom he severely reproves for their having cruelly turn'd out their Abbot.

These are all the Letters of Fulcus, which are mention'd in Flodoard; the very Extracts of which shew us, that this Archbishop wrote with a great deal of Strength and Authority; That he was zealous for the welfare of the Church, for the Dignity of Bishops, and particularly for the Rights and Prerogatives of the Church of Rheims. He was assassinated by Winemare and others of Count Baldwin's Creatures in the Year 900, which Count was incens'd against him for having taken away from him the Abby of S. Wast, and the Castle of Arras.

The Letters of Fulcus to the Abbots.

HERVEUS Archbishop of Rheims.

HIS Successor was one HERVEUS, a young Lord belonging to Court, and Nephew to Count Hughbold. He was ordain'd by the unanimous consent of all the Bishops of the Province. Immediately after his Ordination he soon render'd himself capable of governing his Diocess, and gain'd the Esteem and Love of all the World by his Charity to the Poor, by his sweet Temper, by his good Nature, and by the Zeal he express'd for the Welfare of the Church, and for Ecclesiastical Discipline. He held several Provincial Councils, wherein he discours'd very usefully of Religion, and of the Peace both of Church and State, and of the Conversion of the Normans, who about that time embrac'd the Christian Faith. It was for their sakes that he sent to Guy Archbishop of Roan a Letter containing three and twenty Articles extracted out of the Canons and Letters of the Popes, about the manner of treating those, who after they had been baptiz'd, had apostatiz'd, and afterward's return'd to the Church. In the Year 909. he held a Council at Trosly (a Village near Soissons) at which assisted the Archbishop of Roan, with the Bishops of Laon, Beauvais, Noyon, Chalons, Soissons, Cambrai, Meaux, Senlis, Terouane and Amiens; in which, after he had discours'd at large of the Miseries under which France groan'd, which he imputed to the Sins both of the Laity and the Clergy, he gave them very fine and large Instructions, grounded on several Passages of the Fathers and Canons of Councils. 1. Concerning the Honour and Respect due to Churches and to Ecclesiasticks. 2. Concerning the Duty and Allegiance which Bishops and Ecclesiasticks ow'd to their King, and concerning the Duties and Qualifications of a Prince. 3. Concerning the Reformation of those Abuses which were crept into the Monastick Life, and particularly concerning the Abbies which were possess'd by Laicks. It was ordain'd that Abbots should be Religious Persons, well skill'd in the Regular Discipline; and that the Monks and Religious should live according to their Profession and Rule, praying for the Welfare of Kings, for the Peace of the Kingdom, and for the Tranquility of the Church, without concerning themselves with Secular Affairs, without hunting after the Poms of this World, and without inroaching on the Rights and Priviledges of Ecclesiasticks: and that they might have no Excuse for stragling, the Abbots were enjoyn'd, or at least those who had the Government of Monasteries in their Care, to provide them Necessaries. 4. Against those who either by violence, or by any other method, seiz'd on Church Lands: which he look'd upon as Sacrilege. 5. Against those who either abus'd or persecuted the Clergy. 6. Against those who would not pay Tithes, and the other Revenues belonging to the Church. The Duty of Tithes reached not only to the Fruits of the Earth, and to the Breed of Cattle, but likewise to those things which were the Profits of a Man's Industry and Labour. 7. Concerning the Rapines and Robberies so rise at that Herveus time. He demonstrates the Enormity thereof, and shews the Obligation they lay under of making Restitution, before they could expect Absolution. 8. Against stealing young Women, and against clandestine or unlawful Marriages. 9. Concerning the Prohibitions renew'd so often by the Canons against Priests having Women amongst them. 10. Concerning the Chastity which all Christians were oblig'd to preserve in their Words and Actions. 11. Concerning the Obligation of keeping strictly to the Oaths they took, without being perjur'd. 12. Against quarrellome Persons who took delight in Law-Suits and vexatious Prosecutions. 13. Against Homicides and Lyars. 14. Against the Abuse which then prevail'd of rifling the Goods of Bishops after their Decease. Upon this he advises that two or three of the neighbouring Bishops, upon the News of the Death of their Brother, should go and perform the last Offices over him. In the Conclusion, he exhorted the Bishops to refute the Errors of Photius. Lastly, He sums up in a few words what Christians ought to believe and practice, and exhorts them faithfully to discharge their Duties.

The Council of Trofly in the Year 921. In the Year 921. Herveus held another Council at the same place, wherein he took off the Excommunication issued out against Count Ertebold, who had seiz'd upon some of the Church Revenues.

This Archbishop assisted Charles the Simple in his Expedition against the Hunns, who ravag'd Lorraine, and was the only Man who continued Loyal to that Prince, when he was abandon'd by the French Lords. In the Year 920. he brought him back to Rheims, and adjust'd Matters betwixt him and his Lords, and re-establish'd him in his Kingdom. But within a short time after the Lords revolted again, and being met at Rheims, they elected King Robert, and Herveus was constrain'd to crown him. He did not survive this Coronation but four days, and dy'd in the Year 922. having presided over the Church of Rheims Two and twenty years lacking four days.

Seulfus caus'd Seulfus to be elected in his room, who was then Archdeacon of that Church. He had been the Disciple of Remy of Auxerra, who had instructed him in the Sciences, both Divine and Prophane. He was ordain'd by Abbo Bishop of Soissons, and by the other Bishops of the Province of Rheims. Eudes the Brother of Herveus, and a Nephew of that Name, were cited before him, being accus'd of Disloyalty to Robert; and they not justifying themselves, were strip'd of all the Revenues of the Church of Rheims in their possession, and cast into Prison: the former in the Custody of Hebert Count of Vermandois; and the latter at Paris. In a Provincial Council held in the Year 923. he impos'd a Penance on those who had born Arms in the War between Robert and Charles; and in another Council held in the Year 924. at Trofly, he put an end to the Difference which was between Count Isaac and Stephen Bishop of Cambray; the former paying an hundred pounds to the latter, for the wrong he had doneto his Church. 'Tis said that Seulfus agreed with Hebert to resign the Archbishoprick to the Son of that Count. However the case was, Seulfus did not enjoy this Dignity long, being prison'd in the Year 925. by the order of Hebert as it is suppos'd.

Presently after his death that Count came to Rheims, and having called thither Abbo Bishop of Soissons, and Bauvo Bishop of Chalons, he caus'd his Son Hugh, who was not then above five years old, to be elected by the Clergy and People of Rheims. Afterwards he procur'd the Confirmation of this Election by King Radulphus, who committed the Temporalities of this Diocess to Hebert, till his Son came of Age to take upon himself the Government thereof. The Spiritualities were conferr'd by Pope John X. on Abbo Bishop of Soissons, so that Hebert became absolute Master of that Church, and drove out of it all the Clergy whom he suppos'd to be against his Interests, and among others Fleddard, as he himself informs us.

The Wars between Hebert and Radulphus. In the Year 927 King Radulphus and Count Hebert fell out upon the account of the Earldom of Laon, which Hebert would have had given to his Son Odo, and which the King desir'd to keep for himself. Hebert willing to rely on a Power which might support his Pretensions, had an Interview with Henry King of Germany, and struck up an Alliance with him. He caus'd a Council to be conven'd the same Year at Trofly, notwithstanding the Prohibition of King Radulphus, which consist'd of six Bishops of the Province of Rheims: Afterwards he deliver'd Charles the Simple out of Prison, brought him to S. Quintin, and procur'd an Interview between him and Radulphus Duke of Normandy: from whence he brought him to Rheims, and writ to Pope John X. for the reestablishing of that Prince. This attempt oblig'd Radulphus to quit the City of Laon to Hebert, and to adjust Matters with him. Radulphus Duke of the Normans would not restore to Hebert his Son Odo, till he had set Charles at liberty, and promis'd to obey him. At the same time Hebert invited to Rheims Odalric Archbishop of Aix, who had been turn'd out of his Church by the Saracens, that he might there discharge his Episcopal Functions; and to reward him, he gave him the Abby of S. Timotheus, with the Revenue of a Prebend.

The State of France. France was then as it were parted between the great Lords, and the Regal Authority was extremely cramp'd. Hugh the White, Count of Paris, and Hebert, were two of the most powerful: Radulphus had the Title of King, and that little of the Regal Authority which remain'd. For Charles was the sport and pastime of all three. As soon as Hebert was reconcil'd to Radulphus, he threw Charles again into Prison; and Radulphus afterwards returning to Rheims, gave him a seeming sort of Liberty, which he did not long enjoy, dying on the Seventh of October in the Year 929. After his Death Hugh and Hebert fell out, the Umbrage of which quarrel was, that the Latter had given Entertainment to several Vassals belonging to the former, and among others to Herluin Count of Monstreuil. Radulphus sided with his Brother-in-law Hugh and there was a warm War between them: but Radulphus having taken the City of Rheims in the Year 931. caus'd Artaldus, a Monk of S. Remy, to be ordain'd Archbishop of the place, who the year after receiv'd the Pall from Pope Artaldus John XI. This Archbishop held a Council in the Year 934. at Chateau-Thierry, where he ordain'd Hildegarius Bishop of Beauvais; and in the same year he ordain'd Fulbert Bishop of Cambray. The year after he held another Council at Fismes, wherein he Excommunicated those who had made an unlawful Seizure on the Revenue of the Church. King Radulphus being dead, Hugh the White recall'd out of England Lewin, Charles the Simple's Son, call'd upon that account Lewin d'Outremer, and caus'd him to be crown'd at Laon by Artaldus Archbishop of Rheims, who continued in the peaceable possession of his Archbishoprick for some time, and ordain'd Bishops in all the Churches of his Province, except Chalons and Amiens. But Hebert would not endure that any other but himself should be in the possession of so considerable a Post, and thereupon sent several of his Troops to take and rife the Castles and Villages which belong'd to the Archbishoprick of Rheims. Artaldus for this Excommunicated him. King Lewin to make him amends for the Losses he sustain'd, granted him the Earldom of Rheims, and the Privilege of the Mint, and assisted him in taking several Castles which were held out by the Troops of Hebert. Fortune did not long favour Artaldus; for Hugh entering into a new League with Hebert against Lewin d'Outremer, they came with William Duke of Normandy, besieg'd the City of Rheims, became Masters of it at the end of six days, and caus'd Artaldus to appear in the Church of S. Remy, in the presence of several Lords and Bishops; and oblig'd him to make a Resignation of his Archbishoprick, and to content himself with the Abbeys of S. Bazol and Avenay, into the former of which he retir'd, after he had govern'd the Church of Rheims for the space of Eight years and seven months. Hugh the Son of Hebert, was replac'd in possession thereof, and was ordain'd Priest by Guy Bishop of Soissons, three Months after his return, and fifteen Years after his first Election. He had spent this Interval of Time at Auxerre, where he had follow'd his Studies under Guy Bishop of that City, who had ordain'd him Deacon; for he had receiv'd his other Orders at Rheims from the Hand of Abbo Bishop of Soissons.

The next Year, namely 941. the two Counts Hebert and Hugh conven'd the Bishops of the Province of Rheims at Soissons, and enter'd into a Consultation of ordaining Hugh the Son of Hebert Archbishop of Rheims. The Deputies of the Clergy and Laity of Rheims met there, and demand- ed that he might be ordain'd, asserting that Artaldus had not been Elect'd according to the Canon, but intruded by Force; and that he had given up all the Title he could claim to that Archbishoprick. Upon this Remonstrance, the Bishops resolv'd upon ordaining Hugh, and immediately set out for Rheims for that purpose. Artaldus was already withdrawn to Lewin d'Outremer: but that Prince having been defeated in the Year 941. near Laon, Artaldus was very lucky in reconciling himself with Hugh the White and Hibert, in re-entering into the Possession of his Abbeys, and in making a League with Hugh Archbishop of Rheims, who soon after receiv'd the Pall that was sent him by Pope Stephen VIII. Notwithstanding this League, Artaldus return'd to Lewin d'Outremer. In the mean time Hebert dying in 943. Lewin was perswaded by Hugh the White to entertain the Sons of this Count, and also to leave Hugh in possession of the Archbishoprick of Rheims, upon condition that they restor'd to Artaldus his Abbeys, give him another Bishoprick, and grant that his Kinsmen should retain the Honours they had obtain'd. This Treaty was not long kept; for Hugh the White and Lewin d'Outremer Warring against each other, the latter laid Siege twice to the City of Rheims, and the second time having chas'd away Hugh Archbishop of Rheims, he enter'd the City, and re-establish'd Artaldus, who was replac'd in his See in the Year 946. by the Archbishops of Treves and Mayence. The Church of Amiens becoming Vacant the year after, Hugh ordain'd Terbold Archdeacon of Soissons Bishop thereof, which occasion'd a Trial which was brought before an Assembly of Bishops and Lords, held near the River Cher. The Affair was not brought to any Issue at that place, but put off to November. In the mean time Artaldus was left in possession of the Archbishoprick of Rheims, and Hugh permitted to stay at Mouzon.

A Council was call'd and held at Verdun: wherein were Robert Archbishop of Treves, Artaldus Archbishop of Rheims, Odalric Archbishop of Aix, Adalberon Bishop of Metz, Gozelin Bishop of Tulle, Hildebold Bishop of the Upper Rhine, in the presence of Bruno an Abbot, Brother to King Orto, and of the Abbots Agenold and Odilo. Hugh was cited thither by two Bishops, but would not appear. The Synod adjudg'd the Archbishops of Rheims to belong to Artaldus.

Another Council was call'd in January following upon the same Subject, and held in the Church of S. Peter, near to Mouzon. They met at the time appointed, and Hugh made his appearance. But after he had discours'd with Robert Archbishop of Treves, he withdrew, and only caus'd a Letter to be presented by one of his Clergy, which was brought from Rome, and writ in the name of Pope Agapetus, wherein it was order'd that Hugh should be re-establish'd in the Archbishoprick of Rheims. The Bishops having read the Letter, alledg'd that it would not be reasonable to supersede the Execution of the Orders which they had reciv'd from the Holy See, upon the account of a Letter presented by the Enemy of Artaldus, and after they had read the nineteenth Chapter of the Council of Carthage, concerning the Accuser and the Accused, they adjudg'd Artaldus to have continued in the Communion of the Church, and in possession of the Archbishoprick of Rheims; and that Hugh, who had been already summon'd before two Synods, without appearing to either, ought to be depriv'd of the Communion and Government of that Church, till such time as he should clear himself in a General Council. This Sentence they notified to Hugh, who for his part declar'd, that he would not submit to it. In the mean time Artaldus having appeal'd to the Authority of the Holy See, Pope Agapetus sent Bishop Marinus his Vicar to King Orto, that he might call a General Synod, to pass a definitive Sentence on this Affair.

The Council of Ingelheim in favour of Artaldus.

It was held at Ingelheim the seventh of June in the Year 948. Marinus the Pope's Legat was the President thereof, and the Archbishop of Cologne, Mayence, Treves, and Hamburg his Assistants, with six and twenty Bishops of Germany, without reckoning Artaldus Archbishop of Rheims, upon whose account the Assembly met. The Kings Orto and Lewis d'Outremer were likewise present. The latter made his Complaints against the Rebellion of Hugh; and afterwards Artaldus presented his Petition to the Pope's Legat and the Synod, wherein he gave a Remonstrance of all his Concerns, which was as follows. That after the death of Herveus, Seulfus who had been put up in his place, declar'd himself against the Kindred of his Predecessor: and that he might gain his point, he enter'd into a Confederacy with Count Hebert, who cast them into Prison, where they were confin'd till the death of King Robert. That Seulfus dying in the third year of his Pontificate, being possen'd (as several attest'd, by Hebert's Creatures, that Count seiz'd on the Church of Rheims, and was in possession thereof for the space of six years by the permission of King Radulphus. But that afterwards that King being mov'd by the Remonstrances of the Bishops, who complain'd that that Church was left so long without a Pastor, after he had made himself Master of Rheims, had caus'd him to be ordain'd by eighteen Bishops. That he had discharg'd the Episcopal Functions for nine years together, ordain'd eight Bishops, and a great many Clerks, and crown'd King Lewis and Queen Gerberga. But that Count Hugh being incens'd against him, because he would not join in his Revolt against the King, had forc'd him, after he had taken the City of Rheims, to resign his Archbishoprick, had sent him into the Monastery of S. Bazol, and had put into his place Hugh, Count Hebert's Son, who had been ordain'd Deacon at Auxerre. That afterwards he call'd a Synod at Soissons, wherein a Proposal was made to him to permit the Ordination of Hugh. That he immediately oppos'd it, and had declar'd them Excommunicated who should ordain any other Archbishop of Rheims whilst he was living, and him who should accept of such Ordination. That afterwards, to get out of their hands, he had desir'd them, that they would let him go to ask advice of the Queen, and his Friends, what he ought to do, and that they would send some body along with him to know his answer. They sent with him Bishop Deroldus, to whom, in the presence of the Queen, he gave this Answer, That he Excommunicated the Bishops who should dare to ordain another in his place; repeating the Protestation he had formerly made of appealing to the Holy See. That without being concern'd at this Denunciation, some of these Bishops went to Rheims to ordain Hugh. That from that time King Lewis proving unsuccessful, he had been oblig'd to wander from place to place like a Vagabond; and that afterwards several of his Friends had brought him by force to the Counts Hugh the White and Hebert, who having him in their power, constrain'd him to resign the Revenues of his Church, and sent him into the Monastery of S. Bazol. That being inform'd that they design'd to make away with him, he fled to Laon. That since that, King Orto came in to the assistance of King Lewis, had turn'd Hugh out of the Archbishoprick of Rheims, and re-establish'd him therein. That Hugh retir'd to the Castle of Mouzon: that in the Conference held upon the River Oher, where he was present with Hugh, his Affair was there debated before the Bishops then present. That Hugh had there produc'd a Letter writ to the Pope in his name, whereby he desir'd to be discharg'd from his Archbishoprick, which he had maintain'd was counterfeit. That the Favourites of Hugh having alledg'd that an Affair of that Importance could not be determin'd in that Assembly, because it was not a Synod convoked according to form, they had put it off to November, wherein a Synod was to be held; and that in the mean time it was order'd, that he should have the Government of the Church of Rheims, and Hugh was allow'd to stay at Mouzon. That Hugh came in the Season of Vintage with Count Thibold, to carry off all the Wine round about the City of Rheims. That the Synod had been held at Verdun as appointed, to which Hugh was cited, and he would not make his Appearance, nor to another held afterwards near Mouzon, which had pass'd a Sentence absolutely in his favour. But that Hugh having declar'd that he would not submit to this Sentence, and remaining still at Mouzon, he had sent to Rome by the Ambassadors of King Orto a Petition containing his Complaints; that he expected the Issue of all from the Orders of the Holy See, and the Determination of the Council. This Petition of Artaldus having been read in Latin and in the old Teutonic Language, Sigeboldus a Clerk belonging to Hugh enter'd, presented to the Council the Letter which had been brought from Rome, and which had been already produc'd before the Council of Mouzon, and avouch'd that it had been given him by the Legat Marinus then present. It was written in the name of Guy Bishop of Soissons, Hildegaire Bishop of Beauvais, and of all the other Bishops of the Province of Rheims, who desir'd the re-establishment of Hugh and the Expulsion of Artaldus. When this Letter had been read, the Bishops therein mention'd did declare that it was Counterfeit, and that they had never heard the least mention of any such thing, nor gave their Consent that such a Request should be made in their Names. Upon this their Declaration this Deacon was depos'd as an Impostor and Calumniator; and in the same Session Artaldus was confirm'd in the Archbishoprick of Rheims. In the second Session Robert Archbishop of Treves alledg'd, that since they had re-establish'd Artaldus as lawful Archbishop of Rheims, it was requisite to condemn the Intruder. Marinus told them the Council ought to pronounce a Sentence agreeable to the Canon; and after the Decrees of the Pope's touching this Subject were read, the Bishops declar'd Hugh to be Excommunicated and thrown out of the Church, till such time as he should do Penance for his Fault. In the other Sessions they debated on several Points relating to Church Discipline; and all the Acts of this Council are reduc'd into Ten Canons.

The first contains the Excommunication of Hugh:

The

The second, the Resettlement of Arraldus, and the Excommunication of those, who were ordain'd by Hugh, unless they should appear before the Synod to be held at Treves, September 13. to make Satisfaction, and to receive Penance for what they had done.

The third inflicts the same Punishment on Count Hugh the White, for having turn'd out Radulphus, Bishop of Laon.

The fourth prohibits the Laity from bestowing Churches on Priests, or from turning them out of them without the Approbation of the Bishop.

The fifth is against those who abuse the Priests, or do them any wrong.

In the sixth, it is order'd that the whole Easter-Week, and the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday after Whitsunday should be kept as Festivals, as well as the Lord's Day.

In the seventh, it is order'd, that in the Grand Litany (which is on S. Mark's day) a Fast shall be kept as in the Rogation-Week before the Ascension.

The eighth imports that the Laicks should have no share of the Offerings which the Faithful offer'd on the Altar.

The ninth, that the Cognizance of all Differences about Tithes should be brought before the Bishops.

The tenth and last Canon is imperfect, and one cannot well comprehend the meaning thereof; There is mention made of Widows dedicated to the Service of God.

After this Council Lewis d'Outremer assisted by Conrad Duke of Lorrain, retook Mouzon, Montagne and Laon, and the Bishops being met at Mouzon, Excommunicated Count Thibold, and cited Count Hugh the White to appear before the Synod to be held at Treves. In this Assembly, Guy Bishop of Soissons, who had ordain'd Hugh, came to wait upon King Lewis, and to give him Satisfaction.

Arraldus when he departed from Laon went to Treves with Guy Bishop of Soissons, Radulphus Bishop of Laon, and Wickfry of Terrouane, wherethey met with Marinus the Pope's Legat, and Robert Archbishop of Treves, who waited for their coming, without whom there would not have been any other Bishops of Germany and Lorrain. Marinus asked Arraldus and the rest of the Bishops, how Hugh the White had behav'd himself since the last Synod, and whether the Letters which cited him before the Synod had been deliver'd to him. They reply'd, That he still persisted in his Rebellion and Robberies; that one of their Letters had been deliver'd to him, and that the other had been intercepted by his Party. Upon this Reply, It was asked whether any one was come on his behalf; and none appearing, the Assembly was adjourn'd till the morrow. On that day there appear'd no Deputy in behalf of Count Hugh; and tho' the Clergy and Nobles cry'd out, that he ought to be Excommunicated; yet that was put off to the third day. In the mean time they consulted about the Affair of the Bishops who had been cited before the Synod, or who had any hand in the Ordination of Hugh. The Bishop of Soissons begg'd Pardon and obtain'd it; the Bishop of Terrouane was found to have no hand in the Ordination; and the Bishop of Noyon was excus'd by reason of his Sickness. On the third day Hugh the White was Excommunicated till such time as he should come and ask the Legat and the Bishops Pardon for what he had done: and in case he should defer that, he enjoy'd him to go to Rome for Absolution. There were likewise two Bishops Excommunicated who were ordain'd by Hugh, the one of Amiens, the other of Senlis; and a Clerk who had instituted and inducted the Latter. Hildegairus Bishop of Beauvais was cited before Marinus, or to Rome, for assisting at their Ordination: and lastly, the young Count Hebert, Brother to Hugh, was likewise summon'd to make Satisfaction for the wrong he had done the Bishops. All these things were transacted in the Year 948. and from that time forward Arraldus remain'd in possession of the Archbishopric of Rheims, which was made sure to him by the Peace concluded between Lewis d'Outremer and Hugh the White in the Year 953. In the same Year this Archbishop held a Council of five Bishops at S. Thierry, wherein he Excommunicated Count Reginald, who had seiz'd upon the Revenues of the Church.

Arraldus dying the last day of August in the Year 967. after he had been Archbishop of Rheims thirty years, several Bishops propos'd the Re-establishing Hugh. The Affair was debated in a Council held in a Village of the Diocels of Meaux upon the River Marne, consisting of Thirteen Bishops of the Provinces of Rheims and Sens. The Bishops of Laon and Chalons very strongly oppos'd his Restoration, and the Case was referr'd to the Arbitration of his Holiness. He gave them to understand by Bruno Archbishop of Cologne, that Hugh had been Rejected and Excommunicated by the Councils of Rome and Pavia, and that there was no thinking of him again. Whereupon they elected a Clerk of the Church of Rheims call'd Odalric, the Son of a Count nam'd Hugh, who was supported by King Lotharius, by the Queen-Mother, and by Bruno. He enjoy'd the Archbishoprick very peaceably for the space of Seven years, and dy'd in the Year 968. His Successor was Adalberon, Brother of Count Henry, who govern'd the Church of Rheims for Nineteen years, with a great deal of Prudence and Candor. Under his Episcopacy a Council was held at Rheims in the Year 975. whereof Stephen Deacon of Pope Penedict VII. was President. In this Council Thibold was Excommunicated for having unlawfully seiz'd upon the Church of Amiens. In the Year 972. he held another Council at St. Mary's Mount, wherein he procur'd a Ratification of an Order he had made, of putting Monks into the Monastery of S. Mouzon instead of Canons who were there: After the death of this Archbishop, Hugh Capet laid hold on this opportunity of taking into his Interests Arnulphus, the Bastard Brother of Charles Duke of Lorrain, the last of the Carolignian Race.

Odalric Archbishop of Rheims.

Arnulphus Archbishop of Rheims.

Arnulphus Clerk of the Church of Laon, by procuring him to be elected Archbishop of Rheims in the Year 989. who immediately took of him an Oath of Fidelity. But within six Months after his being in possession of the Archbishoprick of Rheims, his Brother Charles was introduc'd into that City, and became Master of it by means of a Priest nam'd Adalger. Which was brought about, as 'tis suppos'd, by the Intelligence he had from the Archbishop, who however was carry'd by his Brother to Laon, and cast into Prison for forms sake. Arnulphus notwithstanding issued out a Sentence of Excommunication against those who had made an unlawful Seizure of the Revenues of the Church of Rheims; and the Bishops of the Province met at Sens, and pass'd a Decree against Adalger, whereby they Excommunicated him and all others who had any hand in the Usurpation made upon the Churches of Rheims and Laon. This Excommunication was sent to all the Bishops, and Complaints were made to the Holy See, who took part with Arnulphus. But Hugh Capet, who had always suspected his Treachery, having discover'd that his Suspicion was not groundless, and that he was in the Interests of his Brother, wrote against him to Pope John XV. and caus'd the Bishops of the Province of Rheims to write to him likewise, who accus'd Arnulphus, and desir'd he might be Condemn'd. After this Hugh becoming Master of the City of Laon, and having Charles in Custody, he took Arnulphus, and brought him to Rheims, where he call'd a Council to proceed against him. It consisted of six Suffragans of the Archbishoprick of Rheims, viz. Guy Bishop of Soissons, Adalberon of Laon, Herveus of Beauvais, Gotesman of Amiens, Ratbode of Mayon, and Eudes of Sens; besides them were Debert Archbishop of Bourges, Sigwin Archbishop of Sens, Gautier Bishop of Autun, Bruno of Langres, Milo of Mascon, Arnulphus Bishop of Orleans, and Hebert of Auxerre, with several Abbots of several Diocesses. Sigwin was President thereof, and Arnulphus of Orleans Prolocutor. In the first Session held the sixteenth of June in the Church of Bazol, Arnulphus Archbishop of Rheims was accus'd for having betray'd his Trust to King Hugh, and being the chief Cause of the taking that City. Sigwin Archbishop of Sens, alledg'd that he would not permit a Process to be made on this Charge, till he was sure that Arnulphus should not be put to Death in case he were Convicted of High Treason; and moreover cited the Thirty first Chapter of the Council of Toledo, which imports that Bishops shall not proceed to the Determination of such Matters, till they had engag'd the Princes upon Oath to remit the Punishment of the Offenders. Herveus shew'd that it would be of worse consequence if the Prince should take cognizance of the Case, and deprive the Bishops of the right of doing it. Bruno declar'd that he was most concern'd in this Affair; that upon the account of his being a Retainer to the King Lotharius his Uncle, he had engag'd himself for the Fidelity of Arnulphus, that he might be made Archbishop of Rheims, in hopes that he would not let him suffer any prejudice for this Act of Kindness: That Arnulphus was so far from making his due acknowledgments, that he had begun to persecute his Friends, and had put him in danger of his Life: that he had to no purpose warrant'd that he would not break the Oath of Fidelity which he had taken to King Hugh; that there was sufficient Evidence of his Treachery, because the Authors of that Rebellion were his most intimate Friends, and such as he esteem'd very highly. As to that which was alledg'd, that care ought to be taken that the Offender should not lose his Life; he answer'd, that there was no need to fear any such thing under Princes so merciful as theirs were; but that it was more to be fear'd, whilst they endeavour'd after the Safety of one Man, that the whole Ecclesiastical Order would be expos'd to danger. At last it was concluded, that the Priest who had deliver'd up the Gates of the City to Duke Charles, should be brought in. Whilst they staid for his coming, they read over the Oath of Fidelity which Arnulphus had taken to King Hugh and King Robert. Afterwards the Priest nam'd Adalger appearing, declar'd that it was Arnulphus who gave him the Keys of the City Gates, with orders to deliver them up to Duke Charles. After this Evidence was given, they read the Decree which Arnulphus had made against those who made an unlawful Seizure of the Revenue of the Church of Rheims, which prov'd that himself was Excommunicated, because he was the Author of that Depredation, and went shares with those who committed it. To this was joyn'd the Sentence of the Bishops of the Province of Rheims, pass'd at Sens much about the time wherein they began to suspect Arnulphus of Treason. After the reading of these Papers and the Canons of the Council of Carthage against Persons Excommunicated who partake of the Sacrament, and against Bishops who do any thing contrary to the Oath which they have taken in their Ordination, leave was given to all who were minded to vindicate Arnulphus, to say freely what they could in his behalf. The Clergy of his own Church would neither accuse nor defend him: But John Scholasticus of Auxerre, Ranulphus Abbot of Sens, and Abbo Superior of the Monastery of Fleury, undertook to defend him, and produc'd a great many Passages extracted out of the false Decretals of the Ancient Popes, to prove that Arnulphus ought to be re-establish'd before they proceeded to judge him; and that they might not judge him till he had been cited several times, and the Holy See made acquainted with the Business. It was answer'd them that he had sufficient Notice given him; That they ought not to re-establish him till he had receiv'd such a Sentence as declar'd him Absolv'd, since he had been already Condemn'd; That Hildemare Bishop of Beauvais, and Abbo Archbishop of Rheims charg'd with the same Crime as Arnulphus was, had been judg'd by the Synods of the Province; That the Holy See had been already inform'd of this Affair by the Letters of King Hugh, and of the Bishops of the Province of Rheims, which had been carry'd to Rome by Deputies, which the Pope at first had pretty well entertain'd: but that since Count Hebert had presented his Holiness with a fine white Steed and several other things, he deny'd to give them any further Audience. The Deputies which Bishop Bruno had sent to Rome for his Release, added, that having requested the Pope to Anathe-matize those who were guilty of his Confinement, the Clerks of the Pope had demanded Money of The Council them for it; and that they not being willing to give them any on that account, the Pope had told of Rheims them as his final Answer, That the Person for whom he had been Apprehended might release him, against Arnulphus. if he thought fit: from whence they concluded, that the Holy See did not hinder them from proceeding upon the Spot to the Judgment and Determination of that Affair. But they carried the Point higher yet, and Arnulphus Bishop of Orleans remonstrated, that they might go on in the Trial, without waiting for what Rome should say in the Case. And after he had made Protestation that all due Respect ought to be paid to the Holy See and its Decisions, without offering prejudice to the Canons of the Councils; he gave them to understand that there are two things of which great care ought to be taken, which were not to permit that the Silence, or the new Laws or Institutions of the Popes, be any prejudice to the Ancient Laws of the Church: Because this would be to overthrow all order, and to make every thing depend on the Will and Pleasure of one single Man. That this did not derogate any thing of the Privileges of the Pontifex Maximus; because if the Bishop of Rome were a Man of Worth for his Learning and his Piety, there was no fear of his Silence, or of his Altering the Constitutions of the Church. That if on the contrary, either out of Ignorance, or Fear, or Passion, he should swerve from Justice, his Silence and his new Decrees were the less to be fear'd; because he who acts contrary to the Laws, cannot prejudice the Laws. From thence he took an occasion to lament the sad Estate of the Church of Rome, and gave a brief account of the Popes from Ostavian to Boniface, and shew'd his abhorrence of their Irregularities. He asked whether Bishops, noted for their Sanctity and Piety, were oblig'd to submit themselves blindly to such Infamous Monsters, who had no Learning, neither Divine nor Profane. He complain'd that they should advance to the highest Post of the Church the meer Scum and Refuse of the Clergy; Pastors who more deserv'd the name of Walking Statues, than of Reasonable Men. Upon default of excellent Popes, he was for consulting Metropolitans; and took notice that there were a great many such in Gallia, Belgica, and in Germany, very well skill'd in Matters of Religion; and that it was more proper to ask their Opinion, if the War which happens between Princes did not hinder it, than to go to seek it in that City, which at present declares in favour of him who gives most, and weighs its Judgments by the Number of Crowns which are presented. He adds, that if any one should alledge with Pope Gelasius, that the Church of Rome is the Judge of all Churches, and can be judg'd by none, this is a Proposition which the African Bishops would not consent to, and which could not be true at this time, wherein there was scarce one at Rome who had so much as studied Humane Learning, if common Fame were to be credited therein. That Ignorance was more excusable in other Bishops than in the Bishop of Rome, who ought to be Judge of the Faith, of the Life, of the Manners, and of the Discipline of the whole Church. That according to St. Gregory's Opinion, the Bishops, when in fault, are subject to the Correction of the Holy See; but when they are unblameable, Humility in one sense renders them all Equal. Lastly, That when the Bishops of Rome of this time were like to Damasus, nothing could be done more than had been done, since the Bishops and the King had writ concerning this very Business to the Holy See, and they had not undertaken to decide it in the Province, till such time as they had no hopes of having it try'd at Rome, which was conformable to the Canons of the Council of Sardica. He quoted several Passages out of St. Gregory, to show that Bishops are oblig'd to punish Offences, and that they may Depose Bishops who are convicted thereof. He added, That tho' one might pass by other Crimes in silence, one could not do so in the Case of High Treason: yet that there have been Instances of Archbishops of Rheims, condemn'd by the Bishops of the Province for this very Crime; namely Gilles Archbishop of Rheims, who prov'd disloyal to Childebert and Elbo, and was depos'd at Thionville: That the Decree of Damasus, which imports that the Causes of Bishops shall be try'd at Rome, ought to be extended to none but difficult Causes, and not to such wherein the Crime is self-evident: That the African Bishops have contested the very Right of Appellation, and that the Councils of Nice and Antioch appointed the Synod of the Province to determine these Matters: That he would very readily grant the Church of Rome more than ever the African Bishops pretended to allow it: That they consulted it when the Affairs of the State permitted it, and they submitted to its Determinations, unless they were contrary to Equity: But if it remain'd silent, the Ecclesiastical Laws ought to be consulted, and the rather because the Church of Rome at present was destitute of all manner of Supports and Supplies; for since the Fall of the Empire it has lost the Churches of Alexandria and Antioch, as well as those of Africa and Asia, and all Europe began to fly off from it: That the Church of Constantinople was withdrawn from its Obedience: That the Churches of Spain, which were most remote, did not acknowledge its Determinations; and that Rome had abandon'd it self, since it no longer gave any wholesome Advice to it self, or others. He concludes, that according to the Examples and Canons of former times, they ought to proceed to the Trial of the Archbishop of Rheims.

[From all this Learned and Judicious Speech of the Bishop of Orleans, it cannot but be observ'd, that even in these dark times, wherein Rome might with ease have imposed on the blind and ignorant World, there were some so wise, and so honest as not to think its Bishop (especially if a wicked and ignorant one) to be the Infallible Judge of all Controversies. Now whether this honest proceeding of the Council of Rheims in judging Arnulphus, even in a time when they profess'd to pay all due deference to the Holy See; and whether the Practice of the Modern Gallican Churches in this Age, be not a sufficient Evidence to prove how little they (even of the Romish Communion) believe the Doctrine of the Pope's Infallibility (unless as far as they gain by it) I leave the fair and impartial Reader of both Parties to judge.]

The Council of Rheims Upon this the Synod came to a Resolution; the Defendant was called in, who took his place among the Bishops. The Bishop of Orleans upbraided him with the Favours he had received from the King, which he had return'd with Treachery. The Defendant alledg'd that he had done nothing against the King; that he was always Loyal to him; that he had been taken by force in his City by the Enemy, the King not coming to his Assistance. The Bishop of Orleans oppos'd to him the Testimony of Adalger the Priest, who said he had deliver'd up the Gates of the City by his order. The Defendant reply'd that the thing was false: the Priest maintain'd to his Face that his Evidence was true. Arnulphus of Rheims complain'd of the ill usage he had met with; the Bishop of Soissons ask'd him why he did not appear when he was cited by the King and Bishops; and upon the Answer he made, that he could not, being then retain'd in Custody; that Bishop reply'd, that he had offer'd to conduct him, and alledg'd several Circumstances to prove that he had behav'd himself very deceitfully. Afterwards another Witness was produc'd, who told him that he had said to him that he prefer'd Prince Charles to all the World; and if he had any kindness for him, he ought to endeavour to serve him. Whereas several Abbots declared that Arnulphus ought to be permitted to withdraw, and to ask advice what Answer to make, it was granted him; and he withdrew into a corner of the Chamber with the Archbishop of Sens, and the Bishop of Orleans, Langres, and Amiens. Whilst they consulted together, they read in the Synod the Canons of the Councils of Toledo against those who prov'd disloyal to their Prince. In the meantime Arnulphus acknowledg'd and confess'd his Crime before the Bishops who were retir'd aside with him, who call'd others to be present at his Declaration. He made it before them, and thirty Abbots or Clerks, which were call'd to be Witnesses. This Acknowledgment took off the Objection which might arise upon the Account of the Holy See; because Arnulphus having not appeal'd to it, chose his Judges, and acknowledg'd his Fault, there was no difficulty remaining; so that they might condemn him without encroaching upon the Rights of the Holy See. But to be inform'd what Ceremony they should use in his Deposition, several Canons were consulted, and a great many Instances were produc'd, which took up the remaining part of this Session.

The next day the Bishops meeting in the same place, after they had debated several Affairs both Ecclesiastical and Civil, resum'd that of the Archbishop of Rheims: and as they were debating after what manner he ought to be treated, King Hugh, and King Robert entred with the Lords, and then thank'd the Bishops for the Zeal they had express'd for them, and ask'd them how the Case stood. The Bishop of Orleans return'd them this Answer, that there was no need of returning them Thanks for doing what was only their Duty: that they had not acted therein out of any Motive of Love to them, or of Hatred to Arnulphus: they could heartily wish that he were able to clear himself; but that at last, after many Evasions, he had acknowledg'd his Crime, and consented to be degraded from his Priesthood, in the presence of several Abbots, and several Clerks who were Witnesses of that Declaration: that he thought it proper to have him there before him, that the King himself might be both Witness and Judge, and that by this means his Accusers, the Witnesses which had given in Evidence against him, and the Judges might be discharg'd. He was forthwith introduc'd, and the Bishop of Orleans having ask'd him whether he were still of the same Mind, he reply'd, that he was. The Bishop ask'd him, whether he were willing to be deprived of the Sacerdotal Dignity, which he had hitherto abus'd: He reply'd, as you please for that. Count Brochard catching at that word, said, That he did not explain himself enough, and that he ought to acknowledge his Fault publicly, that so he might not afterwards say, that the Bishops had impos'd upon him therein, and that he had not made any Acknowledgment of that Nature. He reply'd That he had openly confess'd his Fault, and acknowledg'd that he had sworn'd from that Allegiance which he ow'd to his Prince: that he desired that they would credit what the Bishop of Orleans should say of him, and that he intreated him to make as fair a Report of his Case as he could. Thereupon this Bishop said, that Arnulphus of Rheims being naturally modest in speaking, and asham'd to acknowledge in publick, what he had confess'd to them in private, it was enough that he should acknowledge in general that he had not kept the Oath of Allegiance which he ow'd to his Prince. Count Brochard insisted that he ought to declare it publicly; but the Bishop of Orleans silenc'd him by saying, that the Bishops were the only Persons who could extort a Confession of that Nature; and that it was sufficient that the Archbishop of Rheims had made his Confession to them in private, and declar'd himself unworthy of the Priesthood because of his Sins, as he had done by a Writing which was read, wherein he declar'd, that he had confess'd himself to Sigwin Archbishop of Sens, and to other Bishops, and had appointed them the Judges of his Offences, that he might receive from them such Penance as he deserv'd, and be remov'd from the Sacerdotal Dignity; and consented that another Archbishop should be put in his place, without pretending ever to return contrary to this Declaration. Afterwards Adalger the Priest confess'd his Fault. He was ask'd whether he had rather be degraded, or ly under a perpetual Excommunication. He prefer'd Degradation, which was perform'd with the usual Ceremony; for he was strip'd of all his Clerical Habits from his Priesthood to his Sub-deaconship; and each time he was order'd to forbear performing the Offices of the Order, and of the Habit he was strip'd of: after this he was enjoyn'd Penance, and receiv'd Absolution with leave to Communicate as a Laick. Lastly, They issued forth an Anathema against the other Rebels, who did not appear to make Satisfaction; and Arnulphus was sent Prisoner to Orleans.

Arnulphus being thus depos'd and depriv'd of the Archbishoprick of Rheims, the Bishops elected in his place one Gerbert or Gilbert. He came of a considerable Family of Auvergne; and applying himself to study, he became a great Proficient in the Sciences and Philology. He was brought up in the Monastery of Aurillac, where he liv'd a Monastick Life; and from thence he went into Spain, where he learn'd the Mathematics. He was afterwards Schoolmaster of the Church of Rheims, where Prince Robert, Son of Hugh Capet, Leoteric Archbishop of Sens, and Fulbert Bishop of Chartres were his Scholars; and he had afterwards the Honour of being Tutor to Otto III. Immediately after his Election he made a Profession of his Faith, and thereupon was Ordain'd, and Instituted and Inducted into the Archbishoprick of Rheims. In the Year 998. he held a Council, wherein he Excommunicated Count Hebert and other Ullurpers, who had unlawfully seiz'd upon the Revenues of the Church of Rheims. He wrote at the same time to Fulcus Bishop of Amiens, who had appropriated to his own use several Revenues of his Church.

King Hugh and the Bishops sent the Decrees of this Council to Pope John XV. by the Archdeacon of Rheims, and pray'd him to approve of their Election of Gerbert. But this Pope being perswaded that Arnulphus could not have been Depos'd without his Authority, very highly resented what the Bishops of France had done. King Hugh wrote him word that they had done nothing in this Affair that might be of any Prejudice to the Holy See; and that if he pleas'd to come to Grenoble, or into France, he would receive him with all the Tokens imaginable of Submission and Respect; and that if he pleas'd, they should try this Matter over again in his Presence. The Pope sent into France Abbot Leo, with orders to call a Council, and in the mean time forbade the Bishops who had assisted at the Council of Rheims to be there. Gerbert foreseeing the Storm that was coming on him, wrote to an Abbot, and Archbishop Sigwin, and endeavour'd to fortifie the latter, against the fearful apprehensions he had of the Thunderbolts of Rome, by telling him, that the Judgment of the Pope was not Superior to God's Decree: That if he (meaning the Pope) should fall into Error, he might be reprov'd: that he could not exclude Bishops from the Communion of JESUS CHRIST, for being unwilling to consent to a thing which they thought contrary to the Gospel: that they had no Power to debar him of the Communion, neither as a Guilty Person, since he was Innocent, nor as a Rebel, since he had not refus'd to go to any Council: that this Sentence, being unjust, ought not to be look'd upon as proceeding from the Holy See, according to S. Leo's Maxim. That the Rules whereby the Catholick Church ought to be regulated are the Gospel, the Apostles, the Prophets, the Canons made by the Spirit of God, and consecrated by that respect which all the World paid them, and the Decrees of the Holy Apostolical See which were conformable thereto. That those who out of Contempt swerv'd from these Rules, ought to be judg'd and condemn'd by these Rules: but that whoever observes and follows them, ought to enjoy perpetual Peace, without ever being separated from the Communion of the Church. In conclusion he declar'd to Sigwin, that he ought not to suspend the performing of his Functions because of the Prohibition of Rome, and that he ought to despise this irregular Judgment, for fear that whilst he endeavour'd to appear Innocent, he should declare himself Guilty.

In the mean time the Pope by his Legat very warmly press'd for the re-establishment of Arnulphus, and after he had appointed Councils to be held for this purpose at Aix-la-Chapelle, and at Rome, to which the Bishops of France would not go, he order'd one to be held at Mouzon the Second of June, in the Year 995. in which assisted Luitolfe Archbishop of Treves, Aimon Bishop of Verdun, and Notger of Liege, with Sigefroy Bishop of Munster. Leo Legat of Pope John XV. presented to them a Letter of that Pope, and after it had been read, Gerbert made an eloquent Speech in his own Defence, wherein after he had shown the Reasonableness of his Conduct, he declar'd that he had not taken the Church of Rheims from its lawful Possessor; but that Arnulphus, who was unworthy thereof, having condemn'd himself, he had been elected and ordain'd Canonically in his place. He gave this Speech in writing to the Legat, who handed to him the Pope's Letter. After this the Council broke up, having first appointed to meet at Rheims the first of July, and deputed John a Monk of the Abbot Leo the Pope's Legat, to go to King Hugh. But as Gerbert was going away, Leo order'd two Bishops to remonstrate to him, that he ought to abstain from celebrating Divine Service, till the Convention of the Synod. After he had declar'd that their Denunciation signified nothing, he went himself to wait upon Leo, and told him that it was not in the Power of any Bishop, nor of any Patriarch, nor of the Pope himself to exclude any of the Faithful from the Communion of the Church, till such time as he had been either convicted of any Crime, or had acknowledg'd himself to be Criminal, or had refus'd to appear before a Synod, being cited thereto according to the Canon: That neither of these being his Case, he could not tell how to condemn himself. However Luitolf Archbishop of Treves, having calmly, and like a Brother, admonish'd him not to give any occasion of Scandal, he prevail'd upon him so far, that for peace and quietness sake, he would only abstain from celebrating Mass till the first of July next, which was the time appointed for the Synod at Rheims. The Queen Adelaid wrote to Gerbert, ordering him to appear at that Synod; threatening him that if he did not, such Measures should be taken as should be thought most proper. Gerbert understanding that they would Absolve Arnulphus, and re-establish him, and all to gratifie Leo, who had promis'd that the Pope should confirm the late Marriage of King Robert; and being inform'd that his Clergy and Laity had declar'd against him, return'd this Answer to that Princess, That he would not be there; and declar'd that he would patiently attend the Determination of the Synod: That having receiv'd the Government of the Church of Rheims at the hands of the Bishops, he was not willing to quit it till the Bishops had so order'd it : But that he was not in any manner capable of opposing the Sentence which should be pass'd upon him, or of retaining his Diocesis by force : That in attending the Judgment of the Synod, he suffer'd with grief an Exile, which many believe to be very happy for him.

The Synod of Rheims against Gerbert. The re-establishment of Arnulphus in the Archbishoprick of Rheims.

The Synod appointed at Rheims was held there accordingly ; of which we have not any Acts or Decrees. All that we can learn of it is, that they therein resolv'd to re-establish Arnulphus, and to turn out Gerbert. The latter, according to the Resolution he had taken, obey'd, and retir'd to Otho III. who soon after gave him the Archbishoprick of Ravenna, from whence he ascended the Papal Chair in the Year 999. As to Arnulphus (whatever some Authors may say) he was not set at liberty, and re-establish'd till three years after, at the instance of Pope Gregory V. John the Fifteenth's Successor. His re-establishment was likewise afterwards confirm'd by Gerbert himself when he was advanc'd to the Popedom. For that Pope very generously forgetting all that was past, sent him word, That as it was the Duty of the Holy Apostolical See to raise up those who were slain, and to restore to them the Dignity of which they had been depriv'd ; so he thought it convenient to succour him, even him who had been turn'd out of the Archbishoprick of Rheims for some default : Because since his Deposition had not been ratified by the Pope, it was believ'd that he might be re-establish'd by the Clemency of the Holy See, St. Peter having such a Sovereign Authority as no other could stand in competition with. That therefore by restoring to him the Pastoral Rod and Ring, he grants him a power of performing all his Arch-Episcopal Functions ; to retain the Dignity thereof ; to enjoy all the Revenues belonging to the Church of Rheims ; and to wear the Pall. That he prohibits all manner of Persons from upbraiding him with his Deposition ; being willing that the Apostolical Authority should protect him, tho' his Conscience condemn him : That lastly, he confirms and grants to him de novo, the Archbishoprick of Rheims with all that belong'd to it This is the Language of Gerbert when advanc'd to the Papal Chair ; which seems to be in a different strain from what he formerly us'd.

The Writings of Gerbert.

The Writings of Gerbert.

Gerbert was without question the most Learned Man of his Time, especially in Profane Learning : for he had to his Study of the Languages and Philosophy joyn'd that of the Mathematicks, wherein he was a great Proficient. He informs us himself that he had compos'd several Tracts of Rhetorick, Arithmetick, and Geometry. He speaks of a Sphere which he had made, and he compos'd a small Treatise of the manner of its Construction. He invented Clocks, and made one at Magdeburgh, which he regulated according to the Motion of the Polar Star, the which he view'd through a Telescope. They likewise attribute to him a Treatise concerning the Astrolabe, written in Dialogue-wise, between him and Leo the Pope's Legat. This Art made him pass for a Magician, and gave rise to the Fable of his being promoted to the Papal Chair by a Contract which he made with the Devil. He had a great Hand in all the Affairs of the State, and especially in those which related to the Church of Rheims ; and was in great repute with the Emperors and the Kings of France. He behav'd himself so well in those difficult times, that he fell into disgrace with none. The Archbishop Adalbero, as well as the Princes and Princesses of his time, and several others made use of his Pen to write their Letters. He wrote likewise several Letters in his own name to several Persons about the Affairs of Church and State, or about particular Affairs, or else about some Points of Learning. There is a Collection made of an Hundred and sixty of them, which are publish'd from the Manuscript in the Library of Papyrus Mason, and printed by the Care of his Brother in the Year 1611. at Paris, with the Letters of John of Salisbury, and Stephen of Tournay. They are penn'd in a very pure Style, and such as is truly Epistolary, with a great deal of Beauty and Spirit, but they do not contain much of Ecclesiastical Affairs. He is likewise the Author of the History of the Acts made by the Council of Rheims against Arnulphus, writ with a great deal of Elegance and Energy ; which shews that he was no less skill'd in Ecclesiastical, than he was in Profane Learning. His Speech to the Council of Mouzon is a farther proof of both ; as well as the Speech which he made, when Pope, for the instructing of Bishops, publish'd by Father Mabillon in the Second Tome of his Analec'ts. In this last Piece he Remonstrates to the Bishops that the higher their Station and Dignity is, the greater Obligations they lye under of answering the height of their Post by their Sanctity and their Merits ; and that their Fall is by so much the more deplorable, by how much the more the height is from which they fall : That God requires more of them than of the rest of the Clergy ; and that their Faults shall meet with a severer Punishment than those of others. He explains to them the Qualifications which St. Paul requires of Bishops in his first Epistle to Timothy. Afterwards he declares against Simony, which was so common in his time, that Bishops gave Money to Archbishops for their Ordination ; Priests, Deacons, and other Clergy-men to Bishops. He exclaims very highly against this abuse, and exhorts the Bishops to whom he directs his Discourse, not to drive such a dishonourable Trade, but to lead an unblameable Life.

FLODOARD Prebendary of Rheims.

Flodoard or Frodoard is not one of the least Ornaments of the Church of Rheims. He was born at Espernay in the year 894. He was Prebendary of the Church of Rheims, and the Scholar of Remy of Auxerre, whom Fulcus had invited to Rheims, to be President of the School of his Canons. In the year 936, he took a Journey to Rome, and in the year 940. he took up a Resolution of going to S. Martin of Tours, because he could not approve of the Promotion of Hugh to the Archbishoprick of Rheims. But Count Hebert caus'd him to be apprehended, and took from him the Revenues belonging to the Church of Rheims, which he was in possession of, and the Church of Cormicy which he govern'd. He was for five Months confin'd to that City, till he was brought to Soissons, where he submitted to the Judgment of the Bishops, who confirm'd the Promotion of Hugh. Then he was restor'd to favour; the Revenues which he possess'd were restor'd to him, and the Church of Coroy given him, instead of Cormicy. He assist'd at the Council of Verdun, wherein Artauldus was elected Archbishop of Rheims; and liv'd in the World to Odalric's time, into whose hands he resign'd his Benefice, and withdrew into the Solitude of a Monastery, where he dyed in the year 966.

This Author has written an History of the Church of Rheims, divided into four Books. He therein gives an Account of the Succession and Lives of the Archbishops, of what they had done or written, and what happened worth the taking notice of under each of them in that Church. The first Book begins with the Apostles, and ends at the death of S. Remy. The Account of the first Bishops is fabulous, and what he says of the following is very uncertain. The Life of S. Remy, the Conversion and Baptism of Clovis take up the greatest and best part of that Book. The second Book contains the Succession and History of the Archbishops of Rheims from S. Remy down to Hincmarus. The third is wholly taken up with the Life of Hincmarus, and with the Abstract of his Writings. The fourth contains the History of Fulcus, and of those who succeeded him down to Odalric. This History was publish'd by Father Sirmond, and printed at Paris in the year 1611. and afterwards by Colvenerius who got it to be printed at Doway in the year 1617.

Beside this Piece, Flodoard did likewise compose a Chronicon (for Monsieur Pichon had no grounds to question whether it were his or no.) It began at the year 877. but the first years are lost, and we have only by us the year 919. and those which follow to the 966. where it ends. Bonderius observes that at Treves there is a Manuscript, which contains several pieces of Poetry of Flodoard; namely, five Books of the Triumphs of the Italian Martyrs and Confessors; three Books of the Triumphs of JESUS CHRIST, and of the Saints of Palestine; and two Books of the Triumphs of JESUS CHRIST at Antioch. But these Pieces have not as yet been publish'd, and no body (as we hear of) has ever seen them since. The Chronicon was publish'd by Monsieur Pichon, and Monsieur Duchesne, in their Collections of the Writers of the History of France.

An ADVERTISEMENT to the following Addition.

As soon as this Volume was printed off, I understood by Father Thierry Ruinard, a Learned Religious Benedictine of the Congregation of S. Maur, that the Treatise of Flodoard concerning the Triumph of the Martyrs, which Bonderius made mention of, was in an ancient Manuscript in the Convent of the unshod Carmelites of that City; and this Father has been pleas'd to communicate the Abstract of that Manuscript to me, which I thought fit to publish.

The ADDITION.

I Have examin'd that Manuscript, the beginning of which is torn; the Work begins at the end of the first Chapter of the third Book. He therein treats of the Martyrs who suffer'd under Valerian's Persecution.

The fourth Book begins with Pope S. Felix, and treats of the Persecutions of Aurelian, Claudius, Numerian, and Dioclesian. He therein speaks of the Popes according to the times wherein they liv'd.

The Fifth and sixth Books are not there, tho' there seems to be nothing left out.

The seventh treats only of the Persecution under Dioclesian.

The eighth has this Title De Persecutione Maximiniani, i. e. Concerning the Persecution under Maximian.

Flodoard munian. It begins with the History of S. Marcel, and of all the Martyrs which are in his false Decretals: Afterwards he speaks of the Martyr'd Saints which are worship'd in Italy. The fifteenth Chapter is concerning S. Afra of Augsburgh. The sixteenth is concerning S. Eusebius the Pope.

The ninth Book makes mention of S. Valentine a Martyr at Rome, afterwards of the Martyrs thereabouts; and of the Decretals of S. Sylvester, Gallicanus, S. John, and S. Paul, and of several other Martyrs, who were at Rome in the time of Julian the APOSTATE.

The tenth Book begins at S. Julius the Pope, and ends with Vitalian and A-Deodate. He therein mentions several other Saints; as for instance, in the second Chapter he speaks of Eusebius, whom he calls Praful, Prelate, who is said to have suffered at Rome under Constance, with Orosius and others: he speaks of S. Eusebius of Vercell, of Victorine the Rhetorician, and of S. Dennis of Milan; he makes mention of the Translation of the latter, made by S. Basil, who sent his Body to S. Ambrose. (I have the Letter of S. Basil by me, directed to S. Ambrose, taken out of an ancient Manuscript, which makes mention of this Translation.) In the third Chapter, where he treats of S. Damasus the Pope, he likewise speaks of S. Jeron. In the eighth Chapter he treats of the Schism of Lawrence, of Paschasius the Deacon----- In the nineteenth of Horswasdas the Pope, of the Peace in the East, of S. Germain of Capua, of the Rettitution of Africa, of S. Remy, of the Conversion of Clovis, of the Crown which he sent to Rome, of the Cenlular Habits which he receiv'd from the Emperor. In the tenth Chapter he speaks of S. John the Pope, of Symmachus, and of Boetius, whom Theodoric caus'd to be put to death. In the twelfth Chapter of Cassiodorus, of what Belisairus did against the Goths in Italy and Africa. Lastly he treats at large of S. Gregory, and of what happened in his Monastery.

The eleventh Book comprehends the History of the Popes from Agatho down to Christophilus. In the fifth Chapter he speaks at large of Boniface of Germany, whom he styles Doctor and Martyr. In the sixth Chapter of Charlemagne Prince of France, who turn'd a Religious. In the seventh Chapter of Pope Stephen II. of his Progress into France, of the miraculous Cure he wrought in the Abby of S. Dennis, &c.

The twelfth Book contains the History from Leo IV. to Leo VII. In the first Chapter he speaks of the Palls of Hincmarus, of the Settling the Octave of the Feast of the Assumption of our Lady. In the second Chapter, of John Bishop of Ravenna. In the third Chapter of Hincmarus and of Charles the Bald. In the fourth Chapter of Fulcus Archbishop of Rheims, and of the several Commissions which the Popes granted him. In the fifth Chapter of the Translation of S. Calixtus the Pope to Rheims, which he calls Urbem Nostram, Our City. He treats at large of the Actions of Formosus, whom (he says) Charles King of France desir'd to send him Panem Benedictum, i. e. some Consecrated Bread.

The thirteenth Book is about the Saints which S. Gregory treats of in his Dialogues, and of other Saints of Italy.

The fourteenth Book is about the Guardian Saints, Martyrs, and others of the Cities of Italy. He ends all by S. Colomban and his Disciples.

At the end is an Epitaph of Flodoard himself.

This Manuscript is almost as ancient as Flodoard.

Flodoard's stile is very plain, without any Ornament and without the least Affectation. He makes a great many Extracts, and relates a vast number of Miracles.

AURELIAN Clerk of the Church of Rheims.

Aurelian Clerk of
of Rheims.

Trithemius makes mention of another Clerk of the Church of Rheims call'd Aurelian, who, he says, was very well skill'd in the Knowledge of the Scriptures, and in good Literature; but above all a good Musician. He makes him the Author of a Tract concerning the Rules of Singing and of Notes, which he says was a very remarkable Volume, intituled, The Compleat Musick Master. He adds, that he likewise compos'd several other Pieces, and that he flourish'd in the Reign of Arnulphus about the year 900. We have nothing of this Author left.

BERNERUS Monk of S. Remy of Rheims.

Bernerus Monk of
S. Remy
of Rheims.

WE ought likewise to reckon among those who were an Ornament to the Church of Rheims Bernerus Monk of S. Remy of Rheims, who was sent in the year 948. with several Monks to establish a Monastical Discipline in the Monastery of Humbliers in Vernandois. He wrote the Life of S. Hunegonda Abbess of Humblieres, published by Father Mabillon in the second Benedictine Century;

tury; and the Account of the Translation of her Body, which is to be met with in the fifth Century. Bernerus He sent several Monks to S. Quentin to be put in the room of those Clerks of the Church of that place, who did not lead regular Lives. He relates in the Account of the Translation of the Relicks of S. Hunegonda, several Miracles which were wrought till the year 965. which shews that he wrote and liv'd beyond that year. But thus much may suffice to speak concerning the Church of Rheims. We proceed to the other Churches of France.

GAUTIER Archbishop of Sens.

THE beginning of this Century Gautier was Archbishop of Sens, who was ordain'd in the year 887. and liv'd to the year 923. He made Constitutions, which remain still among us. They are comprehended in fourteen Articles. Gautier Archbishop of Sens.

The first Prohibits such Abbots and Conventual Priors, who would not appear at the Synod, and were not excus'd; from being admitted into the Church for eight days.

The second prohibits the Religious from receiving any Depositum into their Convents without the permission of the Bishop.

The third orders that they should all eat together in the same Refectory, and all lye together in the same Dormitory.

The fourth imports, that all the separate Apartments of Nunneries shall be pull'd down, except such as were requisite to entertain the Bishop; or proper for the sick; or for any other Cause which the Bishop shall adjudge to be just and necessary.

The fifth, that none of the Religious shall be permitted to go abroad, or to lye out of the Monastery, unless it be but seldom, and upon some lawful occasions.

The sixth, that all the suspicious and unnecessary Doors of these Monasteries shall be shut up.

The seventh prohibits the Ecclesiastical Judges from issuing forth general Excommunications, and from Excommunicating all those who shall Communicate with an Excommunicate Person, unless it be upon some great important occasion, and in such Cases as are enormous.

The eighth enjoyns the Canons or Prebendaries to regulate their Offices, and to behave themselves in them with care and exactness.

The ninth enjoyns them to observe the Rules prescrib'd by the General Council.

The tenth and eleventh order, that the Communities of the Monks or Regular Carions be re-establish'd in those Priories where they were us'd to be, if they have but wherewithal to subsist.

The twelfth, that the Abbots and Conventual Priors shall have in their respective Abbeys and Priories, a sufficient number of Religious, from whom they shall not exact any Pension.

The thirteenth, that the Clerks who lead loose lives shall be shaven by the order of the Bishops, Archdeacons, or other Officers, so that no Mark or Token of their Clerical Tonsure shall be left them.

The fourteenth imports, that when any Country shall be interdicted for the Offence of the Lord or his Bailiffs, that Interdiction shall not be taken off, till such time as satisfaction be made for the Damages which the Parochial Churches shall suffer by reason thereof.

'Tis question'd whether these Constitutions belong'd to this Gautier, or to some other of a more modern date. And indeed they relate more to the Discipline of the succeeding Centuries, than to the Discipline of the Tenth.

Of the other Bishops of FRANCE.

THE other Bishops of France shew'd themselves no less zealous for the keeping up of Discipline and maintaining their Rights, than those we have already mention'd. We have one famous instance of it related by Glaber Monk of Cluny, who liv'd in the following Century. Fulcus Count of Anjou, upon his return from a Journey he made to Jerusalem, being willing to discharge himself of a Vow he had made, caus'd a Monastery to be built in the Territory of Tours, over against the Castle of Loches, which he dedicated according to the Advice of his Wife to the memory of the Cherubims and Seraphims, and not to the memory of any Martyr. Hugh Archbishop of Tours was intreated to perform the Dedication of that Monastery; but he refus'd it till such time as Fulcus should restore to his Church the Revenues which he had contrary to all justice taken from it. Fulcus stomach'd this refusal, went to Rome, and after he had made several Presents to Pope John, he return'd with Cardinal Peter, who afterwards dedicated the Monastery, having a Commission granted by the Pope for for that purpose. As soon as the Bishops of France understood this, They knew (says Glaber) that it was the effect of blind Avarice, which having inclin'd Fulcus to rob the Church, had likewise prevail'd upon the Pope to accept of these Presents which Fulcus had made him of the Revenues which he had unlawfully seiz'd upon; and that by this means he had given rise to a fresh Schism in the Church of Rome. They all abominated this proceeding, looking upon it as an unworthy Action, that he who govern'd the Holy Apostolical See should violate the first Order establish'd by the Apostles and by the Canons, the Custom of the Church, founded on a great many Authorities of Antiquity, which forbids Bishops to exercise any Jurisdiction in another's Diocese, unless the Bishop of that Diocese intreat him, or permit him to do it. For tho' the Pope of Rome be most rever'd upon the account of the Dignity of the Holy Apostolick See, yet he is not permitted in any case whatsoever to violate the Rules prescrib'd by the Canons. And as each Bishop of the Catholick Church is the Husband of his own Church, and the Representative of our Lord: So it is not allowable to any man to undertake any thing in another's Diocese. Glaber adds, that Fulcus notwithstanding these Remonstrances, having caus'd this Church to be dedicated, had no Bishops present but those of his own Dominions, who assisted at it much against their wills; and that it was no sooner finish'd, but the Fabrick was blown down by a storm; which is attributed to the rashness of this proceeding.

The Council of Charroux in the year 989.

In the year 989. a Council was held in the Abbey of S. Saviour of Charroux, in the Diocese of Poitiers, at which assisted the Archbishop of Bordeaux, and the Bishops of Poitiers, Limoges, Perigueux, Saintes, and Angoulême. There was nothing else done there but issuing out Anathemas against those who should rob the Churches of their Revenues, defraud the Poor of their Dues, or should by force apprehend or abuse a Clerk, not bearing Arms, before he were try'd by his Bishop.

The Council of Poitiers in the year 999.

Ten years after there was another Council held in the City of Poitiers, which was call'd by William Count of Poitiers, and consisted of the Archbishop of Bordeaux, and the Bishops of Poitiers, Limoges, Angoulême, and Saintes. They therein confirm'd the Order made in the Council of Charroux against the Usurpators of the Revenue of Churches and of private Persons. And for the putting it in execution, it was order'd that all the Grandees and Judges should cause full Restitution to be made to every one, who had any thing taken from them; and that those who would not submit to their Determinations, should be constrain'd to do it by force. They therein likewise forbade Bishops the exacting any thing for the Administration of Penance and Confirmation; and renew'd the Prohibition made so often against Ecclesiasticks keeping Company with Women.

We shall reckon among the Councils of France the Synod held at Ravenna under Gerbert; because we look upon that Archbishop as a Frenchman; and because it was he alone who made the following Institutions in an Assembly of his Clergy, held the first of May in the year 997.

The Council of Ravenna in the year 997.

The first is a Prohibition of a great Abuse which prevail'd in the Church of Ravenna, according to which they sold to Bishops, at the time of their Consecration, the Body of JESUS CHRIST, and the Holy Chrism to the Arch-Priests of the Diocese. The Eucharist which he speaks of in this place, was a Consecrated Loaf, which was given whole to the Bishop on the Day of his Consecration, and which he kept by him to Communicate thereof for forty days together, as 'tis observ'd in the Roman Decretal.

The second imports, that all the Arch-Priests shall pay to the Sub-Deacons of Ravenna, as an acknowledgment of that Church, an yearly Pension of Two pence.

The third renews the Ancient Canons concerning the necessary qualifications of those who are to be admitted into Holy Orders, and prohibits Bishops from Consecrating Churches out of their own Dioceses, without leave from the Bishop of the place; and from entertaining or keeping those who belong to another's Diocese, till they have Letters Demissory from their Bishop. He likewise forbids the receiving any thing for the Burial of the Dead, unless their Friends or Relations should give any thing voluntarily.

Lastly we shall refer to this place that which happen'd in France and at Rome about the Marriage and Divorce of King Robert and Queen Bertha.

The marriage of King Robert with Bertha.

About the end of this Century, that Prince being a Widdower by the Death of Queen Lutgarde his first Wife, had marry'd Bertha, Sister to Radulphus the Simple, King of Burgundy, who was the Widow of Eudes the first, Count of Chartres. But forasmuch as she was his Kinswoman, and he had formerly stood Godfather to one of her Children, tho' he had taken the Advice of several Bishops of his Kingdom about it, yet the Pope oppos'd this Marriage as being Null, and contracted between Persons, who according to Law could not marry together. Robert did what he could to confirm this Marriage, and spoke about it to Leo Pope Gregory the Fifth's Legat in France, who made him believe that he would obtain of the Pope what he desir'd, provided he would cause Arnulphus to be re-establish'd in the Archbishoprick of Rheims. In the mean time, notwithstanding the Judgment which was pass'd in favour of that Archbishop, Pope Gregory V. held a Council at Rome in the year 998. in the presence of the Emperor Otto III. at which assisted Gerbert, at that time Archbishop of Ravenna, and seven and twenty Bishops of Italy. In this Council he declar'd that King Robert ought to part from his Kinswoman Bertha, whom he had marry'd contrary to the Laws, and do Penance for seven years together, according to the Degrees set down by the Canons; and if he would not, he should be Anathematiz'd: That Bertha should submit to the same Penalty; and he Excommunicated Archembold Archbishop of Tours, who had celebrated that Marriage, and the Bishops of France, who had either Assisted or Consented thereto, till such time as they should come and give the Holy See satisfaction. This Sentence of the Pope made such an Impression on the minds of Men (if we will believe Peter Damien in the case) that all the King's Domesticks, except two or three, abandon'd him, The Council and would no longer have any Conversation with him; and even caus'd the Vessels out of which he of Rome in had either eat or drunk to be burnt. Let the Case be how it will, King Robert at last giving ear to the year the Admonitions of Abbo the Abbot, parted with Bertha within two or three years after; and Leo IX. 998. under Gregory V. (according as Ives of Charres relates it) says that they came to Rome with the Bishops, to obtain their Absolution, and to get their Penance mitigated. The Author of the Life of Abbo does not say that Robert went to Rome; but that he confessed his Fault both publicly and privately: that he asked pardon, and did Penance for it. That which is most evident is, that the Marriage was of no longer force.

In the same Council, the Pope pass'd several other Sentences. The first in favour of the Church of Mersburgh, which had been rais'd to a Bishoprick by the holy See, and by the Councils held under Otto, and afterwards destroy'd out of Council by Otto II. He restores to it its Dignity of being an Episcopal See.

The second relates to the Person of the Bishop of Mersburgh, call'd Gislair, who had quitted that Church to be Archbishop of Magdeburgh. It was order'd, that if he had been requir'd by the Clergy and Laity of Magdeburgh to take upon him that Archbishoprick, he should still hold it: That if that had not been done, and he could prove that neither Ambition nor Avarice moved him to take upon him that Archbishoprick, he should return to his first Church without being depos'd. But if he could not deny but that he was induced to it by some one or other of these Motives, he should be depriv'd of both Churches. This Gislair did not submit to the Sentence of Gregory, but held both these Churches. Whereupon he was accus'd in a Council at Rome, held under Sylvester II. Successor to Gregory V. who suspended him for some time, and order'd his Nuncio's in Germany to cite him. But that Bishop prevail'd upon them by Bribery to put it off, and afterwards pleaded for his Excuse his being sick of the Palsy. At last he appear'd before a Council held at Aix-la-Chapelle, where he demanded an Appeal to a General Council. Lastly, The Emperor Henry having sent for him to Dronburgh, and remonstrated to him that he ought to return to his Church of Mersburgh, he desired a few days to consider on it, and dy'd in the Interim.

The third relates to the Church of Puy in Velay. Guy Bishop of that City, had elected for his Successor his Nephew Stephen, without the Consent of Clergy and Laity: however, after the Death of Guy, the Archbishop of Bourges and the Bishop of Nevers had ordain'd Stephen. The Council declares this Ordination to be null and void; depose Stephen; excommunicates the Prelates who had ordain'd him, till such time as they should come and give the Holy See satisfaction; grants leave to the Clergy and Laity of Velay to elect a Bishop; desires the Pope might consecrate him whom they should elect; and exhorts King Robert not to support Stephen, but to stand by him who should be elected by the Clergy and Laity. This Sentence was put in Execution; Theodarde was elected by the Clergy and Laity, and ordain'd by Sylvester II. Successor to Gregory V. as we learn by the Fragment of a Letter of that Pope, related by Father Dachery in the Advertisement to the Reader before the Ninth Tome of his Spicilegium, wherein he has given us the Acts of that Council more compleat than they are in the Edition of the Councils by Father Labbé. He takes notice in the same place that Gregory V. held a Council at Rome, wherein Gualdalde, who had seiz'd upon the Episcopal see of the Church of Osna or Vich, in the Province of Catalonia, had been depos'd, as appears by a Letter of Gregory V. which Father Dachery tells us is in the hands of Monfieur Baluzius. 'Tis very probable that this was done in the same Council, where Otto III. publish'd an Edict, directed to the Archbishops, Abbots, Marquisses, Counts; and to all the Judges of Italy; whereby he declares that all the Deeds of Alienation of the Church Revenues, even tho' leas'd out for 99 years, shall not be of force any longer than the life time of him who shall make them; and that there shall be no such Deeds made but for the Advantage of those Churches who are to be maintain'd out of them. This Edict is dated October 17. in the year 998. and 'tis observ'd that it was publish'd by Gerbert in the Synod which turn'd Arnulphus out of the Archbishoprick of Milan.

In this Century there was no less care taken of settling the Monastical Discipline of France, than of the Ecclesiastical Discipline; and as the Bishops were diligent in reforming the Clergy and Laity; so there were some holy Abbots, who set themselves, and that with a great deal more success, upon reforming the Monastical Order, which was the beginning of that Century in a very lamentable Condition. Most of the Monasteries having been ruin'd by the Normans, were abandon'd, their Revenues were in possession of Laicks, and the Abbots were Seculars. If there were any Monks still left in the Monasteries, they were such as observ'd no order; and were so far from living according to their Rule, that they did not so much as know it.

In this Condition was the Monastical Order, when God rais'd up Berno, Monk of Antun, to be the Restorer of it. He began his Reformation in the Monasteries of Joigny and Baume, and in several others of which he was Abbot. For a Custom was then in Use, that one and the same Abbot held several Abbeys, or at least several Monasteries which depended upon him. He had for his Companions and Disciples Odo and Adegrin. In the year 910. William Count of Auvergne and Duke of Aquitain; having founded the Abbey of Cluny, committed it to the Government of Berno, who put twelve Monks into it, and took likewise care of the Monasteries of Hols, Maffay, and Souigny, who were all under his Conduct, and embrac'd the same way of Living. Berno dying in the year 927. had for his Successor Odo, the Son of Abbo, born at Tours in the year 879. He had been educated by Fulcw Count of Anjou, and made Canon of S. Martin of Tours at nineteen years of Age.

The founding of the Cluny.

Some time after, being come to Paris, he became a Disciple of Remy of Auxerre; and afterwards resolv'd to dedicate himself to God, he embrac'd the Monastical Life in the year 909. in the Monastery of Baume, under the Conduct of Berno. Odo extended the Reformation of Cluny to a great many other Monasteries, and carried it as far as Rome it self, to which he made three Journeys. The first in the year 936. The second in the year 938. and the last in the year 942. being call'd thither by the Popes to be the Mediator of the Peace between the Princes of Italy. He dy'd at Tours in the year 942. at his return from his last Journey to Rome.

He had for his Successor Ademar, or Aymar; next him was S. Macol, who was employ'd by Hugh Capet in the Reformation of almost all the Monasteries of France. He dy'd in the year 994. leaving for his Successor Odilo, who had been elected three years before his death. This last was Abbot of Cluny for the space of Fifty six years.

ODO Abbot of Cluny.

Odo Abbot of Cluny.

Berno apply'd himself more to the settling of his Order, than to study: but Odo apply'd himself to both, and compos'd several Pieces at different times, and in all the Conditions of his Life. When he was Canon, he made an Abridgment of the Morals of S. Gregory, and of the Hymns and Anthems in honour of S. Martin. When he was only Monk, he made three Books concerning Priesthood, upon the Prophecy of Jeremy, dedicated to Turpio Bishop of Limoges; They are intituled Collationes sive Colloquia; and others call them by the Title of Occupationes. When he was Abbot, he wrote the Life of S. Geraud or Gerard, Count of Aurillac, in four Books, dedicated to Aimo Abbot of Tulle; and the Life of S. Martial of Limoges; an Account of the Translation of the Body of S. Martin; a Piece wherein S. Martin is equalliz'd to the Apostles; several Sermons and a Panegerick of S. Benedict. These Tracts are printed in the Library of Cluny, with Hymns upon the Holy Sacrament and S. Magdalene. An ancient Author of his Life takes notice, that being at Rome, he corrected the Life of S. Martin; and speaks of a Book about the Coming of S. Benedict into a Village near Orleans. They likewise attribute to Odo the Life of S. Gregory of Tours, related by Surius. Father Mabillon takes notice that in the Library of the Reform'd Carmelites of Paris, there is a Manuscript which formerly belong'd to the Monastery of S. Julian of Tours, wherein there is a large Treatise in Verse, intituled, Occupationes Odonis Abbatis. He adds that this Piece is divided into four Books; the first concerning the Creation of the World; the second concerning the Formation of Mankind; the third concerning his Fall; and the fourth concerning the Corruption of Nature. 'Tis by a mistake that they attribute to this Odo the Life of S. Maurus, which belongs to Odo Abbot of S. Maurus of Fosseux. They likewise falsely attribute to him several Chronicons which Thomas of Lucca compos'd under the Name of Odo, as it has been observ'd by the Author of the History of the Counts of Angers, related in the Tenth Tome of the Spicilegium. Sigibert gives Odo the Title of Musician, and says that he was a very proper Person to Compose and Pronounce Sermons, and to make Hymns upon the Saints.

THE Life of Odo was written by one of his Disciples, call'd John, whom he had met in Italy in his Journey in the year 938. and brought along with him to Pavia, where he 'caus'd him to take upon him the Monastick Life. It is divided into three Books, and printed in the Library of Cluny, and in the fifth Benedictine Century by Father Mabillon, who has likewise given us another Life of Odo, written by Nalgodus, who liv'd about Two hundred years after the death of that Abbot.

ODILO Abbot of Cluny.

Odilo Abbot of Clu-ny.

Odilo has left us but a few Pieces: which are, the Life of S. Maiol his Predecessor; four Hymns in his Praise; several Letters to S. Fulbert Bishop of Chartres; the Life of S. Adelaide the Empress, Otho the first's Wife; Fourteen Sermons upon the Festivals of Jesus Christ and the Blessed Virgin; a Decree concerning the Prayers for the Dead; and three Letters related by Father Luke Dachery in the second Tome of the Spicilegium, with a Letter of Pope John XIX. who reprov'd him for refusing the Archbishoprick of Lions. He is lookt upon as the first Founder of the Feasts of All-Saints, and of that of the Commemoration of the Dead. He liv'd to the year 1042.

A B B O Abbot of Fleury.

A B B O or Abbo, Monk of Fleury or S. Benedict upon the Loire, was born at Orleans, and instructed and Educated in the Schools belonging to the Monastery of Fleury, where he studied under Walfaldus the Abbot; and for several years together had the Government of the Schools of that Monastery. He went afterwards to Paris and Rheims, to study Philology and Astronomy; but making no great Progress in them, he return'd to Orleans, where he learnt Musick. From thence he was invited over to England, where he taught publicly for the space of Two years, after which he return'd to the Monastery of Fleury, of which he was made Abbot. This did not hinder him from prosecuting his Studies. He had some Differences to adjust with Arnulphus Bishop of Orleans, which occasion'd him to write an Apology directed to the Kings Hugh and Robert, wherein he exhorts them to turn out Hereticks; among whom he reckons such as believ'd that the Revenues of the Church belong'd to them, and who had made an unlawful Seizure upon them. He would have the same thing done to those Bishops who assert that the Churches and Altars belong to them. He observes that Jesus Christ does not say that the Church is the Church of S. Peter, but that his Church is built upon S. Peter. From whence he concludes that his Successors cannot say that the Churches which they govern, are theirs, much less can they make a gain of them, as he says they then did every day.

[How much this Abbot is mistaken in the latter part of his Remark (which says, That our Saviour says his Church was built upon S. Peter) will appear to any who consult our Lord's Words in the Original, Matth. 16. 18. Καὶ ὁ δὲ σοι λέγω, ὅτι σὺ εἰ Πέτρος, καὶ ἐπὶ ταύτῃ τῇ Πέτρῃ ἀικοδομήσω μὲ τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν: which words in our Version run thus, And I say unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church. Where we may observe that he does not say, καὶ ἐπὶ σοι, or ἐπὶ τῇ Πέτρῃ, but ἐπὶ ταύτῃ τῇ Πέτρῃ, &c. from whence it must be concluded that he does not mean the Person, but the Faith of S. Peter, the Rock upon which he would build his Church. This Remark seems pertinent, since the Romaniſts from this Text, and that of S. John, chap. 21. v. 15, 16, &c. pretend to prove the Infallibility and Universality of the Pope.]

He likewise in his Apology gives an account of what passed in the Council of S. Dennis about the Year 995. where he himself was present, wherein having maintain'd against the Bishops, the Right of which the Monks and Laicks had of possessing several Tithes, the People rose up in Arms against S. Dennis the Bishops, who were forc'd to fly for it; and forasmuch as Sigwin Archbishop of Sens, who was at 995. the Head of them had been wounded in the Flight, Abbo was accus'd of being the Author of this Sedition. He made his Defence in this Epistle. He wrote a Letter to Bernard Abbot of Beaulieu in the Diocess of Limoges, to dissuade him from giving a Sum of Money which the Count of Thoulouse and the Archbishop of Bourges would exact from him, for the making him Bishop of Cahors. That Abbot having resolv'd upon taking a Journey to Jerusalem, was dissuaded from it by Abbo, who advis'd him rather to go to Rome, whither he retir'd upon Mount Gargan; and being afterwards intreated to return into the World, to relieve his Relations, he again consult'd Abbo about what he ought to do in the Case, who in a very elegant Letter return'd him this Answer, That he ought not to think of quitting his Solitude to involve himself in the Affairs of this World. As to the Question which Bernard propos'd, Whether he ought to keep or leave his Abbey? he return'd him this Answer, That Circumstances would direct him what to do; and recommends to him the using his utmost Discretion to examine in his own Conscience, which of the two was the most honourable for him, and most beneficial to others: because on one side 'tis a great Duty to discharge the Functions of an Abbot, when one can conduct Souls to God: but that on the other side, when there is no hopes of being able to do any good, by reason of the Wickedness of those one has to govern, 'tis more convenient to retire, to provide for ones own Salvation. Sometime after Abbo went to Rome to obtain a Confirmation of the Priviledges of his Church. He there met with Pope John XV. upon the Holy See, who was not (says Aimoin the Author of his Life) such an one as he wish'd him, or as he ought to be. Having this Pope in detestation, he return'd after he had offer'd up his Prayers in the Holy Places of God's Worship. Upon his return from this Journey, he wrote a Letter to the Abbot of Fulda, publish'd by Monsieur Baluzius in the first Tome of his Collection of Miscellanies. He was afterwards sent a second time by King Robert to Pope Gregory V. Successor to John, who threatned to lay the Kingdom under an Interdiction upon the Account of Arnulphus Archbishop of Rheims. He met this Pope at Spoletto, was very kindly receiv'd by him, and obtain'd of him a Priviledge for his Abbey, by which the Bishop of Orleans was prohibited entring into that Monastery, unless he were invited thither; and the Monks were permitted to celebrate Divine Service in their Monastery always, even tho' the whole Kingdom were laid under an Interdiction by the Pope. He adjust'd the Business of Arnulphus; and having engag'd his word to the Pope, that that Archbishop should be releas'd out of Prison and re-establish'd, he was intrusted to carry the Pall to him. Upon his return to France, what he had promis'd was accordingly done, and he gave the Pope notice of it. About the end of his Life, he re-establish'd the Monastery of Squires in Gascony, which was call'd the Monastery of the Rule, and in the Country Language la Reoule, where he was kill'd in the year 1004. in an Insurrection which the Monks or Women of that Country rais'd against him. Monsieur Baluzius has publish'd a Circular Letter written by the Monks of Fleury, upon his Death.

Abbo Abbot of Fleury.

Besides the Apology and the Letters of Abbo which we have already mention'd, the Author of his Life makes likewise mention of the following Tracts. Of a Letter in Hexameter Verse, in praise of the Emperor Otho: The Verses begin and end with the same Letter, and may be read six manner of ways, which make so many different Senses. Of a Treatise directed to Odilo Abbot of Cluny, about the Harmony of the Gospel: and of another Tract concerning the Cycles of all the Years, from the Birth of Jesus Christ down to his time, which Sigibert says is a Commentary on the Treatise of Vistorius. They likewise attribute to him the Abstract of the Lives of the Popes, taken out of the History of Anastasius the Librarian, printed at Mayence in the year 1603. The Life of S. Edmond King of England and Martyr. Father Mabillon has given us an Excellent Collection of Canons compos'd by Abbo, and dedicated to the Kings Hugh and Robert, in the second Tome of his Analecets.

Abbo's stile is very pure and elegant, and his Conceptions are accurate: He was very well vers'd in the Rules of Discipline and Morality. His Zeal for the Monastical Order, and the Interest of the Monks, created him a great many Enemies: because, as he says himself, he had always in his Thoughts the protection of the Monks; and had consulted their Interest upon all occasions, and oppos'd all who annoy'd them.

AIMOIN Monk of Fleury.

Aimoin Monk of Fleury.

THE Life of Abbo was written by Aimoin Monk of the same Monastery. He was of Aquitaine, the Son of Anetrude, the Kinswoman of Gerald, Lord of Anbeterre. He embrac'd the Monastick Life in the year 970. under Oilbolde Abbot of S. Benedikt upon the Loire; and flourish'd under his Successor Abbo, whose intimate Friend he was. He attended him in his Journey to Gascogne, and after his death return'd to his Monastery. The principal Piece of this Aimoin is his History of France dedicated to Abbo. It was printed at París by Badius Ascensius in the year 1514. under the Name of Aimonius. Fifty years after Monsieur Pitbou or Pithæus, caus'd it to be re-printed from a Manuscript, under the true Name of Aimoin. It was publish'd in the year 1567. at the Printing House of Vexel. In the year 1603. James of Breuil, Monk of S. Germain del Prez, caus'd it to be printed, and pretended that it was writ by Aimoin, a Monk of S. Germain. Ten years after Freherus insert'd it in the Body of the History of France, which he caus'd to be printed at Hanouer. Lastly, The Messieurs Duchesne insert'd it in the Third Tome of their Collections, printed in the year 1641. This History is divided into five Books; But of Aimon's there are only the three first Books, and one and forty Chapters of the Fourth, which ends at the founding of the Monastery of Fleury. The rest is compil'd by a Monk of very late standing.

Aimoin is likewise the Author of two Books of the Miracles of S. Benedikt, which are the second and third Books of these four, which are in the Library of Fleury; of the Life of S. Abbo, mention'd before; of a Sermon upon the Festival of S. Benedikt; and of several Verses upon the first founding of the Monastery of Fleury, printed in the Third Tome of the Collection of Duchesne; together with another Treatise in Verse concerning the Translation of the Relicks of S. Benedikt. He is not altogether so elegant as his Master Abbo; But he wrote with great accuracy, and his Narration is plain and pleasant, without having any thing of that flatness of stile which several other Authors of that time had.

The Abbey of Lobes, in the Diocess of Cambray and Principality of Liege, founded in the Seventh Century by S. Ursmar, preserv'd the Monastical Discipline till the Tenth Century, at which time its reputation was farther increas'd by several Abbots, who for their Piety were deservedly advanc'd to the Bishoprick of Liege, and recommended themselves to the World by their Writings.

STEPHEN Abbot of Lobes.

Stephen Abbot of Lobes.

THE first is Stephen, whom Fuleuin calls a Learned Man, and of whom he says, that he observ'd the Rule of the Canons: which made People believe that he was a Secular Abbot. The same Author adds, that he has cast into a more polish'd stile the ancient Life of S. Lambert, which was written in a coarse dress, and he made a very famous piece of Prose out of it: That he likewise made another small Treatise, compos'd of several fine Thoughts extracted out of Holy Writ; in which he has insert'd the Chapters and Collects of each Festival in the year: and that in the Preface he observes that he had been advanc'd to Mets, by dedicating his Treatise to Robert Bishop of that City. Sigibert says likewise, that he made a piece of Prose upon the Trinity, and upon the Invention of S. Stephen the Proto-Martyr. Others say, that they are certain Offices appointed for these Festivals.

The

The Life of S. Lambert was publish'd in the History of the Bishops of Liege, by Chapeauville. This Stephen was ordain'd Bishop of Liege in the year 903. Stephen Abbot of Lobes.

After his death the Bishoprick of Liege was contested, as was formerly hinted, between Hilduin and Riquier; but the latter being Abbot of Lobes, carried it from the other. In his time the study of the Liberal Arts and Sciences (says Fulcuin) began to flourish in the Abbey of Lobes, and the most famous Professors of them were Scamin, Theoduin, and Ratherius. We have already given a particular Account of the Transactions and Writings of the last of these Persons. Trithemius likewise attributes to Hilduin, who was Competitor with Riquier for the Bishoprick of Liege, the Title of Abbot of Lobes, and assures us that he wrote the History of the Abbots of that Monastery, and several Sermons; but 'tis probable that he was mistaken, and that he took Hilduin for Fulcuin.

FULCUIN Abbot of Lobes.

IN the end of this Century Fulcuin or Folcuin was chosen Abbot of Lobes. He left a well penn'd History of that Abbey, from its first founding by Landelin and S. Ursmar to his time, which was publish'd by Father D. Luke Dachery in the Sixth Tome of his Spicilegium. He has likewise compos'd a Treatise of the Miracles of S. Ursmar, referr'd by Henschenius to April 18. and the Life of S. Fulcuin Bishop and is contain'd in the first Part of the Fourth Benedictine Century by Father Mabillon. Fulcuin was chosen Abbot in the year 975. and dy'd in 990. Fulcuin Abbot of Lobes.

HERIGER Abbot of Lobes.

HE had for his Successor Heriger, the Friend of Notger Bishop of Liege, whose Works are compile'd in the following Catalogue, collected by the Author of the Continuation of Fulcuin's History, viz. The History of the Bishops of Liege: The Life of S. Ursmar in Verse: A Letter to Hugh about several Questions, and two other Tracts, which were never publish'd: A Treatise by way of Dialogue between him and Aldebold Clerk of the Church of Liege, and afterward Bishop of Utrecht, concerning the Dissensions of the Church, and the Coming of our Saviour: And another Treatise containing a Collection of several Passages of the Fathers touching the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST against Paschasius Rathbertus. The History of the Bishops of Liege was publish'd by Chapeauville, and his Treatise of our Saviour's Body and Blood is that Anonymous Piece set forth by Father Celso. The Life of S. Ursmar is in Henschenius referr'd to April 18. and the other Works are only in Manuscript. Some other Pieces are also attributed to him, viz. the Life of S. Berlenda referr'd by Bollandus to Febr. 3. and by Father Mabillon to the third Benedictine Century, and that of S. Candoalde, which is inserted under the Name of Notger by Surius to March 19. This Abbot died in the year 1007. Heriger Abbot of Lobes.

ALDEBOLD Bishop of Utrecht.

* Aldebold Clerk of the Church of Liege, and afterwards chosen Bishop of Utrecht about the year 1009. wrote the History of the Emperor Henry II. which is contain'd in the Lives of the Saints writ by Surius in July 14. and in the Fifth Tome of Canisius's Antiquities. Trithemius likewise makes mention of a Hymn in Commendation of the Cross; of another in praise of the Virgin Mary; and of some other Works of the same Author, as well in Prose as Verse. He died A. D. 1027. Aldebold
Bishop of Utrecht.
[* After having left his Employments in the Court of the Emperor Henry II. whom he serv'd in quality of a Privy Counsellor and General of his Armies, he became a Monk of Lobes.]

ALBERT

ALBERT Abbot of Gemblours.

Albert or Olbert Abbot of Gemblours, is likewise one of the Writers who proceeded from the Abbey of Lobes. Siegebert informs us, that he was a Person illustrious for his profound Skill in Human Literature and Ecclesiastical Affairs, as also by reason of his great Zeal for Religion, and that he render'd his Name immortal by writing the Lives of the Fathers, and composing Hymns in Honour of the Saints; but more especially in regard that he was Tutor to Buchard Bishop of Wormes, and incited him to the study of Divinity, and caus'd him to publish his Volume of Canons so useful to the whole World, which was written and dictated by him, and compil'd by the diligence of that Albert. Siegebert does not say that he compos'd those Lives of the Fathers, but only that he wrote them with his Hand; nevertheless Trithemius makes him the Author of them.

ODILO Monk of S. Medard at Soissons.

Odilo Monk of S. Medard at Soissons flourish'd about the year 920. and wrote a Book concerning the Translation of the Relicks of S. Sebastian Martyr, and S. Gregory Pope, to the Monastery of S. Medard, dedicated to Ingram Dean of that Abbey, who was ordain'd Bishop of Laon, A. D. 932. Therefore Odilo's Piece precedes that year. It is refer'd by Bollandus to January 20. and to the fourth Benedictine Century by Father Mabillon, who has likewise given us in the same Volume, the History of the Translation of the Relicks of S. Tiburtius, of S. Marcellinus, and of S. Peter and his Companions, made in the same Monastery A. C. 828. and written by the same Author.

GERARD Abbot of S. Medard at Soissons.

Gerard Abbot of S. Medard at Soissons, or rather Dean of S. Medard at Soissons, flourish'd in the middle of the Tenth Century, having found an ancient Manuscript of the Life of S. Romanus, he cast it into a more polite stile, and made another of it in Verse; which he presented to Hugh Archbishop of Roan, as it appears by the Epistle Dedicatory, publish'd by Father Mabillon in the first Tome of his Analec'ts. Of these Works there is only extant the Ancient Life of Romanus, that he corrected, and which was set forth by Monfieur Rigaud, or Rigultius.

JOHN Abbot of Arnulphus at Metz.

John Abbot of S. Arnulphus at Metz, or John Monk of Gorze, and afterward Abbot of S. Arnould or Arnulphus at Metz, flourish'd there in the time of Adalberon, who was Bishop of that City. He wrote the Life of S. Goldesinda Abbess of Metz, and the History of her Translation, with the Life of S. John Abbot of Gorze his Patron, dedicated to Thierry Bishop of Metz. Father Mabillon has inserted these Works in different Tomes of his Benedictine Centuries.

HELPERIC or CHILPERIC Monk of S. Gal.

Helperic or Chilperic Monk of S. Gal. compos'd in the year 980. a Treatise of the Calendar, the Preface to which was publish'd by Father Mabillon, in the first Tome of his Analec'ts, and which is entirely preserv'd in Manuscript in the Library of S. Germain des Prez.

BERCHIER

BERTHIER Priest of Verdun.

Berthier Priest of Verdun wrote a Compendious History of the Bishops of that Church, and dedicated it to Dado, who was then Governour of that Country. It was publish'd by Father Dachery in the Twelfth Tome of the Spicilegium. He flourish'd about the year 987.

This Work of Berthier was continu'd by an Anonymous Monk of S. Viton at Verdun down to Thierry the Fourteenth Bishop of that City. Afterward Lawrence Monk of Liege, and at last of the same Monastery of S. Viton at Verdun, made a Supplement and Continuation of that History to the time of Alberon, that is to say, to the middle of the Twelfth Century. These Works are follow'd by another Continuation in the same Tome of Father Dachery's Spicilegium. A nameless Monk.

ADSO Abbot of Luxeuil.

There were two Monks in the Tenth Century who bore the Name of Adso: The first of these, Adso Abbot of Luxeuil, wrote about the year 960. a Treatise of the Miracles of S. Vaudalbert, the third Abbot of Luxeuil, which is contain'd in the first Tome of the Benedictine Centuries. The second Abbot of Deuores in the Diocess of Bourges, is the Author of the Life of S. Bercaire; of that of S. Basile Confessor; of the History of the Translation and Miracles of the latter; of the Life of S. Frobert Abbot of Celles; of the History of the Translation of his Relicks; and lastly of the Life of S. Mansuet the first Bishop of Toul. All these Works, except the last, are in the second and fourth Benedictine Centuries of Father Mabillon; the last was publish'd by Monsieur Bosquet. This Author flourish'd about the year 980. and died in 992. Adso Abbot of Deuores.

LETALDUS Monk of S. Memin.

Letalus Monk of the Abbey of Micy or S. Memin in the Diocess of Orleans, flourish'd about the end of the Tenth Century. He wrote the History of the Miracles of S. Maximin or Memin, Monk of the first Founder of that Monastery, publish'd by Father Mabillon in the first Tome of his Benedictine Centuries; and it is probable that he is the same with the Author of the Life of S. Julian Bishop of Mans. S. Memin.

CHAP. IV.

The History of the Churches of Germany.

THE Emperor Arnulphus the last of the Branch of the Carlian Stock, who obtain'd Germany for his Inheritance, dying in the year 899. left but one lawful Son nam'd Lewis, who being only eight years old, was committed to the Care of Orbo Duke of Saxony, who married his Sister; and of Hatto Archbishop of Mayence: Soon after he became Heir of Lorrain, of which Zuentibold his Bastard Brother was in possession. But he was not able to subdue Italy, nor to cause himself to be crown'd Emperor; neither did he live long, but dyed between eighteen and twenty years old, A. C. 911. leaving only two Daughters, named Placidia and Matbildis. The first was married to Conrade Duke of Franconia, and the other to Henry the Fowler, Duke of Saxony, and Son of Duke Orbo. The Estates of the Realm designing to confer the Crown upon that Orbo, he desired to be excus'd by reason of his old Age, and advis'd them to chuse Conrade Duke of Franconia, but his Son The Revolutions of the Empire of Germany in the Tenth Century.

The Revolutions of the Empire of Germany in the Tenth Century.

Henry Duke of Saxony, whose Moderation was not so great, claim'd a Right to part of the Kingdom, as having married one of the Heiresses, revolted against Conrade, wag'd War with him, and gain'd the Battle; however this Advantage prov'd ineffectual, and Conrade always remain'd in possession of the Throne, till his death; which happen'd in the year 918. When he left Henry Duke of Saxony his Heir, and order'd the Lords to wait upon him with the Crown and the Royal Ornaments. They perform'd his last Will, and acknowledg'd Henry Duke of Saxony, surnam'd the Fowler, as King of Germany. This valiant and prudent Prince kept in awe Arnulphus Duke of Bavaria; defeated the Hungarians who ravag'd Germany; overcame the Vandals; subdu'd Bohemia; and after having reign'd Seventeen years, dyed A. C. 936. The Lords substituted in his place his eldest Son Osbo, afterwards surnam'd the Great; against whom his Brother Henry made War, but was defeated, and mortally wounded in a Fight. The Dukes Gilbert and Everard, who were Authors of this Revolt, perish'd in another Engagement near Andernac, and left Osbo in the quiet possession of his Dominions, which he enlarg'd considerably; and joyn'd to them the Kingdom of Italy, with the Imperial Dignity, which pass'd to his Son Osbo, and to his Grandson of the same Name, as it has been already related.

Under these Emperors, who were no less Religious than Valiant, the Churches of Germany were in a flourishing Condition, by the means of a great number of Reverend Bishops, the Writings of several Authors, and the propagation of the Gospel among the Northern People. This is what we shall proceed to shew in giving an Account of such Persons illustrious for their Learning and Sanctity, as Germany has produc'd in this Century.

S. ULRIC Bishop of Augsburgh.

S. Ulric Bishop of Augsburgh.

WE shall begin with S. Ulric Bishop of Augsburgh. He was descended from an Ancient Family in Germany, the Son of Hugpaut and Thepirga; He began to study in the Monastery of S. Gal, and was taken from thence to be put under the Tuition of Adalberon Bishop of Augsburgh, in the year 909. He made a Journey to Rome, and during his residence there Adalberon died, and left Hiltin his Successor, after whose death Ulric was nominated Bishop of Augsburgh by King Henry, A. C. 924. He was highly esteem'd by that Prince, and the Emperor Osbo had a particular respect for him. This Prelate, in like manner, made two other Journeys to Rome; one about the year 956. and the other near the end of his Life. He dyed A. C. 973. in the 83d year of his Age, after having governed the Church of Augsburgh during Fifty years.

His Life, which was written by an Author of those times named Gerard, who was Contemporary with him, contains many remarkable Passages. It is there related, that besides the Divine Office, which he sung every day with his Canons in the Choir of his Church; He was wont to recite in particular the Offices of the Blessed Virgin, of the Holy Cross, and of All the Saints, with the entire Plalter; and that he was accusom'd to say one, two, or three Masses accordingly, as the time would permit: That in Lent, after having said Matins at Night, he continu'd his Prayers till the hour that the Bell rung to the Vigils for the dead, which he sung with the Choir, and afterwards the * Prime; That he continued in the Church at Prayers till the Canons return'd with the Cross to celebrate Mass, at which he assisted, and kissed the Hand of the Priest that officiated: That after Mass he sung † Tierce with the Canons, and that he remain'd in the Church till the Sexte; when he visited the Altars, and kneel'd before them, singing a Miserere and a De Profundis: That then he return'd to his Camber, to wash his Face, and to prepare for saying Mass: That when it was said, and Vespers after it, he was wont to visit the poor of the Hospital, to wash the Feet of Twelve amongst them; and to give every one a penny: That at his departure from thence, he sat down at Table; that after having eat, he said his Compline, and retir'd: That he spent all the days of Lent after this manner, till that of the Indulgence, commonly call'd Palm-Sunday: That on that day, he went early in the Morning to the Church of S. Afer, where he sung a Trinity-Mass, and made a Benediction of the Palm-Tree Branches, which he carried about in Procession, accompanied with the Clergy and People, with the Gospel, the Cross, the Banners, and an Image representing our Saviour sitting on an Ass, as far as Mount Perleich, where he was met by the Choir of Canons, and part of the People, who cover'd the way with Palm-Tree Branches or Garments: That he made an Exhortation to them upon our Saviour's Passion, and that they return'd together to sing Mass in the Cathedral Church: That during the three following days, he held a Synodical Assembly: That on Holy Thursday he celebrated Divine Service, Consecrated the Holy Chrysm and other Oyls, and distributed them among his Clergy: That afterward he went, according to his usual Custom, to visit the Hospital, from whence he return'd to the Church; Clothed twelve poor Men in the Vestry, and wash'd their feet: That on Good-Friday he assisted at the whole Office; That after having Administered the Holy Sacrament to the People as on the preceding day, he laid up the rest of the Eucharist, in order to bury it, according to the Custom of those times; and that at Night he eat Bread and drank Beer, without sitting down at Table; That on Holy Saturday, after the Nocturnal Office, the Repetition of the Psalter, the Singing of the Three Litanies, the Blessing of the Tapers, and the S. Ulric Reading of the Lessons, he went in Procession to S. John's Church, where he baptiz'd three Infants, and then return'd to Celebrate Mass, to Administer the Holy Sacrament to the People, and to say Vespers: That afterwards he distributed Victuals to a great many Persons: That on Easter-Day, after the Prime Office, he usually went to S. Ambrose's Church, where he celebrated the Trinity Mass, and return'd from thence in Procession, carrying the Image of our Saviour with the Gospel; the lighted Tapers and the Incense to S. John Baptists Church, where he Sung Tierce, and from thence to the Cathedral, where he sung Mass and administred the Sacrament to all the Assistants: Afterward he gave Provisions to the Canons of his Cathedral, and to the Clergy of S. Afra's Church distributing to them Lambs Flesh and pieces of Bacon, which had been blessed at Mass, and gave them a very splendid Entertainment. It is also observable, that he was wont to visit his Diocess every Four years; to instruct the People; to administer the Sacrament of Confirmation, and to reform his Clergy.

S. Ulric
Bishop of Augsburgh.

I shall take no notice of a great number of Miracles that are related in this Life of S. Ulric, nor of those that were written by Gebeard his fourth Successor, and by Berno Abbot of S. Afer: but I cannot omit the History of Adalbero Nephew to this Reverend Bishop. He had caus'd him to be carefully educated, gave him an Abbey, design'd him for his Successor, and made use of his Service in the management of all his Affairs, as well at Court, as in his own Diocess. To gain him greater Authority, he intreated the Emperor, in the last Journey he made to Rome, to vouchsafe to entrust him with the sole Administration of the Affairs of his Diocess, and to nominate him for his Successor. Adalbero upon his return from Augsburg, not only caus'd an Oath of Fidelity to be taken to him, by the Clergy and People of the City, but also presum'd to use the Crozier Staff. This Attempt gave offence to the Bishops of Germany, inasmuch, that in a Council held at Ingelheim in the year 972. in the presence of the Emperor Otto, and of his Son, to which S. Ulric and Adalbero were summon'd; a Process was drawn up against the latter, for presuming to bear the Marks of the Episcopal Dignity, and upon that account they proceeded so far, as to declare him incapable of succeeding his Uncle in the Bishoprick of Augsburg. Whereupon the good old Man, not being able sufficiently to explain the Case, by reason of his great Age, sent word by one of his Clerks, that he design'd to retire, and embrace the Monastick Life, according to the Rule of S. Benedict, whose habit he had assum'd. The Bishops of the Council having made a Remonstrance, That he ought not thus to leave his Bishoprick, and that this Example would be of very dangerous Consequence, oblig'd him to return to the Government of his Church; promising him at the same time, that after his death no other Bishop should succeed in the Diocess of Augsburg, but Adalbero; of whom they exacted an Oath, that he knew not that it was unlawful, or that it was an Heretical Practice, to assume the Ensigns of the Episcopal Dignity, and to Exercise the Authority of a Bishop without due Ordination.

This Promise signified nothing with respect to Adalbero, because he died suddenly in a short time after, even before his Uncle; who had for his Successor Henry the Son of Count Burchard, who caus'd himself to be chosen by force. The latter dy'd as he had liv'd, that is to say, rather like a Soldier than a Bishop; for in his time he rais'd a Rebellion against his Sovereign Prince, and was kill'd in a Battel fought against the Saracens in the year 983. After his death, the Emperor Otto the Second, was desirous to confer that Bishoprick upon Werenbarius, whom S. Ulric had design'd for his Successor; but upon his refusal of it, Eutychus Count of Altorf was elected. Luitolphus, who succeeded in the year 988. made a Journey to Rome to procure of Pope John the XV. the Canonization of S. Ulric, which he obtain'd in a Council at Rome, upon the reading of the Life and Miracles of that Saint, who edified the Church rather by his Life and Conversation, than by his Writings; for few are attributed to him, and those too are very dubious. We have already observed that some make him the Author of a Discourse, concerning the Ecclesiastical Functions ascrib'd to Pope Leo the Fourth, and inserted in the Synodical Letter of Rathierius, which seems to be really so; because he returns an Answer to certain Questions which the Writer of his Life says he propos'd to his Clergy, during the time of his Visitation.

The same Author cites a Sermon of S. Ulric upon the Eight Mortal Sins, and the Eight Beatitudes. But it is probable that he compos'd it out of the ordinaty Discourses that he had heard from the Mouth of that Saint: In the preceding Century was likewise publish'd in Germany, a Letter bearing the Name of S. Ulric, and directed to Pope Nicolas; in which he adviseth that Pope, for putting an end to the Irregularities of the Clergy, to permit them to marry: Mention is made of this Letter, in an Addition of Barthoul Priet of Constantz, to the Chronicon of Hermannus Contractus; and its affirm'd to be mention'd by Aeneas Sylvius in his Treatise of the Manners of the Germans; where he says, That S. Ulric reprov'd the Pope for keeping Concubines. But this Letter is apparently Supposititious, by reason that in S. Ulric's time there was no Pope nam'd Nicolas, neither did S. Ulric Bishop of Augsburg live in the time of those Popes who bore that Name. The Authority of the Chronicon is of little moment, and Aeneas Sylvius does not distinctly make mention of that Letter; but only says, that S. Ulric reprov'd the Pope, upon account of his Concubines; which may agree with John the XII. Besides that, this Passage is not found in some Manuscripts of Sylvius's History, nor in the Roman Edition. But altho' it were true, that this Author alludes to that counterfeit Letter, it would only prove that it was already forged in his time; and that it is more ancient than the Councils of Basil and Constantz, which, as I presume, cannot be call'd in question.

ADALBERO Bishop of Augsburgh.

Adalbero
Bishop of

A Dalbero the Predecessor of S. Ulric is Author of the Life of S. Hariolphus the first Abbot of Elwangen.

The two ADALBERTS, who were Saints.

Two Adel-berts Saints.

THE two Saints nam'd Adalbert not only illuminated Germany with the Light of their Doctrine, but also propagated that of the Gospel amongst the Barbarous Nations: The former, after having preach'd it to the People, who inhabit along the Coasts of the Baltick Sea, and having taken much pains in Converting the Sclavonians, was ordain'd the first Archbishop of Magdeburg in the year 968. and dyed in 981. The second, who was Bishop of Prague, in like manner preach'd the Gospel to the Bohemians, Polanders, and Hungarians. The latter left his Bishoprick, by reason of the excessive Enormities of the People of Bohemia, and departing to Rome, there embrac'd the Monastick Life in the Convent of S. Boniface. After having spent five years there, he return'd to Bohemia, and pass'd from thence into Hungary; from whence he return'd the second time to Rome, and presided five years more in the same Monastery. He was also remov'd again by the Solicitation of the Archbishop of Mentz, who oblig'd Pope Gregory the Fifth to send him back. Boleslaus King of Bohemia having forbidden him to enter his Dominions, he went into Prussia, and from thence into Lithuania, where having suffer'd much in propagating the Christian Faith, he at last receiv'd the Crown of Martyrdom.

BRUNO Archbishop of Cologne.

Bruno
Archbishop of Cologne.

Bruno Archbishop of Cologne, the Son of the Emperor Henry the Fowler, and Brother of Otto the Great, is none of the least Ornaments of the Church of Germany, both with respect to his profound Learning and singular Piety. We are inform'd by a Writer of that time, that he had acquired a perfect Knowledge of the Greek and Latin Tongues; that he had perus'd all the Ancient Authors; that he had a very fine Library; and that he took a particular Care of his Diocess and Clergy; retrenching all their superfluous Habits, and obliging them to a constant attendance on the Duties of their Functions, as also instructing them by frequent Conferences, reiterated Exhortations, and his own Example. Sixtus Senensis says, that he compos'd a Commentary on the Pentateuch, the Manuscript of which is kept in the Library of the Dominicans at Boulogne. It's also reported that he wrote the Lives of certain Saints. He was chosen Archbishop of Cologne in the year 953. and dy'd in 965.

ROGER Monk of S. Pantaleon.

Roger Monk of S.
Pantaleon.

THE Life of this great Archbishop was written by Roger a Monk of S. Pantaleon at Cologne, who dedicated it to Folcmar his Successor in the year 970. It is refer'd by Surius to Octob. 12. and is written very elegantly with respect to the stile of those times. We also may reckon up a great number of German Prelates illustrious for their Learning and Piety, among whom are Henry Archbishop of Trier, Wolfgang Bishop of Ratibon, Sigismund of Halberstadt, and many others whom we shall not now mention. We shall therefore proceed to give a particular Account of those who have left us any considerable Writings.

RATH-

RATHBOLDUS Bishop of Utrecht.

Rathboldus or Rathboldus a German by Nation, descended from the Princes of Friesland, apply'd Rathbold himself to study under Nanno or Manno, in the Court of Charles the Bald, and of his Son Lewis, where those Princes caus'd the Liberal Sciences to be taught publickly. He was chosen Bishop of Utrecht in the year 899. Trithemius says, that he was well vers'd in the Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, and that he was no Novice in Humane Literature; that he was of a quick Apprehension, and much esteem'd for his Eloquence, leading a very Circumspect Life and Conversation; that he govern'd the Church of Utrecht during Seventeen years, and wrote several Tracts; among others, a Treatise of the Commendation of S. Martin; another of that of S. Boniface; The Life of S. Amalberga; a Book of Homilies and Sermons; certain florid Discourses on S. Willebrord; an Office of the Translation of S. Martin; with divers Hymns in Honour of the Saints; and lastly that he dy'd in the year 917. or rather in 918. Another Writer nam'd William of Hedin, attributes to him certain Poetical Pieces, and a Compendious Chronicon: Surius likewise ascribes to him an Eclogue concerning S. Lebuin. Father Mabillon has publish'd a Discourse of the same Author on the Life of S. Amalberga, and another on that of S. Willebrord.

HILDEBERT Archbishop of Mentz.

Hildebert Brother to the Emperor Conrade, the Thirteenth Archbishop of Mentz, Crown'd Otho Hildebert the Great in the year 938. But afterward's having combin'd with Richard Bishop of Stratsburg, to foment the Division between Otho and his Brother Henry, he was banish'd to Hamburg. Some make him the Author of the Lives of certain Saints.

WILLIAM Archbishop of Mentz.

William the Fifteenth Archbishop of Mentz, Prince of Saxony, and the Son of Otho the Great, was chosen Archbishop in the year 954. and dy'd in 968. He compos'd a Chronicon of the Archbishops his Predecessors.

BONNO Abbot of Corbey in Saxony.

Bonno or Bawo Abbot of Corbey in Saxony, flourish'd under Arnulphus and Lewis the Fourth, Kings of Germany. He wrote a Treatise of the memorable Actions of his time, mention'd in the History of Adam of Bremen, who cites a Passage of it concerning a Miracle of S. Rembert. We have at present no other knowledge of that Work.

WALTRAMNUS Bishop of Stratsburg.

Waltramnus or Waldramnus Bishop of Stratsburg, who assisted at the Council of Triburia in the year 895. and did not dye till 905. is the Author of certain Poetical Pieces which are inserted in the second Tome of Canisius's Antiquities.

SOLOMON Bishop of Constance.

Solomon Bishop of Constance liv'd almost at the same time, for he entred upon the Episcopal Function in the year 981. and dy'd in 919. He likewise compos'd certain Poems dedicated to Bishop Dado, which are in the first Tome of the same Antiquities by Canisius. He had been Monk of S. Gal and Chaplain to King Lewin.

UTHO Bishop of Stratsburg.

Utho Bishop of Stratsburg had for his Successor in the year 950. Utho Nephew to Henry the Second Duke of Schwaben. This Utho wrote the Lives of S. Arbogastus, and S. Amaris, Stratsburg. and dy'd in 975. leaving Echembaldus his Successor.

NOTGER the Stammerer.

Notger the Stammerer. There were several Notgers in the Tenth Century, but the first and most famous was of the *Carli*an Race, and surnam'd the Stammerer, by reason of the impediment in his Speech. He entred very young into the Monastery of S. Gal, where he studied under Marcellus and Iso, with Bartpertus and Tutilo. These three Monks studying together, promoting Learning in that Abbey, where they had frequent Conferences one with another, applying themselves more especially to the study of the Liberal Arts and Sciences, and to that of Musick in particular: But their chief Employment was the making of Profes. Notger compos'd many, and translated the Psalter into High-Dutch for the use of King Arnulphus: He wrote the Life of S. Gal in Verse, as also a Treatise of the Letters of the Alphabet, that are us'd in Musick and some other Works of the like nature; but the principal of them is his Martyrologia, publish'd by Canisius in the sixth Tome of his Antiquities. The same Canisius has set forth some of the Profes and Hymns of this Author, with a Fragment of the Life of S. Gal, in the Fifth Tome of the same Work, in which is also found the Treatise of Musick before-mention'd. Besides these Works, Goldastus attributes to Notger the Stammerer the two Books of the History of Charlemagn, that are dedicated to Charles the Bald, and written by a nameless Monk of S. Gal: And indeed he seems to discover himself in the 26th Chapter of the Second Book, where he declares that he is subject to Stammering, and wants Teeth. The same Author observes, that he has seen a Manuscript of the Life of S. Gal, written by way of Dialogue, which bears the Name of Notger. To him likewise is attributed the Life of S. Landoald referr'd by Surius to March 19. That of S. Remaclus Bishop of Utrecht, referr'd by the same Historian, to Sept. 3. and two Books of the Miracles of that Saint: But it's not certain that these Works are his; neither do they appear to be of the same stile. Notger spent the greatest part of his Life in the Ninth Century, and dy'd in the Month of April, A. C. 912. His Martyrology was compos'd in the end of the Ninth Century, or in the beginning of the Tenth.

The second Notger liv'd in the Tenth Century, and was not made Abbot of S. Gal till the year 973. he dy'd in 981. but there are not any of his Pieces now extant.

The third Notger was chosen Bishop of Leige in the year 972. Neither has he left any Works, unless we attribute to him the above-mention'd Lives of the Saints.

WITICHINDUS Monk of S. Corbey in Westphalia.

Witichindus Monk of Corbey in Westphalia.

Witichindus, Winduchindus, or Windichinus a Monk of Corbey a Monastery in Westphalia of the Order of S. Benedict, flourish'd under Otho I. and II. He wrote three Books of the History of the Saxons, in which are comprehended the Actions of Henry and Otho the First, and which ends at the the death of the latter, that is to say, in the year 973. They are dedicated to Queen Matbildis, Daughter of the Emperor Otho, and were printed at Basil A. D. 1532. at Francfort in 1577. Among the German Historians printed in 1580. and at the end of a particular Edition by Meibonius at Francfort in 1621. Sigebert says also, that he wrote in Verse a Relation of S. Thecla's Passion, and the Life of S. Paul the first Hermit. These Works are lost; altho' in the last Edition by Meibonius, there are certain Verses which are attributed to this Monk, Witichindus Monk of Corbey in Westphalia.

ROSWIDA a Nun.

Roswida a Nun of the Monastery of Gandersheim, famous for her Quality, Learning and Piety, flourish'd under the Emperor Otho II. by whose Order she compos'd in Heroick Verse a Panegyrick upon the Actions of Otho the First. She likewise wrote in Verse the Passion of S. Dennis Bishop and Martyr, and that of S. Pelagius who suffer'd Martyrdom in Spain; and some other Poems in Commendation of the Virgin Mary and S. Anne; as also on S. Gandolphus and some other Saints. To her likewise is attributed the Life of S. Wilbold Bishop of Eichstadt, and that of S. Unnebold the first Abbot of Heildesheim, related by Surius, Canisius and Father Mabillon. This Nun wrote in a finer stile than most part of the Authors of her time, and was well vers'd in the Knowledge of the Greek and Latin Tongues: Her Poem of the Life of Otho, was printed with Witichind's Works at Francfort in 1621. and in the Collection of the German Writers by Ruberus; and her Poetical Pieces were printed together at Nuremburg in 1501. by Conradus Celtes.

REGINALDUS Bishop of Eichstadt.

Reginaldus, who in the year 975. succeeded Stanband kill'd by the Hungarians at Augsburgh, in the Bishoprick of Eichstadt, pass'd in his time for a very Learned Man, as having attain'd to a considerable Knowledge in the Greek, Latin, and Hebrew Tongues, and more especially in the Art of Musick. He wrote the Lives of S. Wilbold and Unnebold, with those of S. Nicolas and S. Blasius. He was Bishop for the space of Twenty four years.

Another German Bishop of the same time, has given us the Life of S. Hunegonda referr'd by Surius to Aug. 25. and a Nameless Writer made a Narrative of the Translation of S. Epiphanius Bishop of Pavia into Saxony.

Reginaldus Bishop of Eichstadt.

A German Bishop. A nameless Author.

THIERRY Archbishop of Triers.

Thierry Provost of the Church of Mentz, and afterwards Archbishop of Trier, wrote sometime before the preceding Authors. (for he dy'd in the year 970.) the Life of S. Lutruda, referr'd by Surius to Sept. 22.

Thierry Archbishop of Triers.

OTHLO Bishop of Metz.

Othlo Monk of Fulda wrote the Life of S. Pyrmim, who is suppos'd to have been Bishop of Meaux, or rather Metz. This Life is dedicated to Liudolphus Archbishop of Trier, and was publish'd by Brouverus, who caus'd it to be printed A. D. 1616. at Mentz, with other Lives of the Illustrious Personages of Germany. Liudolphus was made Archbishop of Trier in 999. and dy'd in 1008. Therefore Othlo compos'd his Work in the Ninth Century, or in the beginning of the Tenth.

Othlo Bishop of Metz.

and

and Serrarius likewise attribute to him the Life of S. Boniface. But Brouverius observes, that it is of a different title.

UFFING or UFFO Monk of Werthin.

Uffing or Uffo Monk of Werthin.

AT the same time Uffing, or rather Uffo of Friesland, Monk of Werthin, wrote the Life of S. Ludger Bishop of Munster, which was printed at Cologne the last Century, with a Poem of the same Author; some attribute to him the Life of S. Ida referr'd by Surin to Sept. 4. Suffridus says that he likewise left the Life of S. Lucius King of England, which he affirms to be extant in Manuscript.

A Council at Coblenz in the year 922.

We have the Acts only of very few Councils of Germany in the Tenth Century, altho' we have just grounds to suppose that many more were held. The first, of which, any Monument is remaining is a Council held at Coblenz in the year 922. by the order of Charles King of France, and Henry King of Germany. It was compos'd of Eight Prelates, viz. Herman Archbishop of Mentz, Heriger Archbishop of Cologne, and six other German Bishops, and made Eight Canons, of which only the First, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh and Eighth remain in our Possession. The first forbids Marriage between Relations to the Sixth Generation. The Fifth prohibits Laymen, who have Chappels, from receiving the Tythes of them with their own hands on purpose to put them to profane uses, and ordains that the Priests shall receive and use them to the advantage of the Churches, and for the maintenance of Hospitals and poor People. The Sixth brings the Monks under Subjection to the Jurisdiction and Government of the Bishop. The Seventh condemns a Person who sells a Christian for a Slave, as guilty of Murder. The Eighth forbids those who give any Goods or Revenues to a particular Church, to take away the Tythes due upon account of such Revenues, to the Church to which they belong'd before.

A Council at Erfurd A.C. 932.

The Canons of a Council held at Erfurd in the year 932. in like manner are still extant, with a Preface which shews that it was conven'd by the Order of King Henry the First, in the Fourteenth year of his Reign, and that it was compos'd of the Archbishop of Trier and Twelve Bishops. The First of these Canons imports, that the Festivals of the Twelve Apostles shall be solemniz'd, and that the Fast of the Vigils shall be observ'd according to the ancient Constitutions. The Second, that no Pleas shall be held in the Courts of Judicature on Sundays, Holy-days, or Fasting-days: It is also added, that King Henry prohibited the Judges to Cite any Person before them in the Week preceding the Festival of Christmas, that of S. John Baptist, and during the whole time of Lent, till the Eighth day after Easter. In the Third it is forbidden to deliver a Summons or Warrant to those Persons who are going to Church, or are there already, that they may not be disturb'd in their Devotions. The fourth imports, that if a Priest be suspected of any Crime, and accused before his Bishop, he shall be thrice admonish'd to acknowledge his Fault, and shall undergo condign Punishment, if he be found Guilty, unless he prove his Innocence by clearing himself by his own Oath, or by that of his Colleagues. The Fifth forbids private Persons to impose Fasts without the Consent of the Bishop or his Vicar, because many do it to carry on Superstitious Divinations, or for other sinister ends, rather than out of a Principle of Devotion.

We have already made mention of the Council of Ingelheim held in the year 948. in treating of the Contests of Artaldus for obtaining the Archbishoprick of Rheims, in regard that it was chiefly assembled upon that account.

A Council at Augsburg A.C. 952.

In the year 952. the Emperor Otto the First held at Augsburg an Assembly of the Bishops of Germany, France and Italy; where the Archbishop of Mentz presided, and publish'd Eleven Canons, which were approv'd by the other Prelates.

The First ordains that the Priests, Deacons and Subdeacons that marry, shall be depos'd according to Chap. 25. of the Council of Carthage. The Second is against Clergy-men, who keep Dogs and Birds for Hunting, and are addicted to that Exercise; they are to be suspended from their Functions as long as they persist in such Practices. The Third ordains that Bishops, Priests and Deacons, who spend their time in playing at Games of Chance, shall incur the Penalty of being Depos'd, unless they renounce such sort of Games. The Fourth is against those Clergy-men who keep suspicious Women in their Houses. The Fifth prohibits Monks from going out of their Cloisters, without the permission of their Abbot. The Sixth enjoyns Bishops to take care of the Monasteries of their Respective Diocesses, and speedily to Reform the Disorders that are committed in them. The Seventh and Eighth forbid them to hinder Clergy-men and Canonesses from embracing the Monastical Life. The Ninth prohibits Lay-men from turning out of the Churches those Persons to whom the Bishops have committed Care of them. The Tenth attributes to the Bishop the right of taking Cognizance of the distribution of Tythes. And the Eleventh imports, that not only the Bishops, Priests, Deacons and Subdeacons shall lead a single Life, but also that the other Clergy shall be oblig'd to live Continently when they come to years of Maturity.

CHAP. V.

An Account of the Churches of England.

IN the beginning of the Ninth Century, King Alfred re-establish'd the Universities, and caus'd the Liberal Arts and Sciences to flourish in England, inviting over the Abbot Grimbaldus, and several other Learned Men of France; but the Kings his Successors were chiefly employ'd in Reforming the Corruptions of Manners and Discipline. In the beginning of this Century King Edward, upon the Remonstrances and Threats of the Pope, who complain'd that for Seven years the whole Country of the West-Saxons was destitute of Bishops, caus'd a Council to be assembled at Canterbury, in which Archbishop Phlegmon presid'd, and where several Persons were chosen to be Bishops in that Province, and elsewhere, who were ordain'd by Phlegmon after his Return from Rome, whither he went on purpose to give an Account to the Pope of the Proceedings of the Council, and to pacifie him. The Pope approv'd their Regulations, order'd that for the future the Churches should no longer be left vacant, and confirm'd the Primacy of the Church of Canterbury. All these Actions are attributed by several Authors to Pope Formosus, but in regard that this Pope dy'd a long while before the time of King Edward, they are rather to be ascrib'd to John the Ninth, who possess'd the See of Rome in the beginning of Edward's Reign, A. C. 904. to which this Council may be referr'd.

A Council at Canterbury under King Edward and Archbishop Phlegmon, of that City

The same King publish'd in the year 906. divers Laws against the Disturbers of the Tranquility of the Church; against Apostates whom he condemns to death; against Clergy-men who commit Robberies or Fornication; against Incestuous Persons; against those who refuse to pay Tythes, or to keep Sundays and Fasting-days; and against Sorcerers and leud Women, who are condemn'd to different Punishments. It's also ordain'd in that Edict, that Persons condemn'd to dy for Capital Crimes, should be permitted to make a Confession of their Sins in private to a Priest; and that those, who have been deprived of any Member for an Offence, and survive three days, should cause their Wounds to be dress'd, and receive Consolation, after having obtain'd a Licence from the Bishop.

King Edward's Laws.

King Ethelstan, who succeeded Edward in the year 923. in like manner caus'd certain Laws to be Enact'd relating to Ecclesiastical Affairs, with the Advice of the Prelates, Lords, and Learned Men of his Kingdom, by which he ordain'd, That all the Lands, and even those of his own Demains, should be liable to pay Tythes. He enjoyn'd all those, who held any Estates of him, to allow somewhat for the Maintenance of the Poor, and other charitable Uses: He prohibited Outrages that were done to the Churches, and again condemn'd the Sorcerers and Witches to Imprisonment, and to pay great Fines: He regulated the manner of proving the Innocence of Accused Persons, by Fire or Water-Ordeal; Forbad the keeping of Markets, or buying and selling on Sundays: And ordain'd that perjur'd Persons and false Witnesses should be depriv'd of Christian Burial. To these Laws he added divers Instructions for the Bishops, and recommended the Reading in the Monasteries every Friday Fifty Psalms upon his Account.

King Ethelstan's Laws.

Forasmuch as the most remarkable Circumstances of those Laws, is that which relates to the Clearing or Convicting of an Accused Person, by the Trial of Fire or Water, then commonly call'd Ordeal; and in regard that the manner of performing it is there explain'd at large; it may not be improper here to insert an Account of that passage. If any one be desirous to clear himself by Ordeal, that is to say, by the Trial of Fire or Water, let them come to the Priest three days before he do it, who shall give him a Benediction after the usual manner; and during those three days let him eat nothing but Bread and Salt or Pulse; let him hear Mass every day; let him make an Oblation; let him receive the Sacrament on the day he is to undergo the Trial. If it be that of Cold Water, let him be plung'd one Fathom below the Surface of the Water. If it be that of a Hot Iron, let it be put into his Hand, and left there three days, without looking on it. If it be that of Hot Water, let it be made boiling hot, and let the Hand or Arm of the Accused Person be put into it. In all these Trials, both the Accused Person and the Accuser are to Fast, and to cause Twelve Witnesses to be present, who may take an Oath with them, and let Holy Water be sprinkled upon them. There are two Editions of these Laws, one of which is printed at large, and the other is an Abridgment of them.

King Edmund had no less Zeal for the maintaining of the Discipline of the Church, than his Predecessor Ethelstan. He held in the year 944. which was the third of his Reign, even on Easter-day, an Assembly of the Prelates and Lords, in which he made certain Laws relating to Chastity, and the payment of Tythes, and of the Alms-penny; as also against those who offer'd Violence to Nuns; against perjur'd Persons, and those who assisted at profane Sacrifices. In these Laws are specified the Ecclesiastical Penalties to be inflict'd on the Infringers of them; viz. The privation of Christian Burial and Excommunication. The Bishops are there enjoyn'd to repair their Churches at their own Charge, and to prefer a Petition to the Prince, for the Reparation of others, and for their Ornaments. He likewise made Laws for the punishment of Murderers, and for the regulating

The latter made about that time, certain Ecclesiastical Constitutions, by way of Admonition or Instruction, in which he recommends, 1. That the Church should be left in the peaceable Enjoyment of its Privileges and Immunities, and that no Taxes should be laid on the Revenues belonging to it. 2. He admonishes the King and the Princes to obey the Archbishop and Bishops; to be humble; to oppress no Man; to administer Justice to all; to punish Criminals; and to relieve the Poor with their Alms. 3. He orders the Bishops to lead an Exemplary Life; to visit their Diocesses once every year; to preach the Truth boldly to Kings and Princes; to Excommunicate none without just grounds, and to shew to All the way to Salvation. 4. He enjoins the Priests in like manner to live Circumspectly, and to wear Habits conformable to their Order. 5. He gives the same Admonition to all the Clergy. 6. He exhorts the Monks to perform their Vows, and forbids them to turn Vagabonds, contenting themselves only with wearing the Habit of Monks, without leading a Life consonant to their Profession: He recommends to them working with their own Hands, reading and prayer. 7. He prohibits Incestuous Marriages with Nuns, or near Relations. 8. He recommends Peace and Union. 9. He enjoins the Observation of the Solemn Fasts of Lent; of the Ember-Weeks, of Wednesday and Friday; and the Celebration of Divine Service on Sundays and Festivals. Lastly, He recommends the payment of Tythes. There is also a Pastoral Letter written by this Archbishop, and directed to his Suffragans, which is related by William of Malsbury.

London
A. C. 948.

Edmund being kill'd in the year 946. his Brother Elred took possession of the Throne. We have no Laws enacted by this Prince, only the Charter of a considerable Donation made by him to the Monastery of Crowland, in favour of Turketulus, who had been formerly Chancellor of the Kingdom, and to whom he gave that Abbey. This was done in an Assembly of Bishops and Lords held at London in the year 948.

After the death of Elred, which happen'd in 955 Edwin the Son of Edmund was proclaim'd King, but sometime after, part of England Revolting, Edgar the Brother of Edwin got a share of his Dominions, and upon his Brother's Death, obtain'd the sole Possession of the whole Kingdom. This Prince being more Religious than his Predecessors, entirely re-establish'd the Purity of Discipline in the Church of England, and brought the Monastical Course of Life into Repute, by the Advice of S. Dunstan, who may be call'd the Restorer of the Ecclesiastical Discipline in England.

Archbishop of Canterbury.

This Saint was born in the Country of the West-Saxons, in the first year of King Ethelstan's Reign A. C. 923. He enter'd into Holy Orders very young, and after having compleated his Studies, made application to Athelm Archbishop of Canterbury, who introduc'd him into the Presence of King Ethelstan: Afterward having fall'n into some disgrace at Court, he retir'd to Elfeg Bishop of Winchester, who advis'd him to embrace the Monastical Life, which he accordingly did, and continued in his Retirement till the Reign of King Edmund, when he was invited to Court by that Prince: He did not remain long there, without being obnoxious to the Envy and Hatred of several Persons, who misrepresented him to the King; insomuch that he was oblig'd to retire to his Solitude of Glassenbury, where he took up his Abode; altho' he was restor'd to the Favour of King Edmund, who had always a great respect for him; granted considerable Revenues to his Monastery, and continu'd to follow his Counsels, not only in the management of Civil Affairs, but also of Ecclesiastical. He was no less esteem'd by King Elred, who determin'd to nominate him to the Bishoprick of Winchester; but Edwin having receiv'd a severe Reprimand for his Irregularities from this Abbot, banish'd him, and pillaged his Monastery. However, King Edgar recall'd him immediately after his Accession to the Crown, and made him not only Bishop of Winchester, but also conferr'd on him the Government of the Church of London. At last the Archbishoprick of Canterbury being vacant in the year 961. by the death of Odo; Elfsin Bishop of Winchester, who was appointed to supply his place, dying in a Journey he made over the Alps to Rome, to fetch the Pall; and Berthelm, who was substituted in his room, having refus'd to accept that Dignity, Dunstan was Invested with it a few days after, and went to Rome to receive the Pall. At his return, he apply'd himself altogether to the Reformation of the Clergy of England, and took upon him to Expel all those who refus'd to lead a Regular Course of Life, and to Restore the Monks to their former Station.

This Saint had for his Fellow Labourers and Imitators of his Zeal, Ethelwold Bishop of Winchester, and Oswald Bishop of Worcester, who founded a great number of Monasteries, and took much pains in Reforming the Clergy, and Extirpating the Vices that were predominant in England. The former dyed in the year 984. before S. Dunstan, who foretold his approaching Death, as well as that of the Bishop of Rocheſter, in a Visit which those two Prelates made him: but the latter did not dye till after this Archbishop, viz. in the year 992. As for S. Dunstan, he surviv'd King Edgar, who dy'd in 975. and maintain'd the Right of the young Prince Edward, against the Pretensions of Alfride, who endeavour'd to transfer the Crown to her Son Ethelfred; but Edward being Assassinated Three years after by the Treachery of that Queen, Dunstan was constrain'd to Crown Ethelfred, and foretold the Calamities that should befall England, and the Family of this young Prince, as a Punishment for his Crime, and that of his Mother. At last S. Dunstan dy'd laden with years and honour A. C. 988.

In his time, and apparently by his Direction, King Edgar in 967. not only publish'd Laws like to those of his Predecessors, for the preservation of the Revenues of the Church; for the Payment of Tythes, and S. Peter's Pence; and for the Solemn Observations of Sundays and Festivals; but also divers Ecclesiastical Constitutions, relating to the Manners and Functions of Clergy-men; to the Celebration of the Mass; to the Confession and Pennances that ought to be impos'd on those who commit Sin, &c. Indeed these Canons may serve as a kind of Ritual for the Use of Curates. It is affirm'd that they were made in the year 967. by King Edgar; but this does not appear to be altogether certain, and perhaps they are of a later date. The Discourse which this King made to Dunstan Archbishop of Canterbury, and to Oswald and Ethelwold Bishops of Worcester and Winchester, is much more certain. He there inveighs against the Irregularities and Disorders of the Clergy, and pathetically Exhorts those Bishops to joyn their Authority with His, to repress their Insolence; and to oblige them to apply the Ecclesiastical Revenues to the Relief of the Poor, for which Use they were design'd. To the end that this Order might be put in Execution, he granted a Commission to those three Prelates to take the Matter in hand, and gave them power to turn out of the Churches such Clergy-men as liv'd dissolutely, and to Substitute others in their room.

By virtue of this Injunction, S. Dunstan held a General Council A.C. 973. in which he ordain'd that all the Priests, Deacons and Subdeacons, who would not lead a sober Life, should be Expell'd their Churches, and caus'd a Decree to be made, to oblige them to Embrace a Regular and Monastick Course of Life, or to Retire. And accordingly, these three Bishops turn'd the old Clergy-men out of most part of the Churches, and put Monks in their place, or else forc'd them to assume the Monastical Habit. A general Council of England in the year 973.

S. Dunstan did not only shew his Constancy and Zeal, with respect to the Clergy, but was also as zealous in treating Kings and Princes: For he sharply reprov'd King Edgar for abusing a young Maid whom he had sent for out of a Monastery, and impos'd on him a Pennance of Seven years. A certain very potent Earl having married one of his near Kinswomen, he Excommunicated him, and refus'd to take off the Excommunication, altho' the King had commanded him, and the Earl had obtain'd a Brief of the Pope for his Restoration. S. Dunstan being inform'd of it, reply'd, That he was ready to obey the Pope's Commands, provided the Person had really repented of his Offence; but that he would not suffer him to persist in his Sin, nor without submitting to the Discipline of the Church to insult over the Prelates, and, as it were, to triumph in his Crime. At last, the Earl being mov'd with his Constancy, and the fear of those Punishments which the Divine Vengeance usually inflicts upon Excommunicated Persons, left his Kinswoman, did Publick Penance, and threw himself down prostrate before S. Dunstan in a Council barefoot, cloath'd with a Woollen Garment, holding a Bundle of Rods in his Hand, and lamenting his Sin, from which S. Dunstan gave him Absolution, at the request of the Bishops of the Council. A Council under S. Dunstan and King Edgar.

The Reformation of the Clergy cannot be carried on without great Opposition, nor without creating many Male-contentes, insomuch that in King Edgar's Life time, the Clergy-men depriv'd of their Benefices, us'd their utmost Efforts to recover them; and having made a Complaint in an Assembly held at Winchester, in the beginning of the year 975. they prevail'd upon the King by their Entreaties and the Promises they made to lead a more regular Course of Life for the future: But as they were about making a Decree for their Restoration, on Condition they should live more regularly, a Voice was heard coming as it were from the Crucifix, which pronounc'd these words, It will turn to no account, you have pass'd a just Sentence, and you will do ill to alter your Decisions. However, after the death of King Edgar these Clergy-men renewed their Instances, and even offer'd force to drive the Monks not only from their Places, but also out of the Monasteries which were lately founded: But S. Dunstan always maintain'd his Reformation, which prevail'd in the most part of the Churches and Monasteries of England, under the Reigns of Edward and Ethelred. A Council at Winchester A.C. 975.

S. Dunstan and S. Ethelwald did not only take pains to Reform the Ecclesiastical Discipline in England, but also in reviving the Study of the Liberal Sciences, and even they themselves compos'd some Works. A modern English writer, call'd Pits, says that S. Dunstan compil'd certain Forms of Archiepiscopal Benedictions; a small Tract on the Rule of S. Benedict; a Book call'd, Rules for the Monastical Life; several Writings against Vicious Priests; a Treatise of the Eucharist; another of Tythes; a Book of Occult Philosophy; a Tract for the Instruction of the Clergy, and some Letters. And indeed, we cannot be certainly assur'd upon the Credit of this Writer, whether S. Dunstan were really the Author of these Works, which are no longer extant; but we find a Concordance or Rule for the Monastick Life, and under the Name of Edgar set forth by Rainerus, which is apparently a Piece of S. Dunstan, as well as the other Constitutions of that Prince, and there is extant a Letter written by him to Wulfin Bishop of Worcester, which Father Mabillon publish'd from a Manuscript of Monsieur Faure, Doctor of the Faculty of Paris. The Life of S. Dunstan was written by Osborn Chaunter of the Cathedral Church of Canterbury, who was Contemporary with this Saint, and is found in the Fifth Benedictine Century of Father Mabillon.

If we may give farther Credit to Pits, S. Ethelwald in like manner compos'd several Tracts, of which he gives us this following Catalogue: A Book dedicated to Pope John XIV. concerning the Authority of the Bishops over their Priests; a Treatise against those Priests who commit Fornication, and against their Concubines; another of the Abbots of Lindisfarne; another of the Kings, Kingdoms, and Bishopricks of England; a History of the Kings of Great Britain; a Narrative of his Visitations; a Treatise of the Planets and Climates of the World; the Treatise of the Abbots of Lindisfarne, which this Author attributes to S. Ethelwald, is apparently a piece compos'd in Verse by Ethelwulf a Monk of that Abbey. The other Works are no longer Extant, and perhaps never were, but only in Pits's imagination.

S. Ethelwald Bishop of Winchester.

Alfric or Ælfric
Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Writers of Ecclesiastical History are not agreed about the immediate Successor of S. Dunstan in the Archbishoprick of Canterbury: Some give him the Name of Siricius, and others of Alfric or Ælfric: however, it is certain that the latter was Archbishop of Canterbury in the beginning of the following Century, in regard that he sign'd in that Quality a Privilege granted by King Ethelred: He was a Pupil of S. Ethelwald, succeeded him in the Monastery of Abington; was afterward made Abbot of Malmesbury by King Edgar, then Bishop of some Church in England, about which Authors are not agreed; and at last, being advanc'd to the Metropolitan See of Canterbury, he govern'd that Church till about the year 1006. This Archbishop in his time was in great reputation for his profound Skill in the Sciences of Grammar and Divinity, insomuch that he was surnam'd The Grammarian. His Sermons were translated into the Saxon Tongue, in order to be read publicly in the Churches, and his Letters were inserted in the Synodical Books of the Church of England. The English Writers assure us, that their Libraries were full of a great number of Works of this Archbishop, written in the Saxon Tongue, and they have lately publish'd some of them translated into Latin, viz. A Paschal Homily of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, in which he discourses much after the same manner as Ratramnus or Bertram, and two Letters, one to Wulfin Bishop of Salisbury, and the other to Wulstan Archbishop of York on the same Subject, which were printed at London in 1566, 1623, and 1638. In the Body of the Councils is contain'd a Canonical Letter of Alfric, directed to Wulfin, which is a kind of Ritual for the use of the Priests. The principal Manuscript Treatises of this Author, compos'd in the Saxon Tongue, are an History of the Old and New Testament till the Taking of Jerusalem; a Penitential; Eighty Sermons; a Letter concerning the Monastical Life; another against the Marriage of Clergy-men; a Saxon Chronicle of the Church of Canterbury; certain Lives of the Saints, and Versions of some Latin Works; among others the Dialogue of S. Gregory.

Fridegod
Monk of S.
Saviour at Canterbury.

Sometime before Fridegod, a Monk of S. Saviour at Canterbury, wrote in Verse, at the request of Odo, the Lives of S. Wilfrid and of S. Owen Archbishop of York; the former was publish'd by Father Mabillon in the first part of the Third and Fourth Benedictine Centuries. William of Malmesbury observes, that these Verses are not altogether contemptible, but that Fridegod intermixes so many Greek words and Phrases which render them unintelligible.

Lanfrid and Wulstan Monks of Winchester.

At the same time Lanfrid, a Monk of Winchester, wrote the Life of S. Swithin, and a Relation of the Miracles that happen'd at his Translation; and after him Wulstan, Monk of the same Monastery, compos'd in Verse the History of that Translation, and the Life of S. Ethelwald.

Thus we have given an Account of almost all the most remarkable Circumstances that occur in the Ecclesiastical History of England in the Tenth Century.

CHAP. VI.

Observations on the Ecclesiastical Affairs of the Tenth Century.

Controversies about Doctrinal Points.

THERE were no Controversies in the Tenth Age of the Church, relating to Articles of Faith, or Doctrinal Points of Divinity, by reason that there were no Hereticks, nor other Inquisitive Persons, who resin'd upon Matters of Religion, or undertook to dive into the bottom of its Mysteries. The Sober Party contented themselves only in yielding an implicate Faith to whatever the Church-men thought fit to deliver from the Pulpit; and the profligate Wretches, abandon'd themselves to gross Sensualities, which gave Satisfaction to their brutish Appetites, rather than to the Vices of the Mind, to which only ingenious Persons are liable. Therefore in this Age of Darkness and Ignorance, the Church not being disturb'd upon account of its Doctrines, had nothing to do but to put a stop to the Enormities of Discipline and Manners.

Of the Eucharist.

There were nevertheless in England some Clergy-men, who positively affirm'd that the Bread and Wine on the Altar retain'd the very same Substance after Consecration, and that they were only the Representation of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, and not his Real Body and Blood. Odo Archbishop of Canterbury being desirous to oppose this Opinion, pray'd to God one day, as he was Celebrating Mass solemnly, in the presence of a multitude of People, to shew the very Substance of these Mysteries; which happen'd in the breaking of the Consecrated Bread, out of which (as its reported) issued forth several Drops of Blood; which Miracle being seen by his Clergy, and by those who doubted of the Real Presence of the Body of Jesus Christ in the Eucharist, they abjured their Error.

Thus Osborn, a Writer of those times, relates the Matter in the Life of that Saint. The same Author in the Life of S. Dunstan says, that that Saint returning to the Altar, chang'd the Bread and Wine into our Saviour's Body and Blood, by the Prayer of Consecration; but when he had given the Benediction to the People, he left the Altar a second time to preach, and that being altogether transported with the Divine Spirit, he discours'd after such a pathetical manner concerning the Real Presence of the Body of Jesus Christ, of the Future Resurrection, and of Life Eternal, that one would have thought that a glorified Saint was then speaking.

Ratherius Bishop of Verona stily maintains the same Opinion in one of his Letters; and Fulcuin Abbot of Lobes, in discoursing of the Eucharistical Table, says, That it is the Table on which the Sacred Body of our Lord is consum'd. These Authors express themselves after the same manner as Paschasius Ratbertus; nevertheless this did not hinder some others, who liv'd in the end of the same Century, to take part with Retramnus, to make use of his Expressions, and to oppose those of Paschasius. This is apparently done by Alfric Archbishop of Canterbury, and Heriger Abbot of Lobes, altho' they do not impugn the Real Presence, as we have made it appear in the preceding Century. These are all the remarkable Circumstances in the Tenth Century, relating to Points of Doctrine; for the Errour of the Anthropomorphites confuted by Ratherius in one of his Sermons, was peculiar to certain Clergy-men of Italy, and those of the Greeks, mention'd by Pope Formosus in one of his Letters to Fulcuin, are ancient, and not modern Heresies. We read in a Chronicle of the Abbey of Castros, that Durandus Abbot of that Monastery, in the year 953, confuted one Walfred, who gave it out, that both the Soul and Body perish'd after death; but it is not known whether this Error continu'd long, neither is there any part of Durandus's Piece now extant. The Contests that arose about the validity or invalidity of Ordination made by Intruders, were soon silenc'd. Some Persons were of Opinion, that one might Fast on Fridays, but their Infatuation was not of long continuance. Upon the whole, there was no Council held in this Century that either debated, or made any Decisions with respect to any Point of Doctrine; which shews, that there was no Error in Matters of Faith that prevail'd long, or made any Disturbance in the Church.

Howsoever enormous the Irregularities of the Popes might be at that time, nevertheless a great deal of Respect was shewn to their Authority, and the Christians distinguishing, according to Auxilius's Remark, the Holy See, from the Person of those who possess'd it, had as much veneration for the Dignity of the One, as aversion to the Extravagancies of the others; and upon this account they yielded Obedience to the Equitable Laws, and Just and Lawful Ordinances, proceeding from the Authority of the Holy See, and oppos'd the Enterprizes of the Popes, which intrench'd upon the Liberty of the Churches and the Intention of the Canons. This may be observ'd in the conduct of the Bishops of Germany, and in the Letters they wrote concerning the Erections of Bishopricks, which the Pope attempted to make in Moravia, to the prejudice of their Rights; in that of the Bishops of France assembled in a Council at Rheims against Arnulphus; in the Discourse made by the Bishop of Orleans in that Council; and in the Judgment they pass'd with respect to the Legats Attempt, who presum'd to Consecrate a Church without the consent of the Ordinary. Neither were the Bishops of Italy of a different Opinion, as appears from their Deposing of Pope John XII. S. Dunstan shew'd the same Resolution in Refusing to Absolve a Person, altho' the Pope had expressly enjoin'd him to do it; and the like constancy is observable in Ratherius, who did not think himself oblig'd to obey the Order of a Pope, who was about to deprive him of the Disposal of the Ecclesiastical Revenues of his Diocess. However, Magnificent Titles were given to the Popes, and their Primacy and Jurisdiction was acknowledg'd: They had not as yet assum'd the Right of Ordaining Bishops or Metropolitans; nay John X. and Stephen VIII. plainly own'd, that it did not belong to them; but they granted the Pall, not only to Archbishops, but also to several Bishops, which Practice Fulques or Fulco Archbishop of Rheims censures as an Abuse, which sullied the Splendor of the Hierarchical Order. They were desirous, that the Archbishops should come in Person to Rome to receive the Pall, which was usually done by the Archbishops of England and Germany, but not by those of France.

The Popes likewise us'd to erect new Archbishopsricks and Bishopricks, and there were several Examples in that Century of these sorts of Erections; as Magdeburg, Mersburg, Passaw, Placentia &c. They also assum'd to themselves a Power to Judge Bishops primarily, according to the Direction of the Decretals, and claim'd a Right to Summon them to Rome: But it does not appear that the Bishops of France ever acknowledg'd that Right; on the contrary, they follow'd the ancient Custom which makes the Bishops subject to the Judgment of the Provincial Councils, and to prevent the bringing any Appeals to Rome, they oblig'd the accused Persons to make choice of their own Judges, as it happen'd in the Affair of Arnulphus.

John IX. own'd that the Popes might be mistaken, and that their Judgments might be revers'd: That they ought to be chosen by the Bishops of Italy, and the Clergy and People of Rome, with the Emperor's consent, and in the presence of his Deputies; as it was ordain'd in the Council of Rome held under the same John IX. Orto and his Successors had the plenary Injoymment of that Right, and the Election of the Popes depended on those Emperors. Octavian was the first of the Popes who chang'd his Name after his Election, in which he was imitated in the same Century by Gregory V. and Sylvester II. Neither were the Popes as yet absolute Sovereigns in the City of Rome; In the beginning of this Century the Romans enjoy'd an appearance of Liberty under the Government of Alberic. Afterwards Orto and his Successors were Sovereign Princes of Rome, in quality of Empe-

ters; caus'd the Romans to take an Oath of Allegiance to them; and treated as Rebels those who revolted against them: But the Popes had the Demesns of a great number of Towns in Italy, which were granted by King Pepin, and afterwards confirm'd by the Otho's. The Writers of those Times, particularly Ratherius, Abbo, Gerbert, and some others complain'd very much, that under some Popes a shameful Traffick was made at Rome of the most Sacred Things, and that every thing there was to be purchas'd for Money. We also read, that the Popes were us'd to grant Indulgences to those Persons who made a Journey to Rome: and it is related in the Life of S. Ulric, that the Pope sent him back laden with Indulgences.

Several Points of Discipline.

There were few Councils held in this Century, and in the most part of them the Decrees were concerning Tythes; against the Usurpers of Church Revenues; against Church-men who keep Concubines; and against Marriages among near Relations. To which purpose the Degrees of Consanguinity were extended to the Seventh, in which it was forbidden to contract Marriage, and Spiritual Affinity took place as well in the Eastern as the Western Churches: Such Persons as married with these Impediments were divorc'd without redress, neither were any Dispensations granted to Kings and Princes, as it appears from the Case of King Robert, and that of the Emperor Nicephorus Phocas.

Fourth Marriages were absolutely prohibited in the Eastern, but not in the Western parts. The Bishops were chosen by the Clergy and People, but the Princes would not suffer the Election to be made without their consent. The Investitures of the Archbishops, and Bishopricks, were granted to Otho I. by Pope Leo VII. and were given with the Ring and Staff. The Translation of Bishops became very frequent, and Coadjutors began to be joyn'd with them, with Assurance of Succeeding them. Thus Urho Bishop of Serasburg had Archimbaldus for his Coadjutor; but this practice was condemn'd by the Bishops of Germany, with respect to Adalbero, whom S. Ulric his Uncle, who had chosen him for his Coadjutor, and by Gregory V. with respect to the Bishop of Puy in Velay, who in like manner had ordain'd his Nephew.

This Century is the first, in which it is observ'd that Ambition transported the Bishops so far, as to get the possession of several Bishopricks, and in which Bishops were ordain'd at the Age of eighteen years, as Pope John XI. John XII. and the Bishop of Tody; and elected very young, as Hugh of Vermandois, and Theophylact Patriarch of Constantinople. Many Bishops of Italy and Germany oblig'd their Canons to be Regular, and to live in common: others placed Monks in their Cathedrals, and even advanc'd them to Dignities; and others on the contrary, turn'd out irregular Monks, to substitute Secular Clerks in their room; as did Ratherius in one of the Churches of his Dioceses. The Ecclesiastical Revenues were usually divided into four parts, and the Bishops assum'd the sole Administration of them, but in some Churches other Clergy-men had particular Revenues, which they enjoy'd independently of the Bishop. After the Death of the Bishops the Revenues of the Church, and those they left, were often expos'd to pillage, as it is related by Ratherius, Atto, and several other Writers. To prevent this Rapine, the Prince or neighbouring Bishop engag'd to take care of them. The Lords were wont to settle Priests at their pleasure, in the Country Churches; Benefices were often conferr'd on unworthy Persons; and sometimes Persons were advanc'd to the Episcopal Dignity, without any merit, and only on account of their quality; an abuse much lamented by Ratherius and Atto. Lastly, Ignorance was so predominant in those times, that it was absolutely necessary to admit Priests of mean parts to the Sacerdotal Function. However, the Bishops endeavour'd to render them more capable, by Synodal Instructions, by frequent Conferences with them, (the Original of which may probably be referr'd to the Ninth Century) by Schools, which were kept in the Cathedral Churches and Monasteries, and by furnishing them with diverse Forms of Sermons and Exhortations ready prepared. The Bishops and other Clergy-men were often oblig'd to bear Arms, as Ratherius observes, altho' it be prohibited by the Canons; an abuse which was committed both in the Eastern and Western Parts. In the beginning of this Century, the Monks were very irregular, and the Monasteries were ruin'd, and possess'd by Laicks, who assum'd the quality of Abbots; but after Matters were regulated, the Monastical Discipline was re-established, and Regular Abbots were constituted; nevertheless the Bishops for a long time retain'd some Abbays as it were in Comendam; the same Abbot, or the same Regular Clerk held several Abbays, which he caus'd to be govern'd by Co-Abbots or Pro-Abbots, or Superiours. To which we may refer the Original of Congregations. Divers Monks were advanc'd to the Episcopacy, possess'd Dignities in the Cathedral Churches, and were ordain'd Priests under the Title of their Monastery. Publick Penance was still in use, but very rarely practis'd, and the Canonical Discipline was enervated by the Redemption of Pennances which was then introduc'd: The Rigour and Austerity of Fasting, was likewise much abated, and the Obligation to Receive the Sacrament was reduc'd to four times a year.

Ratherius forbade in his Diocess the Celebration of Marriages on Sundays, and in the time of Lent, altho' the contrary Custom had prevail'd. We find in this Century the first Example of the Benediction of a Bell; for there is no mention made of them in the Authors of the preceding Ages, who have treated at large of Ceremonies. Father Menard cites in his Notes, on S. Gregory's Sacramentary, two ancient Manuscripts which prescribe the Ceremonies of this Benediction, but it is not certain that they are more ancient than the Tenth Century. At that time also they began to recite as a part of Divine Service, the Office of the Virgin Mary: It is related in the Life of S. Ulric, that that Saint was wont to say it every day, and in the continuation of the History of the Bishops of Verdun, mention is made of a certain Clerk whom Berenger, Bishop of that City, the King of Orto the Great, met in the Church, lying prostrate on the Ground, and saying the Office of the Blest'd Virgin. Peter Damien in the following Century, in like manner makes mention of two Clerks who were wont to recite it every day; and Pope Urban II. ordain'd in the Council of Clermont, that the Office of the Virgin Mary should be said on Saturday. We may also observe, that the Councils and Bishops of those Times pronounc'd Eternal Anathema's, that is to say, perpetual Excommunications without hopes of Absolution against the Usurpers of Church Revenues, and against those that offer'd any Injury to Ecclesiastical Persons. The manner of clearing those that were accus'd of any Crime by Fire or Water Ordeal, or by a Duel between two Champions, was then in use, and even Clergy-men were oblig'd to provide a Champion; but there were certain Times when all Acts of Hostility ceas'd, which were call'd The Truce of God.

Bishops

In this Century we find the first Example of the Solemn Canonization of a Saint by the Pope. This Pope is John XV. who plac'd S. Ulric in the Rank of the Saints in the year 995. at the request of Liutolphus Bishop of Augsburg. We shall here subjoin the Act it self, which was drawn up on that occasion: John Bishop, Servant of the Servants of God, to all Archbishops, Bishops and Abbots of France and Germany, Greeting, and the Apostolical Benediction. Having held an Assembly in the Palace of the Lateran, on the last day of January, John the most Holy Pope sitting, with the Bishops, Priests, Deacons and Clergy standing, the most Reverend Liutolphus, Bishop of Augsburg rising up, said, Most Holy Bishop, if it may please you and the rest of the Reverend Bishops and Priests here present, to give leave to read in your presence, the Book which I hold in my hand, concerning the Life and Miracles of S. Ulric, who was sometime Bishop of Augsburg, to the end that you may afterwards ordain what you shall think fit. Then the Life of that Saint being read, they proceeded to the Miracles which were perform'd by him, either in his Life-time, or after his Death, as the restoring of Sight to the Blind; the Exorcising of Devils out of possessed Persons; the Curing of others afflicted with the Palsie, and several other Miracles which were not committed to writing. These things being thus related, we have resolv'd and ordain'd, with the common consent, that the Memory of S. Ulric ought to be honour'd with a pious Affection and a sincere Devotion, by reason that we are oblig'd to honour and shew respect to the Relicks of the Martyrs and Confessors, in order to Adore him whose Martyrs and Confessors they are: We honour the Servants, to the end that this honour may redound to the Lord. It is our pleasure therefore that the Memory of Ulric be Consecrated to the Honour of the Lord, and that it may serve to celebrate his Praises for ever. Then follows the Anathema against those who shall act any thing contrary to this Decree, with the Seals, of the Pope, of five Bishops, of nine Cardinal Priests, and of some Deacons.

This is the first Solemn Bull of Canonization; for the more ancient Examples, which are produc'd of the Canonization of S. Suiibert by Pope Leo III. and that of S. Abbo Martyr by Adrian I. at the request of Offa King of the Mercians in the end of the Eighth Century, are only grounded on Supposititious Pieces; nay, the very Name of Canonization in that sense, is yet more Modern than the Tenth Century, and is found only in the Bull of Pope Alexander III. For the Canonization of S. Edward the Confessor, King of England, in the year 1161, in that of the Canonization of S. Thomas of Canterbury Eight years after, and in the Letter of Ulric Bishop of Constance to Calixtus II. in which he sues for the Canonization of Bishop Conrad.

In the Primitive Church the Name of Saint was given to all Christians, in their Life-time, and even after their Death, when they dyed in the Communion of the Church, having preserv'd the Innocence of their Baptism, but a more particular respect was shewn to those, who dyed upon the account of Religion, and were call'd Martyrs of Jesus Christ; so that the Evidence of the Matter of Fact, and the Testimony of the Faithful, caus'd that Veneration to be paid to their Memory, which their generous Constancy had merited; nevertheless, it belong'd to the Bishops and Clergy to make a Catalogue of those who deserv'd that honour, and to distinguish the false Martyrs from the true. Therefore S. Cyprian in his Ninety seventh Letter admonishes his Clergy to take care exactly to mark all the days of the Death of those who suffer'd Martyrdom, to the end that their Memory might be celebrated with the other Martyrs. Optatus Milevitanus reproves Lucilius for kissing every day, even before the Communion, the Relick of a certain Person, who was said to be a Martyr, but was not yet acknowledg'd as such. It is reported that Pope Clement I. appointed seven Deacons, and Fabian as many Sub-Deacons to commit the Acts of the Martyrs to writing; but this Matter of Fact being grounded only on the Authority of the Author of the Pontifical Book, is of no great Consequence, and so much the rather, in regard that we are inform'd by the Popes Gelasius and Gregory, that these Acts were not much valu'd by the Church of Rome, which was content only to have a Catalogue of the Saints and Martyrs who were to be honour'd. The Councils of Laodicea, Carthage, and Elvira, ordain'd, that great care be taken to make a due distinction between the true and false Martyrs, and the Example of S. Martin of Tours, and several other Reverend Bishops, who dissuaded the People from the Superstitious Worship of false Martyrs, apparently shews that it belongs to all the Bishops to declare what Martyrs ought to be acknowledg'd and publicly honour'd. After the Martyrs in process of time was likewise honour'd, the Memory of Virgins, Anchorites, Bishops renown'd for their Sanctity: and lastly, of those Persons whose singular Vertues were remarkable in their Life-time. Their Names were inserted in the Dypticks, that were recited at the Altar, and they were stiled by the Name of the Saints and Blessed, Τῶν ἁγίων Πατρῶν.

The Canoni-
Saints.

Every particular Church was us'd to place in that rank, those who had first propagared the Christian Religion, the Bishops, and those who had liv'd in great Reputation for their Sanctity. Afterwards were made Kalendars and Martyrologies, of the Saints of several particular Churches, which were by little and little dispers'd throughout the Eastern and Western Parts. The Church of Rome, as others had done, made use of one of these Martyrologies, from which Ado compos'd His, and afterwards took in that of Usuardus; but it does not appear that before the Tenth Century, any Solemn Decrees were made at Rome, or elsewhere, for the Canonization of Saints. Indeed, this Custom was entirely establish'd in the Eleventh Century, when Adelardus, Paschasius Radbertus, S. Wibroad, Gerard Bishop of Toul, and Wolfgang Bishop of Ratibon were Canoniz'd by several Popes. In the Twelfth Peter d'Agmania was Canoniz'd by Pope Paschal II. Conrad Bishop of Constantz, by Calixtus II. at the request of Ulric Bishop of the same place; Hugh Bishop of Grenoble, S. Sturmius Abbot of Fulda, and the Emperor Henry I. by Eugenius III. But it is observable, that these two last Papers declare that the Solemnity of Canonization ought to be perform'd regularly in a General Council, and yet they do it by the Authority of the Church of Rome, with the Advice of the Archbishops and Bishops, who were present in that City.

During these two Centuries, the Metropolitans and Bishops were not depriv'd of the Right to declare as Saints, such Persons as died in the Reputation of Sanctity, and to cause their Bodies to be expos'd to the Veneration of the Faithful: But Pope Alexander III. first reserv'd to himself the Canonization of Saints, as a Matter of great Consequence, and after him Innocent III. assum'd the same Right; insomuch that we do not read that the Bishops solemnly Canoniz'd any Saints since that time, altho' there were some who were generally reputed such among the People.

The Institution of the seven
the Empire.

The Institution of the seven Electors of the Empire is also refer'd to this Century, according to the general Opinion of the German Historians, who wrote after the Reign of Frederick II. and who affirm that Pope Gregory V. and the Emperor Orto III. declar'd, with the consent of the Princes of Germany, that the Election of the Emperor should belong, for the future, only to those seven, without allowing any Vote to the others: But the Original of this Epocha is very much disput'd, and is not grounded on any Authentick Record, or the Testimony of any Contemporary Writer. Indeed some, particularly Jordanes have given it out, that the Right of choosing the Emperor has been peculiar to the seven Electors ever since Charlemagn's time; and this Opinion seems to be confirm'd by the Authority of Pope Innocent III. who acknowledges the power of Electing the King and Emperor to be inherent in the Princes of the Empire, to whom the Right justly belongs, more especially in regard that this Right and Power is deriv'd to them from the Apostolical See, in the person of Charlemagn, who transferr'd the Empire from the Grecians to the Romans. Theodoric Anihem refers this Institution to the time that follow'd the Death of the Emperor Henry II. and makes the Princes of Germany the Authors of it. Onuphrinus maintains, that this number of Electors was not fix'd till after the Death of Frederick II. that before that time all the Princes of Germany were wont to give their Suffrages for the Election of the Emperors; that their number was not restrain'd to seven; that the name of Electors was then unknown; that altho' the precise time of the Institution cannot be determin'd, yet it ought to be fix'd between the years 1250. and 1280. and according to all appearance, under the Pontificate of Gregory X. which perhaps gave occasion to the generality of Authors to refer it to that of Gregory V. Jordanes's Opinion concerning the Antiquity of the seven Electors, is at present generally disclaim'd; it being evident that Charlemagn's Posterity obtain'd the Empire by the Right of Succession, and by the Election of the German, French and Italian Princes and Noble men. After the Death of Lewis IV. the Son of Arnulphus, the last of Charlemagn's Race, Italy became (as we have already declar'd) a Prey to the Berengiers, to Guy, Lambert, Lewis, Boso, Hugh, Loebaire, Raoul, &c. of whom some affected the Title of Emperor, and even caus'd themselves to be crown'd. In Germany, Conrad, Henry the Fowler, and Orto were chosen Kings by the Saxons and French, as it is related by Luitprand and Witichindus, Writers, who flourish'd at that time. The last was also acknowledg'd and crown'd Emperor when he had subdu'd Italy: His Son and Grandson obtain'd the Imperial Diadem by the Right of Succession, and by the Election of the Princes, as well Saxons as French and Italians. Therefore till that time, it cannot be said, that the Election of the Emperor was reserv'd to the seven Electors. Now to know whether this was effected by Pope Gregory V. under Orto III. we need only enquire after what manner Historians relate the Election of his Successors to have been carried on, that is to say, whether it were perform'd by the seven Electors, or indifferently by all the German Princes. Orto Frisingensis assures us, that after the Decease of Orto III. Henry Duke of Bavaria was chosen Emperor by all the Nobility or Lords of the Kindgom: Ab omnibus regni primoribus; and this Author speaks after the same manner concerning the Election of Conrad, who succeeded Henry: But nothing more plainly shews to whom the Right of choosing the Emperor belong'd, then that which happen'd in the time of the Emperor Henry the Fourth, when Pope Gregory the Seventh design'd to Depose him, and caus'd Rodolphus to be substituted in his room; for he made application to all the Dukes, Earls and Bishops of the German Empire, and Rodolphus was chosen by a Party of the Princes different from the Electors, among whom are nam'd the Bishops of Wurtsburg and Metz, and the Duke of Carinthia.

After-

Afterward when Henry the Fifth dispossessed his Father of the Imperial Throne, and caus'd himself to be plac'd on it in his stead, this was done by all the Princes of Germany indifferently, as it is related by Otho Frisingensis, and by the Abbot of Ursperge. Lotharius the Second was in like manner elected Emperor by the Princes of the Empire, at the solicitation of the Archbishop of Mentz. When Conrad the Third was at first only chosen by a small number of Princes, and Henry of Bavaria with some Saxon Princes revers'd his Election, because they were not present, it was requisite to call a general Assembly of all the Princes, in which the Saxons assisted, and gave consent to his Election. After the death of Conrad, Frederick Barbarossa was proclaim'd Emperor in an Assembly of all the Princes of Germany, in which the Barons of Italy were also present. Lastly, In the time of Pope Innocent the Third, the German Princes being divided, after the Death of Henry the Sixth some of them elected his Brother Otho, and others Philip of Schwaben; on which occasion Letters were written on both sides to the Pope: The Electors of Otho were, the Archbishop of Cologne, the Bishop of Paderborn, two other Bishops, and two Abbots, the Duke of Lorraine and Brabant, the Marquess of the Sacred Empire, and the Count of Kuk, who declare in the Body of the Letter, that they elected Otho, and confirm their Proceedings by their respective Seats. Those of the contrary Party were the Archbishops of Madgeburg, Trier, and Resancon; the Bishops of Ratibon, Frisingen, Augsburg, Constantz, Eichstadt, Worms, Spire, Hildersheim, and Brixen; the Chancellor of the Imperial Court, four Abbots, the King of Bohemia, the Dukes of Saxony, Bavaria, Austria and Moravia; the Marquess of Raversperg, and other Potent Noble-men of Germany, who all declare that they had chosen Philip Emperor, and that many other German Princes had consented to his Election by Letters.

This evidently proves that the Election of the Emperors was not reserv'd to the seven Electors, but that it belong'd to all the Princes of the Empire. Innocent the Third replying to those Letters, That his Legat was not capable of assisting at the Election of an Emperor, either in quality of an Elector, or in that of a Judge; not as an Elector, because it does not belong to him; but to the Princes, on whom the Power of choosing the Emperor is devolv'd according to ancient custom; more especially in regard that they receiv'd it from the Holy See, which transferr'd the Roman Empire, in the Person of Charlemagn, from the Grecians to the Romans. These are the words of that Pope, which are manifestly misapplied, when alludg'd in behalf of the seven Electors: it being apparent, that in this place, he makes mention of all the Princes of the Empire, who had an inherent Right to elect the Emperors ever since the time of Charlemagn; affirming that neither had his Legat acted as a Judge, in regard that he had not proceeded against Philip in a Judiciary Form, nor pass'd any Judgment upon the Validity or Nullity of the Election: That therefore he had only perform'd the Function of a Denouncer, by declaring to them, that the Duke was Incapacitated from being elected, whereas Otho was not. That many of those persons, who had a right to choose the Emperor, had approv'd Otho's Election: And that they who had chosen Philip, had forfeited their Right, by carrying on the Election, in the absence, and to the contempt of the others. That besides, Philip was not crown'd Emperor, either in the place where it ought to have been done, or by a person, whose office it was to perform the Ceremony: whereas Otho was crown'd at Aix-la-Chapelle, which was the proper place for his Coronation, and by the Archbishop of Cologne, whose Right it was to officiate at the Solemnity: That therefore he nominat'd and declar'd Otho Emperor, being incited thereto by a principle of Justice, as also upon account that he had a Right to favour whom he thought fit, when the Suffrages of the Electors were divided: That besides, there were several lawful Impediments against Philip Duke of Schwaben, as his being Excommunicated, Attainted of Perjury, and descended of the Race of the Persecutors of the Church.

Thus this Answer supposes that these persons, who had a right to choose the Emperor, and who are mention'd by this Pope, are not only the seven Electors, but also all the Princes and Noble-men of the Empire, of whom a party had elected Otho, and the greater number Philip of Schwaben: But after the death of the latter, all the Suffrages were re-united in favour of Otho A. D. 1209. and in the following year, Otho being Excommunicated, the Princes of Germany, viz. the King of Bohemia, the Dukes of Austria and Bavaria, the Landgrave of Thuringen, and many others being assembled, elected Frederick King of Sicily Emperor. Hitherto we find no mention of the seven Electors; and indeed the first Writer that makes any, is the Cardinal of Osia, who liv'd in the time of Pope Innocent the Fourth, and speaks of them in his Commentary on the Decretal of Innocent the Third, where he affirms that the Electors mention'd in that place, are the Archbishops of Mentz, Cologne, and Trier, the Count Palatine of the Rhine, the Duke of Saxony, the Marquess of Brandenburg, and the Duke of Bohemia. Matthew Paris writing the History of the Council of Lyons, at the same time reports, that after the Deposing of Frederick, Pope Innocent the Fourth ordain'd that the seven Electors should pass into an Island of the River Rhine, there to choose an Emperor; but those seven Electors, whom he names, are the Archbishops of Cologne, Mentz, and Salzburg, and the Dukes of Austria, Bavaria, Saxony, and Brabant. However, Martinus Polonus a contemporary Writer, names the seven Electors after this manner, that is to say, the three high Chancellors of the Empire, viz. the Archbishop of Mentz, the Chancellor of Germany, the Archbishop of Trier Chancellor of Gaul, the Archbishop of Cologne Chancellor of Italy, the Marquess of Brandenburg High Chamberlain, the Palatine of the Rhine High Steward, the Duke of Saxony Gentleman of the Horse, and the King of Bohemia High Cupbearer. This Author says thus much in speaking of Otto the Third, which has induc'd some to believe, that they were instituted under that Emperor, altho' he observes that it did not happen till afterward. Thus this Relation makes it appear that the Institution of the seven Electors attributed to Pope Gregory V. without any just grounds, is nothing near so ancient, and that 'tis very probable that the Electors of the Emperor were not reduced to the number of seven, till the Pontificate of Innocent the Fourth, and that before, all the Princes and Noble-men of the Empire indifferently, might have a share in his Election, notwithstanding the Assertions of the Canonists and the Modern Historiographers of Germany to the contrary.

To the Reader.

BY how much the farther Progress we make, in the several Ages of the Church, so much the greater Number of Contests appear to our View; every Age successively affording Variety of Matter, and producing a new Scene of Affairs. Thus for instance, in the Eleventh Century, different Opinions arose concerning the Holy Sacraments; the Latin and Greek Churches came to an open Rupture; the Popes took upon them to depose Emperors and Kings; and Scholastick Divinity, the Source of an infinite Number of Questions, took then its first Rise. The Minds of Men being recovered, as it were, from that Lethargy, wherewith they were seiz'd in the preceding Age; they began to apply themselves to Study, in the beginning of this: Inſomuch that in a short ſpace of time, all Europe was fill'd with Judicious and Learned Perſonages, who communicated their Knowledge to others, either by Publick Lectures or Writings.

The Controversies, that afterwards aroſe, were likewiſe a powerful Motive to excite them to Study; and gave Occaſion to thoſe, who were endow'd with extraordinary Parts, to exerciſe their Pens, and to ſhew their Learning. Some were very ſucceſſful in imitating the Ancients, both in their Style and manner of Writing; but the greateſt part of them, ſtill retain'd ſomewhat of the Barbariſm and Courſeneſs of the former Age, and others fell into that uncouth and barren Method of handling Matters, which is more eſpecially peculiar to Logicians. The moſt notorious Diſorders were regulated; enormous Crimes were reſtrain'd; and the Biſhops took a great deal of pains in reforming Church-Diſcipline; which nevertheless, was not reſtor'd to its ancient Perfection. Thus much may ſerve to give a general Idea of the Eleventh Century, which the Learned M. DU PIN (according to his uſual Method) has improved to the beſt Advantage.

Ecclesiastical Affairs

Which happen'd in the Eleventh Century.

C H A P. I.

Of the Writings of S. Fulbert, Bishop of Chartres.

WE will begin this Eleventh Century with S. Fulbert Bishop of Chartres, who S. Fulbert was one of the principal Restorers of Learning, of the Sciences, and of Bishop of Divinity. He came from Rome to France, and held his publick Lectures Chartres, in the Schools of the Church of Chartres, about the end of the Tenth, and the beginning of the Eleventh Century. His Reputation gain'd him Scholars from all Parts, who went out of his School full of Learning and Piety, and diffused his Light in France and Germany; insomuch that all the Ingenious Persons of that time, gloried in having been his Scholars. He was in great Repute with King Robert; and, as some Historians tell us, he was his Chancellor. In the Year 1007. he succeeded Radulphus in the Bishoprick of Chartres; and govern'd that Church with a great deal of Vigilance and Prudence, for the space of One and twenty Years and some Months. He dy'd April 10, 1028.

He compos'd several Letters, Sermons, and Pieces of Poetry. His Letters amount to 134.

In the First he explains three Essential Points of our Faith; namely, The Mystery of the Trinity, the Sacrament of Baptism, and the Sacraments of Life, to wit, of the Body and Blood of our Lord. We shall not here stand to repeat what he has said about the Mysteries of the Trinity and the Incarnation; 'tis enough to take notice that he has given a very exact Explanation of them, and that he has very particularly refuted the Errors of the Arians, Nestorians and Eutychians. Upon the Sacraments, he says, That we ought not to rest upon the External and Visible Signs, but to attend to the Invisible Power and Efficacy of these Mysteries. "We know, says he, and 'tis an unquestionable Truth, That we were polluted by our first Birth, and purified by the second; therefore we are buried and we die with JESUS CHRIST, that we may be born again and quicken'd with him. "The Water and the Holy Ghost are united in that Sacrament; the Water denotes the Burial, the Holy Ghost the Life Eternal: as JESUS CHRIST lay buried in the

"Ground

S. Fulbert Bishop of Chartres. "Ground for three Days, so is Man dipp'd, and as it were buried three times in the Water, that he may rise again by the Holy Spirit. He afterwards proves, That 'tis God which Baptizeth; and that tho' a wicked Man should administer this Sacrament, yet it does not hinder the Remission of Sins, because 'tis not he who is the Author, but only the Minister of the Sacrament; as he himself acknowledges, when he says, He who has regenerated you by Water and the Holy Spirit, grant you the Unction of Salvation. Now 'tis God alone who is the Author of Grace, the Dispenser of Spiritual Gifts, and who remits Sins. In discoursing on the third Point, namely, concerning the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of CHRIST, after he had taken notice of its Sublimity, and its Incomprehensibility; he says, That God commiserating our Frailty, has provided a Remedy for us by this propitiatory Sacrifice offer'd for our daily Faults; and forasmuch as he has taken out of our sight, and carry'd to Heaven that Body which he offer'd for our Redemption, that we might not be depriv'd of the present Protection of his Body, he has left us a Salutory Pledge of his Body and Blood, which is not a Symbol of a vain, empty Myſtery, but the real Body of JESUS CHRIST, which his secret Efficacy produceth every Day after an invisible manner, in the Solemnity of those Myſteries, under the visible Form of the Creature. 'Tis this Body which he spake of to his Disciples a little before his Passion, This is my Body, and this is my Blood: And elsewhere, He that eateth my Flesh, and drinketh my Blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him, John 6. 56. Being therefore thus instructed by the Will and Pleasure of this true Master, in partaking of his Body and Blood, we may boldly maintain, That we are chang'd into his Body, and that he dwelleth in us, not only by an Union of the Will, but by the Reality of the Nature which is united to us. He adds, That we should not imagine it to be any Dishonour to a God, who condescended to enter into the Womb of a Virgin, to be in Pure and Virgin Creatures: That what appears externally to be the Substance of Bread and Wine, became internally the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST: And to make this Change the more credible, he compares it to the Creation; and says, That if God could make Creatures out of Nothing, he could more easily convert them into the Substance of his Body.

The Second Letter of Fulbert of Chartres is concerning a Custom in use in his time, of giving to the Priests, after their Ordination, a Consecrated Host, which they kept and communicated of for forty Days together. He had been ask'd the Reason of this Custom. But before he reply'd to that, he observ'd, That different Churches had their different Customs; which was no hindrance of their being united in the same common Faith. Afterwards, he says, That this Custom was observ'd by all the Bishops of his Country: That he remember'd that formerly a Priest, having receiv'd a consecrated Host from his Bishop, and communicating thereof every Day, it one Day happen'd, That after he had celebrated these Myſteries, he lost this Host, by wrapping his Habit in the Communion Table-cloth. That on the Morrow, in the time of Celebration, when he came to communicate, he was very much surpriz'd at his missing the Host. That the Bishop, being inform'd of what had happen'd through his Carelessness, had impos'd on him a very severe Penance. S. Fulbert adds, That this Accident gave him an occasion of asking this Bishop, Whether it were not better that the Priests should eat this Host, the first or second Day after it was consecrated, without dividing it into so many Pieces? But that this Bishop had return'd him this Answer, That they were oblig'd to keep this Host for the space of Forty Days; because, as JESUS CHRIST had been Forty Days upon Earth after his Resurrection, and appear'd to his Apostles several times; so the Bishop, in ordaining his Priests, gave them the Eucharist to take for Forty Days together, to put them in mind of those Forty Days during which our Lord appear'd to his Apostles after his Resurrection. Fulbert having ask'd, Whether this Myſtery might not be as well perform'd by the Bread which the Priests consecrated every Day, was answer'd by the Bishop, That as many particular Churches spread over the Face of the whole Earth, made but One Catholick Church, because they have all one Common Faith; just so, many Particular Hosts offer'd by many Faithful, are only One Bread, because of the Unity of the Body of CHRIST: That the Bread consecrated by the Bishop, and the Bread consecrated by the Priest, are chang'd into one and the same Body of JESUS CHRIST, by the Omnipotency of the same Virtue which operateth in both; but as it may be said in some measure, That the Body of JESUS CHRIST born of the Virgin, and nailed to the Cross, is different from the Body of JESUS CHRIST when raised from the Dead: Even so it seems, That the Bread consecrated on the Ordination-day, and kept by the Priests, may have a particular Signification distinct from the Bread which was consecrated every Day; the former may denote the Body of JESUS CHRIST raised from the Dead, to die no more; the latter, JESUS CHRIST who dies and rises again every Day for us.

The Third and Fourth Letters are directed to King Robert; wherein he prays him to order Eudes Count of Chartres, to cause the Castles to be demolish'd which were built by Vice-count Geoffrey, and very much incommoded the Church of Chartres.

The Two following contain nothing in them remarkable,

The Seventh is directed to Leoterick Archbishop of Sens, whom he exhorts to make use of S. Fulbert his Authority in succouring Avifgaudus Bishop of Mans, whom the Count of that City oppressed; and to threaten the said Count with Excommunication, in case he did not restore to him his Revenue, and let him be quiet.

The Eighth is a Copy of a Letter which he had written to this Avifgaudus, who complain'd that Fulbert and Leoterick had publish'd his Confession. Fulbert gives him to understand, That he wrong'd them, in having such a Thought of them; That they had never publish'd any thing but what was for his Advantage, and which might serve to justify him against those who had accus'd him of having quitted his Bishoprick out of Avarice, Baseness, or for some other dishonourable Cause. That if he had trusted to their Secrecy such Things as he ought to repent of, they had taken great Care to conceal them; but that they had no Power to conceal those, which were publick both before and after his Confession. As to that part of this Bishop's Complaint that they had said of him, That he was in Love with a Monastick Life, Fulbert returns him this Answer, That he ought not to take this amiss, since it could be no Prejudice to him; for the Love of a Religious Life render'd him rather worthy, than unworthy of the Bishoprick into which he desir'd to enter again, were there nothing else to hinder him from it. But that they could not perceive how he could be put into Possession again, because he could not complain that he had been turn'd out of it, or that any one had been put into Possession of that See against his Will; since he had voluntarily quitted it under pretence of his Indisposition, and desired the King, That either Franco, Dean of the Church of Paris, or some other Person might be put into his Place: That after this Resignation, Franco had been put into his Place according to the Election of the Clergy, the Votes of the Laity, the Donation of the King, and the Approbation of the Holy See; and that he had been ordain'd by the Archbishop of Sens his Metropolitan.

In the Ninth Letter he returns an Answer to the Bishop of Paris, upon three Points. The First is upon that Bishop's desiring him to Excommunicate one who had seiz'd upon some Revenues belonging to the Church of Paris. He says he had not done it, (1.) Because he had not met with any Man who would venture to give him notice of this Excommunication. (2.) Because 'twas to no purpose that this Man should be declared excommunicated in the Church of Chartres, without knowing any thing of it. (3.) Because he thought it might more conveniently be done in a Synod of the Bishops of the Province. The Second is about the Arch-deacon of Paris, of whom his Bishop complain'd. Fulbert sent him Word, That it signified nothing to consult him about it, since it was his Business to judge him; and that for his part he could not condemn him, till he had first heard him. The Third is upon a Dispute which happen'd between Adeoldus and the Monks of S. Dennis. He says, That Adeoldus offer'd to refer himself to their Arbitration; and that if he pleas'd to appoint a Day wherein he would meet him, with some One in behalf of the Monks of S. Dennis, at S. Arnulphus, he would be there likewise to adjust these Differences.

The following Letters, to the One and twentieth, contain very little of Ecclesiastical Matters; but in this there is mention made of a very remarkable Matter of Fact. The Abbot of S. Peters of Chartres being very sick, a Monk, named Megenard, stole by Night out of the Monastery, and went to beg the Abbacy of Count Thibold, Son of Count Eudes of Chartres, who was then at Blois. The Count sent him back on the Morrow with Orders, That he should be received as Abbot. Answer was made him, That this ought not to be allowed; because they could not acknowledge him for Abbot, who had begg'd the Abbacy of another before the present Abbot was dead, and who intended to carry it by Authority, and not receive it by Election. He went and carry'd this Answer back to the Count; and within five-Days after, the Abbot dy'd. The Monks, with some Canons who had enter'd the Monastery, held a Chapter: Fulbert was there present, and ask'd them, Whether there were any among them who approv'd of what Megenard had done? They all answer'd, No. Thereupon it was order'd, That One should be sent to the Count, to carry him the News of the Abbot's Death; and to intreat him to grant the Monks leave to chuse another. At the breaking up of the Chapter, two Monks, who had been Provosts of the Out-parts, went to Blois to tell the Count, That Megenard was Elected, and required to be Abbot, by the Monks of S. Peter. These Monks, having Intelligence thereof, made a Protestation against it. The Count brought Megenard, and introduced him by Force: The Monks withdrew, and were receiv'd by Bishop Radulphus. Notwithstanding all this, Megenard receiv'd Benediction from a Bishop of Bretagne, mauger the Protestations of the Deputy of the Archbishop; and of several Monks. He seiz'd upon the Monastery, and solicited the Bishops, and the Pope himself, to be establish'd therein. Fulbert laments this Misfortune, and intreats him to whom he writ, to do his best for these poor Monks.

The Two and twentieth Letter is directed to Pope John XVII. He informs him, That Count Radulphus, whom he had excommunicated for seizing the Revenues of his Church, and for having abus'd a Clerk, was gone to Rome to seek for the Absolution of a Sin, for which he would make no Satisfaction. He conjures the Pope not to admit him to Communion.

J. Fulbert The following Letters to the Thirty fourth, are directed to Leoterick Archbishop of Sens.
Bishop of Chartres. What is most remarkable in them about Matters Ecclesiastical, we shall here briefly infer. In the Three and twentieth he advises him, to send back a Priest, who was guilty of Simony, into his Diocess who had ordain'd him; and, if he tarry'd in his Diocess, to suspend him from all Ecclesiastical Functions. In the Five and twentieth, he desires him to degrade a Priest who had been ordain'd for a Reward, that he might afterwards enjoin him Penance for two Years, and then re-establish him. He adds, That it was not requisite to re-ordain him, but to re-establish him in his Orders, by the proper Instruments and Habits, by saying, I restore to thee the Order of Door-keeper, &c. in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. And afterwards to give him the Blessing in these Terms; The Blessing of God Almighty, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, rest upon thee, that thou mayst be confirm'd in the Sacerdotal Order; and that thou mayst offer Propitiatory Sacrifices to God Almighty, for the Sins and Offences of the People. In the Twenty eighth he complains, That Leoterick had ordain'd several Bishops in his Province, without calling him thereto; and that he had call'd the Bishop of Troyes, who was incapable of any such thing. In the Twenty ninth, he refuses to give Absolution to some Homicides of Senlis, at the Price they offer'd him. In the Thirtieth he declares, That he had not elected Odolrick for Bishop; but that after he had been elected by the Clergy or Laity, he had ordain'd him Priest; and upon Leoterick's Account, he had order'd him to go to Rome, there to be ordain'd Bishop. In the Thirty third he determines, That a Man who had been God-father to his own Son at Confirmation, ought to be divorc'd from his Wife; which he grounds upon a Canon of the Council of Lessines, held under Charlemagne.

The Thirty fourth is written in the Name of Leoterick and Fulbert of Chartres, to the Clergy of the Church of Paris; to whom they wish, in the Preface, Temperantiam in Prosperis, Fortitudinem in Adversis, Charitatem ubique; i. e. Temperance in Prosperity, Courage in Adversity, and Charity at all times. They declare to them, That they sympathize in the Troubles which their Bishop undergoes; but they are sorry, that he would not apply himself to them for Consolation; and they wonder that these Canons should admit to their Communion such Persons who are refractory to the Laws of God, and disobedient to their Bishop: They assure them, they ought not to defer separating them from their Communion, till their Bishop had excommunicated them. In particular, they accuse Lyssard Arch-deacon of Paris, who instead of being what he ought to be, The Eye of his Bishop, the Reliever of the Poor, and the Instructor of the Ignorant, had run counter thereto; and was become to his Bishop a Blinder of the Eyes, to the Poor a Robber, and to the Ignorant an erroneous Guide, by taking away the Tithes and Oblations of the Altars from the Poor, and giving them to Seculars. Besides, they accus'd him of Perjury and Disloyalty to his Bishop; and orders them to shew him this Letter, that so he may reform himself.

In the Thirty sixth, Fulbert demonstrates the Enormity of a Deacon's Offence, who pretending to be a Priest, had celebrated Mass.

In the Thirty eighth he says, That Ebaud, elected Arch-bishop of Rheims, ought not to be rejected, tho' he were a Laick, provided he had been brought up in Piety, and kept himself always untainted in his Morals; because there are several Examples of very great Men, such as S. Ambrose of Milan, S. Germain Bishop of Auxerre, and several others, who, having led a good Life whilst Laicks, have prov'd holy Bishops.

In the Thirty ninth he writes to the Arch-bishop of Bourges, That the Abbot Salomon and his Monks, cited before that Arch-bishop upon the Business of Tedfride, could not possibly make their Appearance, because it was then their Harvest-time; but that at the Council of Orleans, to be held the Fifteenth of October, they would appoint him the Time and the Place, wherein they would have an Hearing. Afterwards he complains, That this Arch-bishop had written a Letter to Arnulphus Abbot of S. Peter, whereby he declar'd, that he had excommunicated his Monks. He gave him to understand, That he had never any where Read that he had such a Power allow'd him. This Arch-bishop had written another Letter to him, wherein he had reprov'd him for having submitted the Abbot Tedfride, without an Hearing, to Monk Salomon, who was only Provost. Fulbert reply'd, That it was not done before Tedfride had been heard, and that he was not Abbot when Salomon was put in his Place: That Abbot Tedfride being accus'd by his Monks, had declar'd, That he would no longer endure them; That he abdicated their Government, and that he would be no longer Monk of Bonneval. That after this Declaration he went, by his Permission, to the Diocess of Bourges; and that the Monks of Bonneval had elected one of their Brethren, and had presented him to Count Odo, that he might confer the Abbacy on him, according to Custom; and that this having been granted to him, he had made him Abbot.

In the Forty fifth, directed to Adarus Bishop of Laon, he relates a tragical Action, which happen'd in his Diocess. The Sub-dean of his Church being dead, the Bishop of Senlis desired of him this Benefice for himself, or his Brother. Fulbert reply'd, That it was not suitable for him, who was a Bishop; and that he could not give it to his Brother, who had neither Age nor Manners requisite for such a Place: That he had chosen a pious Man out of his own Clergy, on whom he had conferr'd that Benefice. That the Bishop of Senlis being incens'd at this Denial, and coveting this Benefice, had sent high Threatnings to the Incumbent: S. Fulbert That these Threatnings afterwards were put in Execution: And that within a few Days Bishop of Chartres. after the People of Senlis had set upon him as he was going to Church, and had kill'd him in the Porch of the Cathedral. That the Authors of this Offence had been discover'd by one of their Valets, who being taken as he was drying his Cloths, had discover'd all. S. Fulbert exhorts the Bishop of Laon to excommunicate these Homicides.

The Forty eighth and ninth, are directed to the Bishop of Senlis, upon the same Subject.

In the Forty seventh, he advises the Arch-bishop of Tours, That if the Pope has refus'd to give him the Pall without a lawful Cause, he ought not to be discourag'd at it; and that he ought to repeat his Requests, because, in the Court of Rome, there were certain Rules, not practis'd any where else.

In the Fiftieth he determines, That a Woman, who was engag'd upon Oath to marry a Man, could not marry another till after his Death, or by his Consent.

The Fifty first contains the Resolution of another Case of the same Nature. A Woman not being willing to live with her Husband, and saying she had rather live a Nun, the Husband desires he may have leave to marry another. S. Fulbert declares, That 'tis his Opinion he could not have leave, till she were either Dead, or turn'd Recluse.

In the Two and fiftieth he declares, That it was better not to celebrate Mass, unless there were two or three Communicants. Which he proves thus; Because the Word Church, without which there can be no true Sacrifice, cannot be said but of many; for when 'tis said Domine Vobiscum, The Lord be with you; it implies, That there are more than one. And lastly, because the Prayers are made for those who offer the Sacrifice.

The Fifty Seventh is directed to the Bishop of Lisieux, who had interdicted the Priests of the Canons of Chartres, who had Churches in his Diocess, because they did not pay him a certain Duty, call'd the Synodical Duty. He says, That this Duty had been remitted to them who were in the Diocess of Chartres, by the Liberality of his Predecessors; but that this does not prejudice the Right of the Bishop of Lisieux, over those who are of his own Diocess; that therefore if he would not be pleas'd to remit it, they should pay him, provided he would re-establiish them.

In the Fifty eighth, directed to the Bishop of Paris, he declaims against the Request which this Bishop had made to him, of giving Benefices to Laicks.

The Sixtieth Letter, directed to Leoterick Arch-bishop of Sens, is written about the Excommunication of Guido, an Accomplice in the Murder of the Sub-dean of Chartres. Leoterick had writ to Fulbert, That this Man desir'd to be examined in a Synod of Bishops. Fulbert returns him this Answer, That there was no further need of examining his Cause, since he was proved Guilty.

In the Sixty first, he tells Theodorick the Reasons why he did not Ordain him, (1.) Because on the Day whereon he was to be ordain'd, he had neither Letters, nor Deputies from the Bishops of the Province, to intimate their Approbation of his Ordination. (2.) Because he had seen a Suspension of the Pope issued out against him, because of an Homicide he had been guilty of. (3.) Because by his own Confession he was unworthy thereof. (4.) Because the Clergy and Laity had not elected him freely, but through Fear, and at the Recommendation of the Prince, who had not given them Liberty of choosing any other. He adds, That though he had so many Reasons for not ordaining him, yet he had like to have been kill'd in the Church by those who supported his Interest. He reproves him for thus endeavouring to be ordain'd by Force, and for having celebrated Mass in a violated Church, before it had been reconcil'd.

The Sixty second Letter is directed to the Bishop of Orleans, to whom at the top he wishes, Obsequium Dilectionis sine fuco Dissimulationis, i. e. The Obedience of Love, without the least Varnish of Dissimulation. He therein gives him the Reasons why his Clergy could not go in a solemn Procession to the Church of Orleans, according to Custom.

In the Sixty Fourth he approves of the Dissolution of Marriage, for the Cause of Impotence.

In the Seventy second, he advises the Abbot and Monks of S. Medard, to live in Subjection to their Bishop, according to the Laws of the Church.

In the Seventy third he gives the same Advice to the Monks of Orleans, whom the Bishop of that City had Excommunicated, because they would not submit to his Jurisdiction.

In the Seventy fourth, he reproves a Clerk of his Church, who had been undutiful to him.

In the Eighty third, directed to the Almoner of the Church of Orleans, he handles this Question, What Punishment a Priest was liable to, who had celebrated Mass without Communicating? He says, That if he did it through Infidelity, or because he was apprehensive of his being guilty of Drunkenness or Uncleanness, he ought to be enjoyn'd Pennance, till he were thoroughly converted. That if he did it through any Disgust, because of the frequent Celebration of the Holy Sacrifice, he ought to be excluded from communicating for a whole Year. That if he did it through any Scruple of Conscience, and for a small Offence, 'tis sufficient to reprove him with Gentleness. And Lastly, That if he did it through any Weakness in his

S. Fulbert his Head or Stomach, he ought to abstain from celebrating, till he was restored to his Health.
 Bishop of Chartres.

The Ninety fifth is a Letter of King Robert directed to Guarlin Arch-bishop of Bourges, wherein he acquaints him, that in several Parts of his Kingdom there fell a shower of Blood, of that Nature, that it stuck so close on the Flesh, on the Cloths, and on the Stones, that no washing could fetch it out: Whereas when it fell on Wood, it was easily wash'd off. He desires to know whether any such thing had ever happened. The Arch-bishop of Bourges Answers him in the following Letter, that this Prodigy Prognosticated some Civil War. for the confirmation of which he produces several Examples of the same Nature taken out of History, to which he adds several myltical Reasons. Fulbert of Chartres in the following Letter relates another Instance of it, taken out of the Writings of Gregory of Tours.

In the Ninety ninth Letter, Fulbert exhorts a Count to do Pennance, and to restore to the Church, what of Right belong'd to it.

In the Hundredth he declar'd to Count Fulcus, who had in his Retinue, several who were Rebels to the King; that he would excommunicate him, if he did not turn them off.

The Hundred and Eighth is a Letter of Compliment from Odilo to Fulbert of Chartres, wherein he gives him many high Commendations.

The Six and twenty following Letters are written in the name of the Canons of Chartres, but contain nothing remarkable concerning Ecclesiastical Affairs.

There is nothing extraordinary in the Sermons of S. Fulbert. The First is upon the Trinity. In the Second he exhorts his People to Repentance. The Third is about the Purification of the Virgin Mary. The Three next upon the Incarnation. These are follow'd by Three other Discourses against the Jews, wherein he proves that the Messias is already come: And by a small Collection of Passages of the Scripture concerning the Trinity and the Incarnation. After this follows a Penitential very much abridg'd, and several Passages of the Fathers about the Eucharist. Next to this come several Hymns, several Pieces in Prose, and lastly several pieces of Poetry very ill done.

The Letters of S. Fulbert are written in a pretty correct Stile, and are full of Delicacy and Spirit; he has not been so happy in the rest of his performances. He Argues very pertinently both upon the Doctrins and the Discipline of the Church, and gives very just Determinations of any Case that is propos'd to him. Upon occasion he shews a great deal of Steadiness, without failing in his Respect to higher Powers. His Works have been Publish'd with a great deal of Remissness by Charles de Villiers Doctor of Paris, from a Manuscript of the College of Navarre, and from several others, and Printed at Paris in the Year, 1608.

Father Luke Dachery has since given us in the addition to the second Tome of his Spicilegium, a Letter of Fulbert of Chartres concerning Ecclesiastical Revenues; wherein this Author in the first place lays down by several Passages of the Fathers, and especially of S. Jerom, that these Revenues are design'd for the Maintenance of the Poor. Secondly, That the holy Vessels ought not to be Sold no more than the Crucifixes, unless upon urgent Occasions, and when the Poor are in such extream Want, that they cannot be reliev'd otherwise. Thirdly, That they shoud take care not to sell them to such Persons, as might convert them to profane Uses. They ascribe likewise to S. Fulbert the Life of S. Aupert Bishop of Cambrai, refer'd by Surin to the Thirteenth of December.

CH A P. II.

An Account of the Controversie about the Eucharist, set on foot by Berenger; and of his several Condemnations.

Berenger
 Arch deacon of Angers.

BERENGER was born at Tours about the end of the Tenth, or the beginning of the Eleventh Century. He Studied at Chartres under Fulbert, and staid in that City till the Death of that Bishop. 'Tis said that from that very time it appear'd that he had several particular Opinions, and that Fulbert upon his Death took notice of him as a dangerous Man, and as one who corrupted a great many People. It was perhaps the Offence he took at being thus stigmatiz'd, which induc'd him to leave Chartres, and return to Tours. And being in great Repute for his Learning, he was made choice of to be Lecturer in the publick Schools of S. Martin: He gave such Content in that Employ, that they made him Chamberlain, and afterwards Treasurer of the Church of S. Martin. No Body knows the Reason why he left Tours, and went to Angers; but 'tis certain that thither he retir'd, and was very very well receiv'd by the Bishop, who made him Arch-deacon of his Church, and shew'd him a great deal of Respect. He who was then Bishop of that City, goes under two Names ; for he is call'd Bruno by Theodwin Bishop of Liege, by Durandus Abbot of Troarn, and Marbodius Cotemporary Authors, and in the Decretal of the Dedication of the Church of S. John of Angey : And he is call'd Eusebius in the Title of the Letter which he wrote to Berenger ; in that which was sent to him by Gregory VII. In the ancient Inscriptions of S. Aubin of Angers, in two ancient Catalogues of the Bishops of Angers, which are in the Library of Monsieur Colbert, and in almost all the ancient Records. These two Names are given him in the Decree whereby Geoffry Count of Anjou and Agnes his Wife, granted the Church of Allbaillois in the Suburbs of Angers to the Abbey of the holy Trinity of Vendosme, which bears date in the Year, 1048. and sign'd by Eusebius Bruno Bishop, and Berenger Arch-deacon of Angers : And in the Chronicon of S. Aubin of Angers, Printed by Father Labbe in the first Tome of his Bibliotheca Manuscriptorum, he is call'd twice Eusebius Cognomento Bruno. He was made Bishop of Angers in the Year 1047. Sometime after Berenger coming to that City, began there to broach his Doctrin upon the Eucharist. Bruno maintain'd his Opinions, and within a short time he had a great many Followers : But these Opinions were rejected and opposed by the greatest Scholars of that Age, as a new Heresy. Lanfrank began the Controversy, and Berenger being inform'd of it by Ingelram of Chartres, wrote to him a Letter, by which he gave him to understand, that he was very much to blame in accusing John Scotus of Heresy, for his Opinion about the Sacrament of the Altar, opposed to the Sentiment of Paschasius ; and that he could Wish to meet him in the presence of several Persons, that he might convince him that it was through prepossession that he had such Thoughts : Besides, that if he judg'd John Scotus to be an Heretick, upon the account of what he had deliver'd about the Eucharist, he must likewise charge S. Ambrose, S. Jerom, S. Austin, and several other Fathers with Heresy. Lanfrank was gone to Rome, when this Letter was carry'd to Normandy ; but for all this it was Publish'd, and scandaliz'd a great many People. It was likewise carry'd to Rome by a Clerk of the Church of Rheims, who shew'd it to a great many, and read it publicly in the Council held at Rome, under Pope Leo IX. in the Year, 1050. Berenger was thereupon Excommunicated, and Lanfrank then present was engag'd to clear himself of the Suspicion he lay under of holding Correspondence with Berenger, and to give an Account of his Faith : He did it without any Hesitation, made a profession of the Faith of the Church, and prov'd it by the Testimony of the Fathers. It was Order'd in this Council that another should be held at Verceil in September, to which Berenger should be Cited, and Lanfrank was desired to be present. Berenger being inform'd of his Condemnation, retired into Normandy to Arisfrede Abbot of Preaux, and endeavour'd to win over to his Party, William Duke of Normandy. But that Prince detain'd him at Brienne, where he call'd an Assembly of the Bishops of his Duchy, who Condemn'd Berenger, and a Clerk who had accompanied him. In the Letter of Durandus, Abbot of Troarn, this Council is refer'd to the Year, 1053. But certainly there must be an Error in the Text, or Durandus was mistaken : For 'tis evident by the Testimony of Durandus himself, that the Convention of Brienne was before the Council of Verceil, which was held in September 1050. according to the Testimony of Herman Contract.

Bruno or Eusebius Bishop of Angers.

The Council of Rome, in the Year, 1050.

The Council of Brienne.

Berenger being drove out of Normandy retir'd to Chartres, where he dar'd not to declare himself, but when he was ask'd his Opinion, only answer'd, That he would tell it when Time and Place should offer themselves. However, this new Doctrin beginning to spread it self, Henry King of France to stop the Progress of it, resolv'd to call a Council at Paris, and order'd Berenger to appear there to give an account of his Doctrin. Theodwin or Dietwin Bishop of Liege understanding the King's Design, wrote a Letter to him ; wherein he Condemns the Doctrin of Berenger, which he said was likewise the Doctrin of Bruno Bishop of Angers ; but he disapproved the Design he had of causing them to be Condemn'd in a Council ; because Bruno being a Bishop, could not be Tryed without the Authority of the Holy Apostolick See. Therefore he advises him to pass by the impious and sacrilegious Opinions of these Persons, till such time as he had receiv'd Authority to Condemn them, after they had been heard at Rome, tho' he thought it needless to hear them ; and to call a Council to Condemn them, and that all that was to be done was to consider what Punishment to inflict upon them. Theodwin in this Letter accuses Berenger and Bruno, not only of believing that the Eucharist was nothing else but the Shadow and Type of JESUS CHRIST, but also of holding erroneous Opinions about Marriage, and of disapproving Infant-Baptism. This Letter has been publish'd under the Name of Durandus Bishop of Liege ; but since it was written after the Year 1050. it cannot be his, for he dyed in the Year 1025. therefore it must be Theodwin's, who was ordain'd Bishop of Liege in 1048.

The Letter of Theodwin against Berenger.

The time appointed for the Synod of Verceil being come, Leo IX. came thither with a great many Prelates of several Nations, and opened the Council the first of September, in the Year 1050. Berenger durst not appear there in Person, but sent two Clerks to maintain his Cause. They read in the Council the Book of John Scotus, which gave Rise to the Error of Berenger, and it was Condemn'd by all the Fathers of the Council. The Opinion of Berenger was likewise examin'd and condemn'd, and the Doctrin of the Church maintain'd maintain'd and defended by Laufank, was approv'd of and confirm'd by an unanimous Consent. The two Clerks who were sent by Berenger would have undertaken his Defence, but they no sooner began to speak, but they were forced to hold their Tongues.

The Council of Paris in 1050. Notwithstanding the Remonstrance of Theodwin, King Henry held the Council which he had call'd at Paris on the sixteenth of November in the same Year; but neither Berenger nor Bruno durst appear there. In their Absence the Bishop of Orleans caus'd a Writing of Berenger's to be read, which was Condemn'd as Heretical by all the Assembly. They Condemn'd the Authors and Abettors of that Doctrin, together with the Book of John Scotus. It was there order'd that the Author of that Heresie and his Adherents should be prosecuted and constrained to recant under the pain of being put to Death. These Matters of Fact are Recorded by Theodwin, and Durandus Abbot of Troarn. None besides these two Authors have made mention of this Council of Paris, and accus'd Bruno of abetting Berenger in his Error: But forasmuch as they liv'd at that Time, 'tis hard to discredit them.

Adelman Whilst the higher Powers made use of their Authority against the growing Heresie of Berenger; the Learned World oppos'd it by their Writings. Among the rest, Adelman a Clerk of the Church of Liege, who had been Berenger's School-fellow under Fulbert Bishop of Liege. Chartres, and who afterwards was Bishop of Bresse; when he understood that Berenger taught this Error, wrote a Letter to him, wherein after he had put him in mind of their old Acquaintance, and of Fulbert's Chartres their common Master, he conjur'd him to relinquish his Error, demonstrating to him, That it was not impossible for that God who had Created all Things out of nothing, to change the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Christ. He had sent another Letter some time before upon the same Subject to Paulinus Bishop of Metz, that he might admonish Berenger to renounce his Error. We have lost this last Letter, and several others mention'd by Tritheimius: But the former is among the Authors who wrote upon the Eucharist, Printed at Louvain in 1551 and 1561. and in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

The Letter of Berenger to Ascelin. Ascelin a Monk of S. Evrou in Normandy, sent likewise about the same time a Letter to Berenger against his Error. Berenger upon his return from Normandy, had a Conference with Ascelin and his Scholar William. They publicly declar'd, That he had acknowledg'd the Book of John Scotus to be blamable, and that he durst not maintain his Error. Berenger being inform'd of it, wrote a Letter to Ascelin, wherein he gave him to understand, That he was not minded to Dispute against him in the Conference which they had together, because at that time he had resolv'd not to discourse with any one about the Eucharist, till he had satisfied the Bishops, to whom he ought to give an account of his Doctrin. That it was upon this Account that he would not so much as refute that damnable and impious Maxim maintain'd by William, That every Man ought to approach the Holy Table at Easter: But that Ascelin was conscious to himself that he never said John Scotus was an Heretick: That all he had said about it, was, That he had not seen all the Writings of that Author, but that what he had read of his about the Eucharist contain'd nothing in it Heretical; and if he had spoken any thing which was not so exact, he was ready to disown it. That Lastly, They could not Condemn him for having alledg'd that the substance of Bread remains in the Sacrament, since 'tis the Doctrin of the Fathers which he defended, designing nothing else than to follow in every thing S. Ambrose, S. Austin and S. Jerom; and that therefore there was no Ground for what Arnulphus had said to him in Ascelin's own hearing, Prithec let us alone in the Opinion we have been brought up in; since he did not pretend to establish a Novelty, but to maintain the Doctrin of the Fathers.

Ascelin's Letter to Berenger. Ascelin return'd him this Answer, That he had receiv'd his Letter with Joy, hoping therein to have heard the News of his Conversion; but that in reading it, his Joy was turn'd into Sorrow, perceiving that he still adhered to his old Error. That he did no longer see in him that depth of Thought, and that Learning, which he had formerly; since he had forgot the Passages of their last Conference, particularly that about the Proposition made by William, That every Man ought to approach the Holy Table at Easter; to which he had added this Restriction, Unless he were excluded from this Heavenly Banquet by some Crime, which ought not to be done but by the Order of his Confessor; otherwise the Keys of the Church would become useles. That for his part he did not repent of what he had said in that Conference, since he had maintain'd a notorious and unquestionable Truth, from which he would never Swerve, viz. That the Bread and Wine were by the Efficacy of the Holy Spirit, and the Ministry of the Priests, turn'd into the real Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST; which is plainly proved out of the Holy Scriptures, unless corrupted by a vicious and false Interpretation. That for what relates to John Scotus, he was perswaded that in looking upon him as an Heretick, he did nothing unbecoming either his Priesthood or Religion, since he perceiv'd that the whole aim and design of that Author is to prove, That what is Consecrated on the Altar, is not the true Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST; which Error he endeavours to establish, by several Passages of the Fathers falsely explain'd, and among others by a Prayer of S. Gregory, upon which he says, that this change of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST was figurative and not real. That he look'd upon Berenger himself to be a Man of more Learning than to maintain the Orthodoxy of this Expression: That he had not ventur'd to defend it in their Conference; that he only said he had not read the Book of John Scotus quite out: That he was surpriz'd to see such a prudent Man give so large Encomiums of a Book which he had not read through: That lastly, for his part, he was of the Opinion of Paschasius and of the other Catholics, and that he firmly believed that the Faithful receiv'd upon the Altar the real Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST under the appearance of Bread and Wine; and that this Opinion was not contrary to the Laws of Nature which depend on the Will of God, nor to the Testimony of the Gospel. To conclude, that the Advice which Arnulphus (whom he calls the singing Man) had given him was very wholesome, and that he ought to follow it, to be ashamed of defending a Book Condemn'd in the Council of Vercell, and to keep close to the Catholick and Apostolick Tradition, from which he had Swerv'd. This and the former Letters were publish'd by Father Luke Dachery in his Notes upon the Life of Lanfrank.

[And here it is worth our while to observe how modest the first Advancers and Promoters of the Doctrin of Transubstantiation were in their Assertions: Who did not assert any thing about it more than what we Protestants readily own, viz. That the Faithful do verily and indeed receive the Body and Blood of Christ in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, signified to us by the Bread broken, and the Wine pour'd out.]

About the same time Berenger wrote another Letter to Richard, who was then at the Berengers French Court, wherein he prays him to speak to the King in his behalf, that so he might remedy the Injustice which had been done him; and to give him to understand that they had not done well in Condemning John Scotus in the Council of Vercell, and in justifying Paschasius. That the Clerks of Chartres had given him a false explication of the Opinion of S. Fulbert, or rather of the Passage of S. Augustin related by that Bishop. That to induce the King to hearken unto him, he might inform him that John Scotus wrote his Book by the Order, and at the instance of his Predecessor Charles the Great (that is, Charles the Bald) who had charg'd him to refute by writing the Folly of Paschasius; that upon this Account he was oblig'd to grant his Protection to that dead Person against the Calumnies of the living, if he were minded to shew himself the worthy Successor of that great Prince.

While these Disputes were on foot between Berenger and his Adversaries, Leo IX. dies in the Year 1054. His successor Victor II. confirm'd what he had done against Berenger, and 'tis said likewise that he held a Council at Florence, wherein he Condemn'd him. Hildebrand Tours in his Legat in France having held a Council at Tours in the Year 1055. made Berenger appear there, and gave him Liberty to defend his Opinions: Berenger resolv'd to forsake them, and to engage himself by an Oath to hold the common receiv'd Doctrin of the Church, concerning the reality of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST in the Eucharist.

But he either did this pretendedly, or else soon chang'd his mind; for after this Council he continu'd to broach his Doctrins as before; and not being capable of Teaching his Error publicly, he explain'd it in particular, and wrote several Treatises in its Defence. So that his Heresie continuing to spread it self, Nicholas II. who in the Year 1058. succeeded Stephen X. Pope Victor's Successor, cited Berenger to a Council held at Rome in the Year 1059. which was compos'd of 113 Bishops of several Nations. Berenger at the first maintain'd his Opinion, which was refuted by Alberic a Monk of Mount Cassinus, and by Lanfrank; but afterwards he yielded, and declar'd that he was ready to believe and subscribe to what the Pope and Council would be pleas'd to prescribe to him. Upon this, Humbert Cardinal Bishop of Blanchefesve, prepar'd a form of Faith, which was Sworn to and Subscrib'd by Berenger in these Words: "I Berenger an unworthy Deacon of the Church of S. Maurice of Angiers, having a knowledge of the true Catholick and Apostolick Faith, do abjure all Heresie; especially that of which I have been suspected, which holds that the Bread and Wine upon the Altar after the Consecration are only the Sacrament, and not the real Body and Blood of our Lord JESUS CHRIST; and that it could not be handled by the Priests, nor broke and eat by the Faithful, unless it were only in the Sacrament, and after an insensible manner. I approve of the Doctrin of the Holy and Apostolick See of Rome, and I confess from my Heart and with my Lips, that I hold the same Faith which the Holy and Reverend Pope Nicholas, and his holy Synod have declar'd and assur'd me that I ought to hold, according to the Evangelical and Apostolick Authority, viz. That the Bread and the Wine which lie upon the Altar, after the Consecration, are not only the Sacrament, but also the real Body and Blood of our Lord JESUS CHRIST, and that 'tis handled by the Priests, broke and eaten by the Faithful, not only in the Sacrament, but also in a sensible way. The which I swear By the Holy and Consubstantial Trinity, and by the Holy Evangelists, declaring that those who shall advance any thing contrary to this Faith, deserve themselves, their Doctrins, and their Followers to be Anathematiz'd. And if I my self should be so bold, as to think or teach any thing contrary to this Profession of Faith, I submit my self to the utmost Rigor of the Canons. In Testimony whereof, I have set my Hand to these Presents, which I have heard read over and over. Afterwards he burnt his own Writings, and the Book of John Scotus.

Letter to Richard.

The Council of the Year 1055. against Berenger.

The Council of Rome in 1059.

The first Profession of Faith made by Berengera

Berenger This Profession of Faith seem'd to be sincere: But Berenger was no sooner return'd to France, but finding King Henry dead, and his Son Philip in his Minority, he thought that now he might maintain his Error afresh without Restraint. He repented that he had burnt his Writings, and made a new one in opposition to that Profession of Faith, which he said was Humbert's, and not his. This is that Piece which Lanfrank and Guitmond refuse. In a Word, he persisted in the Defence of his Error, and fled out into a Passion against Pope Leo, and the Holy See. Pope Alexander II. who succeeded Nicholas, being inform'd thereof, wrote him a Letter, wherein he exhorts him absolutely to renounce his Error, and to be no longer a Scandal to the Church. But instead of obeying the Pope, he had the Confidence to send him Word, That he would do nothing in it, and remain'd obstinate in his Opinion.

The Council of Roan against Berenger, in 1063. Maurilla Arch-bishop of Roan, willing to put a stop to the progress of this Heresy, which visibly spread it self in Normandy, upon the account of that Influence which Berenger had over it, calls a Provincial Council of Bishops at Roan, in the Year, 1063. wherein he prepar'd a Profession of Faith, declaring, That the Bread and Wine, after Consecration, were chang'd into the very Substance of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST; anathematizing all those who are of the contrary Opinion, or oppose this true Faith: And it was order'd, That for the future this Profession of Faith should be subscribed by the Bishops, before their Ordination.

The Council of Poitiers against Berenger. In the Year, 1075. Geraldus Bishop of Angoulesme, and Legat of the Holy See for the Provinces of Tours, Bordeaux and Auche, call'd a Council at Poitiers, wherein Berenger was accus'd, and like to be kill'd. But this Accident did not alter his Mind, for as soon as the Heat was over, he went from the Council as unconvinc'd of the Truth, as he came.

The Letter of Eusebius or Bruno, Bishop of Angers. It was at this time that Eusebius Bishop of Angers, who is the same with Bruno, wrote to Berenger; That he had receiv'd a Letter from him, which intimated, That Geofrey was a publick Abettor of Lanfrank's Fooleries; and that in that Letter he desir'd, that Geofrey might be summon'd before him, to give an Account of the Explication of a Passage of S. Ambrose, taken out of the Treatise concerning the Sacraments. That in Answer to his Letter he declares to him, That he knew not whether that Question had been started out of Vain-glory; but this he knew very well, that after it had been spread over a great part of the World, it had cast a great Blemish on the Reputation of the Church of Angers, which was expos'd to the Calumnies and Upraidings of all Men, both far and near. That for his part he had resolv'd to decline these Disputes, to keep to the Text of the Holy Scriptures, and to believe that the Bread and Wine are the real Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST after Consecration, without concerning himself how this could be: And that if any one should ask him, What were the Thoughts of the Fathers and Doctors about it? he would refer such an Inquirer to their Writings; and advise him to put such a Construction upon what he found in them, as was most conformable to the Doctrine of the Gospel. That this was not out of any disrespect to the Writings of the Fathers, but because he thought that the principal Regard ought to be had to the Text of the Gospel, for fear it should cause a Scandal in the Church of God, if the Opinions of the Fathers should not be well understood, or the Passages taken out of them should be corrupted. That it was after this manner that the disturbance which happen'd at Tours in the Presence of Gerald, and in the same City in the presence of Hildebrand, was appeas'd; and that this Plague, which began to spread it self afresh, had been stop'd by the Command of the Prince, and by the Authority of the Archbishop of Besancon. That thereupon he had taken up a Resolution to hold no more Conferences, nor to enter into any Dispute upon that Subject, and that he would never give his Consent for the holding of any Assembly upon that Affair: That if any such should be holden, he would not be at it. That he would not give Audience to the Disputants, and would exclude such as continu'd obstinate from the Communion, because this Business had been determin'd thrice in the Province, and four times by the Sentence of the Holy See.

The Council of Rome in 1078. under Gregory vii. against Berenger. At last Gregory VII. willing to put an end to what he had begun whilst Legat, cited Berenger to a Council, held at Rome in December, 1078. and gave him time to consider what he had to do till the next Council, which was held the next Year in February. Berenger did still adhere to his Opinion, and maintain'd it very vigorously: Bruno, afterwards Bishop of Signi and Abbot Wolphelmus, oppos'd him. The Question was debated between them for three Days; and, at last, Berenger was forc'd to make his Recantation, drawn up in these Terms: "I Berenger, believe in my Heart, and confess with my Mouth, That the Bread and Wine which are upon the Altar, are substantially chang'd by the Mystery of the Priest, and by the Words of our Saviour, into the true, proper, and quickening Body and Blood of our Lord JESUS CHRIST, which came out of his Side: And not only figuratively and by virtue of the Sacrament, but truly, properly and substantially, according to the Intention of these Presents, and as I have read, and you understand it. This is my Faith, contrary to which I will not, for the future, broach any Doctrine: So help me God, and the Holy Evangelists. After this, the Pope conjur'd Berenger, by the Almighty God, and by the Holy Apostles S. Peter and S. Paul, never to dispute again with any Person, about the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, unless to undeceive those on whom he had im-pos'd. Upon this Declaration he granted Berenger a Letter, directed to the Arch-bishop of Tours and to the Bishop of Angers; wherein he declar'd to them, That he had taken Berenger into his Protection, and enjoind them to defend him against Eulcus Richinus, the Count of Angers, who bore him an ill Will, and against all his Enemies. He likewise granted him a Bull, which excommunicates those who should attempt any thing against his Person or Estate, or should call him Heretick. These Favours, granted by Gregory VII. to Berenger, gave an Occasion to the Bishops, who exhibited a Decree against this Pope, in a Council held at Bressè, in the Year, 1080. to accuse him of being a Disciple, or at least a Favourer of that Heretick. But this Charge against this Pope was groundless and unjust, since he had not entertain'd Berenger till after he had abjur'd his Heresy: Tho' perhaps he was too easy in giving Credit to the Words of so unconstant a Man. In Truth, it appears that Berenger did persist in teaching his Heresy, since he was forc'd to appear at a Council held at Bordeaux The Council of Bordeaux in the Year, 1080. by Hugh the Pope's Legat, at first Bishop of Dia, and afterwards Arch-bishop of Lions, and there to give an Account of his Faith, as 'tis recorded in the Chronicon of S. Maixans. This is the last Scene wherein Berenger appear'd. He spent the rest of his Life in the Isle of S. Cosmus, near the City of Tours; to which Place he retir'd after the Council of Rome and dy'd there Jan. 6. 1088. against Berenger.

An ancient Author to be met with in the Library of Fleury, William of Malmesbury, Matthew of Paris, Vincent of Beauvais, and several other more modern Authors, tell us, That Berenger was a real Convert, and that he died a sincere Penitent, being heartily sorry for having infected so many with his Error. Clarius a Monk of Fleury, and the Authors of the Chronicon of S. Peter the Living of Sens, and of the Chronicon of S. Martin of Tours, speak very much in his Praise. We have likewise two noble Epitaphs made in his Praise; the one by Baudry Abbot of Burgneil, and afterwards Bishop of Dol; and the other by Hilbert Arch-deacon of Mans, who was afterwards Bishop of that City, and at last Arch-bishop of Tours. In a Word, his Memory is still had in veneration at Tours, where they say that the Prebendaries of S. Martins have a Custom of paying him their Respects every Year. 'Tis probable that these Authors who believe the real Presence, would never have bestow'd so many Encomiums on Berenger, if they had not been fully convinc'd of his Conversion. And yet we find that Lanfrank, in his Fiftieth Letter, written since the Year, 1080. to Reginald Abbot of S. Cyprian of Poitiers, and the anonymous Author of a Treatise written in the Year, 1088. and publish'd by Father Chifflet, speak of him still as an Heretick, without mentioning his Conversion in the least. We find that after his return from Rome, he was oblig'd to give an Account of his Faith to the Council of Bordeaux. But that which raises the greatest cause of suspecting his Conversion, is, That after his second Return from Rome to France, he compos'd a Treatise in opposition to his last Profession of Faith, as Father Mabillon, who had seen the Manuscript, assures us: The which being joined to the Testimony of Berthol Priest of Constance, who says positively, That Berenger had not chang'd his Opinion, seems to destroy all that has been said about his Repentance, or at least shews that it was very late, and that he did not change his Opinion till a little before his Death.

Norwithstanding his Retractations and Repentance, several of his Followers persisted in their Error; but by degrees this Heresy was extirpated. One Anastasius, a Monk of S. Sergius of Angers, was forc'd to abjure it, and to deliver a Profession of his Faith to Gerald Abbot of S. Aubin of that City, related by Father Luke Daubery, in his Notes upon the Life of Lanfrank. The Fathers of the Council of Placentia in the Year, 1095. condemn'd the Heresy of Berenger afresh: And lastly, Bruno Arch-bishop of Treves, drove out of his Province the Followers of this Heretick. The Followers of Berenger.

Berenger was likewise suspected of several other Errors. Guirmond, after Theodwin, accuses him of believing, That Infant-Baptism was null; and of destroying lawful Marriages, by permitting Men to abuse all Women without distinction. Lanfrank and William of Malmesbury, accuse him of harbouring a strange Contempt for the Writings of the Fathers. Lastly, Guirmond and S. Anselm relate, as an Error which he had advanc'd, That our Saviour after his Resurrection, did not enter through the Chamber-door, where his Disciples were, before it was opened. As to this Error, 'tis a Consequence of his Opinion about the Eucharist. As for the two former, so far as they are not in the Writings of Berenger, and were never (as we can learn) charg'd upon him by other Authors: And since he has not been condemn'd for maintaining them, nor ever oblig'd to retract them in any Council, 'tis hard to suppose that he taught them publicly; and the rather, because they are ancient Errors condemn'd long before that in the Church. Other Errors of Berenger.

We have by us a Letter of Berenger to Asceline, another to Richard the Abbot; three Professions of Faith; a part of his Treatise in opposition to his second Profession of Faith: And Father Mabillon has seen a Treatise in Manuscript against the third. The Treatise which he compos'd against Adelman, alias Alman, Bishop of Bressè, of which Sigibert of Gemblours makes mention, and his other Pieces, are lost. He wrote in a dry and scholastick Stile. Sigibert has reason for what he says, when he tells us, That he abus'd the Sophisms of Logick in opposition to the Apostolical Simplicity; and that this could be no Excuse to him, nor Edification to others, because he rather rendred clear Things obscure, than obscure Things clear. The Writings and Adversaries of Berenger.

clear. He does not seem to have had very much Skill in the Antiquities of the Church. His Error was oppos'd by Lanfrank, Archbishop of Canterbury; by Adelman, Clerk of the Church of Liege, and afterwards Bishop of Bresse; by Asceline, Monk of S. Evrou in Normandy; by Guy Aretine, Abbot of La-Croix-Saint-Leufroy; by Durandus, Abbot of Troarn; by Hugh, Bishop of Langres; by Alberic, Monk of Mount-Cassin; by Guitmond, Archbishop of Averse; and by Alger Deacon of Liege, and afterwards Monk of Cluny.

CHAP. III.

Of the Writings of Lanfrank, Arch-bishop of Canterbury; of Guitmond; of Alger; and of the other Authors who have refuted the Error of Berenger.

Lanfrank, Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

LANFRANK, descended from a very honourable Family of Pavia; for his Father was Warden or Keeper of the publick Archives, where were repositd the Minutes of the Laws and Customs of the City. After he had went through the course of his Studies in his own Country, he went into France, under the Reign of King Henry, and came to Auranches, where he taught publickly for some time. In his Journey to Roan, he was taken by Highway-Men, who robb'd him; and having bound him, left him in a Forest near the Abby of Bec. On the Morrow, some Passengers finding him in that Condition, unbound him; and, upon his asking them, Whether there were not a Monastery near that Place; they directed him to the Abbey of Bec, which was newly founded. He retir'd thither, and took upon him the Habit at the Hands of Herluin chief Abbot of that Monastery. This happen'd in the Year, 1041. The Genius, the Learning, and the Virtue of Lanfrank, being soon discern'd, he was elected Prior of his own Monastery, and chosen by William I. Duke of Normandy, to be one of his Counsellors of State. He went to Rome under the Popedom of Leo IX. and clear'd himself, before that Pope, from the Error of Berenger, which was laid to his Charge. He return'd thither a second time under the Popedom of Nicholas II. to request a Dispensation for the Marriage of Duke William with the Daughter of the Count of Flanders, his Kinswoman; which was granted, upon Condition that the Duke and his Lady would build a Monastery. The Duke gave Orders for the building the Monastery of S. Stephen of Caen, of which Lanfrank was made Abbot in the Year, 1063. He was so highly in the Duke's esteem, that this Prince, after he had conquer'd England, could find none more proper than him to send to Rome to Pope Alexander II. to treat with him about the Reforming the Churches of that Kingdom. After the Death of Maurillus Arch-bishop of Roan, Lanfrank was pitch'd upon to be his Successor. But he refus'd it. And upon his Refusal, the Bishop of Auranches having obtain'd that Arch-bishoprick, Lanfrank went a fourth time to Rome, to get this Translation to be approv'd of, and to desire the Pall for that Arch-bishop. He obtain'd his Request from the Pope; who sent two Legats to crown William King of England, and to reform the Churches.

The Council of Windsor.

These Legats held a Council at Windsor, wherein they depos'd several Bishops who were convicted of Crimes, or of gross Ignorance; and among the rest, Stigand Arch-bishop of Canterbury, who had possess'd himself of that See by Intrigues and Violence. Lanfrank was oblig'd, against his Will, by the-express Command of Abbot Herluin, to take upon him this Arch-bishoprick in the Year, 1070. He govern'd that Church, for Nineteen Years together, with a great deal of Wisdom and Authority. He still kept up his Credit with King William, in whose Absence he was Regent of the Kingdom. He dy'd a little after that Prince, in May, 1089.

Lanfrank's Commentary on S. Paul's Epistles.

The largest Treatise of Lanfrank, is his Commentary upon the Epistles of S. Paul. He gives us the Text, with some Illustrations, in a Parenthesis; and adds to this, some Notes of Explanation taken out of S. Augustin, or out of the Commentary attributed to S. Ambrose, or such as himself compos'd. Those out of S. Augustin are to be met with in that Father; but a great part of those which are cited under the Name of S. Ambrose, are not to be met with in the Commentary which goes at present under the Name of that Saint: And there are likewise some others which are S. Augustin's, and are ascribed to S. Ambrose. These Notes are short and sententious; and the Author keeps close to the Literal Meaning and the Morality of the Epistles. Peter Lombard cites several Passages out of this Commentary upon S. Paul, which are not exactly in the same manner expressed by Lanfrank.

Lanfrank's Treatise of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, is a Refutation of Lanfrank's a Piece which Berenger had made against the real presence of the Body of JESUS CHRIST in the Eucharist. He tells him that he could wish that he might have a Conference with him, being persuaded that it would be very advantageous either to reclaim him from his Error, or at least to rectify his followers. But that since he took upon him to maintain it in his private Converse with ignorant Men, and at the same time to own the Orthodox Truth before the Councils, rather out of fear of Death, than for the sake of Truth, he avoided Persons of clearer Heads, who could pass a sound Judgment upon his Discourses. That if he could once Discourse with him in the presence of sensible Men, he would convince him what an ill use he made of several Passages of the Fathers, which were either false, or corrupted, or ill explain'd. That not being content to Teach his Errors with his Mouth, he likewise spread them through the World by the Writings which his Disciples publish'd. That his first Writings had been Examined and Condemn'd by Pope Nicholas of blessed Memory, in a Council at Rome of One hundred and thirteen Bishops; in which Council Berenger himself had thrown them into the Fire, and promis'd upon Oath, that he would never swerve from the Faith of the Fathers, nor Teach any more the Doctrine which he had advanc'd about the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST. That he had since that broke his Oath by Writing against that Synod, against the Catholick Faith, and the Doctrine of all the Churches. That this is the Treatise which he undertakes to refute, by repeating his own Words, and giving them an Answer afterwards.

Berenger gave out that the Confession which they had made him sign at Rome, under Pope Nicholas, was prepared contrary to the Catholick Faith by Humbert, whom by way of Contempt he calls the Burgundian. Lanfrank asserts, That this Confession was not Humbert's, but His, the Pope's and the Council's, who all had approv'd of it. He likewise recites Berenger's other Confession under Pope Gregory VII. and defends Humbert. Berenger said, That this Man was of the Opinion, or rather of the Fooleries of the Mob, of Paschasius, and of Lanfrank, who believe that after Consecration, the substance of the Bread and Wine were no longer upon the Altar. Lanfrank shews him that this was not any particular Opinion; but the Doctrine of the Church, of the Councils, and of the Popes who had condemn'd him. Berenger adds, That tho' Humbert was of this Opinion, yet he had destroy'd his own Argument before he was aware, because in saying that the Bread and Wine which are on the Altar, are either only the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, or are only the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, he supposed that there was both Bread and Wine upon the Altar. After Lanfrank had taken notice that if there were any Ambiguity or Contradiction in the Words of that Confession, the Blame lay at Berenger's Door, since he had approv'd of, and Sworn to it, and was not allow'd to Swear that he would hold two Contraries; he observes that the two Propositions which he starts are neither the Councils, nor Cardinal Humbert's. That the first belongs to Berenger and his Followers; and that the second is maintain'd by none, for tho' the Church believes that the Bread and Wine are chang'd into the Body and Blood of our Saviour, yet it acknowledges that this Mystery is the Sacrament of the Passion of our Lord, of his Mercy, of the Concord and Union, and of the Incarnation. That besides, when the name of Bread is given to the Body of JESUS CHRIST, 'tis a figurative and mystical way of Speaking; and that 'tis so call'd, because 'tis made of Bread, and retains the Qualities of Bread; and because it nourishes the Soul after an incomprehensible manner, as the Bread nourishes the Body. 'Tis upon this Principle that he answers the logical Evasions which Berenger makes about these terms of Bread and Wine. He replies likewise to the Passages of the Fathers, which he alledges to prove that the Bread and Wine still remain in this Sacrament, by shewing that 'tis the external Appearance of Bread and Wine, which is the Sacrament and the Sign of the invisible Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST. Berenger asks how it can be said, That the Body of JESUS CHRIST which is incorruptible, is broken and eat in this Bread. Lanfrank replies, That the Just who live by Faith, need not concern themselves how the Bread and Wine become the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, by an essential change of its Nature: That the Belief of the Church is, That the Body of JESUS CHRIST is so Broken and Eat in the Eucharist, that it does not hinder it from being incorruptible and impassible in the Heavens: That we eat it Corporeally when we receive it from the Hand of the Priest, and that we likewise eat it Spiritually by Faith. He moreover produces the Passage out of the Council of Ephesus, which says that this Flesh which we Eat in the Eucharist, is the proper quickening Flesh of the Divine LOGOS. After he had thus Answer'd Berenger, he explains his own Sentiments in these Terms. "We believe that the terrestrial Substances which are Sanctified at the holy Table, by the divine Efficacy and Ministry of the Priest, are converted after an Ineffable, Incomprehensible, and Miraculous manner, by the Operation of the supreme Power into the essential Body of our Saviour, their Appearances remaining with their Qualities, for fear Men should be struck with Horror, if they were to Eat raw and bloody Flesh; and that they believing what they did not see, their Faith merited the greater Reward. That notwithstanding this, the Body of JESUS CHRIST remains Lanfranks " still in Heaven at the Right Hand of his Father, Immortal, Entire, without Defect, and Treasure of " Impassible : So that we may truly say, that we do, and do not receive the same Body the Body " which is Born of the Virgin ; because 'tis the same with respect to the Essence, Propriety, and Blood " and Efficacy of its Nature ; And 'tis not the same, if we consider the Appearances of of Jesus " Bread and Wine and the other Qualities : This, says he, is the Doctrine which the whole Christ. " Catholick Church has always held, and does still hold. He recites a great many Passages out of S. Ambrose and S. Augustin to strengthen this. He explains in what Sense it may be said that the Eucharist is an Appearance, a Figure, or a Sacrament : That 'tis the Appearance of the Bread and Wine which were there before the Consecration, and which are chang'd into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST : That we beg of God in a Prayer, that we may comprehend according to the Truth and Reality of Things, that which we perform under Types and Figures, thereby taking the Word Truth for a clear manifestation of those very Things without a Type and without a Figure. That the Eucharist is likewise a Sign and Sacrament of the Passion of our Lord and Saviour. That lastly 'tis call'd Bread and Wine, because 'tis customary to call Things by the name of those Things out of which they are made, and to which they are like. The Berengerians objected, That if the Bread were chang'd into the Body of JESUS CHRIST, It was necessary for this Change, that either the Bread should be carry'd up into Heaven, or else, that the Flesh of CHRIST should be brought down hither ; neither of which appear'd to be done. Lan- frank answers them, that this is a Myſtery which we ought to believe, without inquiring into the manner of it. After Lanfrank had answer'd these two Objections, he then raises two new Arguments again^t Berenger. The first is, that if the Eucharist were call'd the Flesh of JESUS CHRIST, only because it is the Figure of it, it would from thence follow that the Sacraments of the old Law were more excellent than those of the New ; because 'tis more excellent to be the Type of Things future, than to be the Figure of Things past : And moreover, that the Manna which fell down from Heaven, was a more noble Figure than a little Bit of Bread could be. The second Argument is the universal Opinion of the Church, and the Consent of all Nations. " If, says he to Berenger, that which you " believe and maintain be True, it follows that what the whole Church believes and teaches " in all the World must needs be False : For all the Christians who are in the World, are " Persuaded that they receive in the Sacrament the real Body and the real Blood of JESUS " CHRIST. Ask the Latins, the Greeks, the Armenians, and all the other Nations of " the Christian World, and they will all unanimously tell you, that this is their Faith. If " the Faith of the universal Church be false, you must say that there never has been a " Church or else that it is lost : But there is not any Catholick who dares to affirm either.

 After he had prov'd this Truth by several Passages of Scripture, he adds, (speaking still to Berenger) " You and those whom you have deceiv'd, object against these plain Testimonies " of our Lord, and of the Holy Ghost, concerning the Perpetuity of the Church, that in" deed the Gospel has been Preach'd to all Nations, that the World has believ'd that the " Church is Establish'd, that it has increas'd and improv'd ; but that it afterwards fell into " Error by the Ignorance of those who have put a false Gloss upon Tradition, and that 'tis " to be found among you alone. This is the usual Answer of Innovators, which Lanfrank refutes in a few words.

*The Rules of the Order of S.
 Benedict.*

The Statutes or Rules of the Order of S. Benedict made for the Monks of England, go under Lanfrank's Name ; but Father Luke Dachery observes that they are not in his Style ; that he is cited as a third Person in the second Section of the second Chapter, and that there are some Rules which appear too Remiss ; this makes him believe that 'tis a Collection of Rules, of which Lanfrank is not the Author, or which has been augmented by some other of a more modern Date. Let the case be how it will, it contains nothing but what relates to the Customs and Practices of Monks, therefore we shall not insist any longer upon it.

Lanfrank's Letters.

Lanfrank's Letters are short and few, but contain in them things very Remarkable.

The three first are directed to Pope Alexander II. In the first he earnestly intreats him to give him leave to lay down his Arch-bishoprick, which he had not taken upon him but by his Order, that he might retire into a Monastery. He likewise excuses himself for not being able to wait upon him at Rome. In the second he gives him to understand, that Her- man a Bishop who had formerly quitted his Bishoprick under the Popedom of Leo IX. and embrac'd a Monastick Life, had a design to do it again, and would have done it, had not he hinder'd him. He assures the Pope that that Bishop was no longer in a Condition, by reason of his Age, to discharge his Functions, and that he is not forced to retire, but does it voluntarily to give himself wholly up to the Service of God. The English Historians tell us that this Herman was Flamand, and that he had been Bishop of Winchester under the Reign of King Edward ; that he afterwards left both that Bishoprick and England, and became a Monk of S. Berthin : That he return'd some time after into England to be Bishop of Sarum, and that he liv'd to the time of William the Conqueror, which part of his Life he spent at the Bishoprick of Sarum. 'Tis about the end of his Life that he desir'd to retire the second time.

time. Lanfrank likewise consults the Pope about the Bishop of Litchfield. This Bishop being accus'd of Incontinence, and other Crimes before the Popes Legats in England, would not appear before the Synod which they held; they had Excommunicated him, and given the King liberty to put another in his place. He afterwards came to Court, and gave his Resignation to the King. Lanfrank was not willing to ordain another in his place, till he had receiv'd Permission from Rome, he therefore desires it in this Letter. The third is about the difference then on foot between the Sees of Canterbury and York about the Primacy, and about several other Churches. The Pope had refer'd the Examination of the Matter to an Assembly of Bishops, of Abbots, and of other Prelates of the Kingdom. This Assembly was held at Winchester by the Order of the King of England, and in his presence. It was there prov'd by the Ecclesiastical History of Bede, that from the time of S. Augustin the Apostle of England, the Church of Canterbury had always enjoy'd the Right of Primacy over all England and Ireland; and that the Bishops of the Places now in Question, had been ordain'd, cited to Synods, and deposed by the Arch-bishop of Canterbury for above 140 years together. This was likewise prov'd by the Acts of Councils, and confirm'd by the Decretals of Pope Gregory I. Boniface IV. Honorius, Vitalian, Sergius I. Gregory IV. and Leo IX. The Arch-bishop of York having nothing but weak Arguments to oppose these Authentick Testimonies, yielded the Point, and had desired the King to adjust Matters between Him and Lanfrank. Afterwards by a general Consent an Act was prepar'd touching the Privileges of the Church of Canterbury, which he sends to the Pope, and desires him to confirm. He thanks him for those Testimonies of Love which he had given him, and for granting him two Palls. He tells him at last that he sends him the Letter, which he had writ formerly to Berenger, whom he calls Schismatick.

The fourth is a Letter of Pope Alexander, directed to Lanfrank, wherein he confirms the Decrees of his Predecessors made in favour of the Monks who were in the Cathedral Churches of England, in opposition to those who would dispossess them, for to put secular Clerks into their Places.

The fifth is directed to Hildebrand Arch-deacon of Rome. After he had return'd him Thanks for the good Will he bore to him, he informs him that the Controversie about the Primacy of the Church of Canterbury was ended, and that he had sent the Act of it to Rome.

The sixth is Hildebrand's, who gives him to understand, that he had not obtain'd the Pall which his Legats requir'd, because they were not given at Rome, but to Persons there present.

The seventh is a Letter of William King of England and Duke of Normandy, to Pope Gregory VII. who acquainted him that his Legat was come to wait upon him, to demand of him the Oath of Fidelity, and the Mony which his Predecessors had always been us'd to remit to Rome. He answers him, That as for the Oath he would take none, because he was not allow'd to do it, and his Predecessors had never done it. As for the Mony, he says, that for these three last years which he had spent in France, it had been Collected very carelessly, that he would send him what was already gather'd, and the remainder he would send by Lanfrank's Deputies. He desir'd to be recommended to his Prayers, and assures him that he had a sincere Affection for him, and would be always submissive to him.

Lanfrank at the same time sent the Pope word that he could not as yet prevail upon the King to take the Oath which he required, and assures him that he had still the same Affection for him as formerly. This is the Eighth Letter.

The ninth is a Certificate granted to a Man of the Diocese of Seez, who stood Convicted of having kill'd three Persons who went to Mount S. Michael. The Bishop of Seez had injoyn'd him Pennance, and granted him Letters directed to the Bishops, that they might absolve him, or release him from part of his Pennance, when they should think it proper. This is what Lanfrank certifies to the Arch-bishop of York.

In the tenth, writ to the same Arch-bishop, he very clearly determines that it is not Lawful for a Man or a Woman who are divorc'd for Adultery, to Marry again.

The eleventh is a Letter of Thomas Arch-bishop of York, who wrote to Lanfrank, desiring he would send to him the Bishops of Winchester and Dorchester to assist him in Consecrating a Bishop of the Isles of the Orcades, protesting that hereby he did not pretend that these two Bishops were his Suffragans.

By the following Letter Lanfrank enjoyns them to do it.

In the thirteenth, directed to John Arch-bishop of Roan, he tells him his Opinion upon several Rites and Ceremonies which he wrote to him about. He maintains that in the Consecration of Churches the Bishop ought not to wear his Chasuble* but a Chappe*; and that the Maniple* ought not to be given at the Ordination of Sub-deacons, because 'tis not a Habit peculiar to Ecclesiasticks, no more than the Albe and Amict, since in Monasteries the Laicks wear them.

The four next are likewise directed to the same Arch-bishop; in the two first he writes to him about a difference which had happen'd in the Church of S. Owen, which is related at large in a Passage of an History of the Church of Roan, mention'd by Father Luke Dachery in his Notes. The third is a Letter of Complement. In the last he excuses himself upon some complaints that had been made of him.

[Several Copes and Vestments wore by the Mass-Priests and other Clerks of the Church of the Rome.]

Lan-frank's
Letters.

The Four next are written in Favour of Baldwin Abbot of S. Edmond, and the Religious of that House. The Last is Pope Gregory the Seventh's to Lanfrank; by which he orders him to prevent Bishop Herfast from putting that Abbot to any Trouble. And this is the Subject-Matter of the former Letter which Lanfrank had wrote to that Bishop.

The One and twentieth is a Letter to the same Bishop, about a Man whom he had ordain'd Deacon, without having receiv'd any Order for it; who besides, was a married Man, and would not turn off his Wife. He enjoins him to depose him from his Deaconship; to give him for the future only the four lesser Orders, and not to place him among the Deacons, unless he would live single. If he did that, then he should not confer the Order of Deacon upon him again, but only grant him a Power of discharging his Functions, by giving him the Gospels in a Synod or an Assembly of the Clergy.

The Two and twentieth is likewise an Answer directed to that Bishop, about a Man who had enter'd into Priest's Orders, without being fit for it. He orders, That he should be enjoy'd Penance, and suspended from all Ecclesiastical Functions, till such time as he thought fit to restore him.

The Three and twentieth is directed to Herbert Bishop of Norwich, his Suffragan; whom he reproves for slighting a Letter which he sent him in favour of Berard, a Clerk belonging to the Abbot Baldwin. He tells him of the Respect which is due to Metropolitans; and admonishes him to turn out Monk Herman, who went under a bad Name.

The Four and twentieth is directed to Maurice Bishop of London elect. He returns him this Answer, That he ought to injoin them Penance who had apprehended a Man, who dy'd under their Hands. That he could not speak any farther of his Affair to the King. That Clerk Geofrey, charg'd with Apostacy, ought to be turn'd out of his Church; or bring Letters demissory from his Bishop: And advises him to meet him the Saturday before Letare-Sunday, at Chichester; and that he would there give him Priests Orders.

The following Letters, which are very short, are upon various and particular Subjects. However, there are several Things in them concerning the Discipline of the Church, viz. In the Six and twentieth, That a Priest, who has taken upon him the Habit of a Monk, and liv'd sometime in a Monastery without having receiv'd Benediction, cannot return to the World again. In the Seven and twentieth, That Arch-deacons have a Right of distributing the Holy Chrism. In the Two and thirtieth, That young Women who have made a religious Profession, or who have been presented at the Altar, shall be oblig'd to continue Religious; but that such as have not made any such Profession, nor have been presented, shall have Liberty to go out, as well as those who fled for Sanctuary to Monasteries for fear of the French. In the Three and thirtieth he proves to the Bishops of Ireland, That tho' it might be proper to give the Sacrament of the Lords Supper to Infants, yet it was not absolutely necessary for Salvation. The Six, Seven and Eight and Thirtieth inform us, That the Clergy and Laity of Dublin elected their Bishop, and sent him to the Arch-bishop of Canterbury for Ordination: That there were some Irregularities in the Churches of Ireland; and that it was requisite to call a Council there to reform them. In the Nine and fortieth he shews, That the Apostate-Monks, who offer'd to return to their Monasteries again, ought to be pardoned, and to be treated with the same Kindness as formerly. In the Sixtieth and the Last, he proves, That a Monk who has engag'd himself to constant Residence in any Monastery, may now and then go to another Monastery, when urgent Occasion requires it. In the Fiftieth he refutes Berenger, who charg'd S. Hilary Bishop of Poitiers with being in an Error about the Sufferings of JESUS CHRIST, in teaching, That he had not been sensible of any Pain. Lanfrank explains the Passage of that Father, and tells us he spoke of the Divinity of our Saviour. In the Nine and fiftieth, he reproves a Lord for having spoke very ill Things of Pope Gregory VII. and for bestowing large Encomiums on Guibert, whom the Emperor had caus'd to be ordain'd Pope, in opposition to Gregory. He says that we ought to believe, That the Emperor did not undertake such a Thing but upon good Grounds; but that we should not commend any Person before his Death, nor speak ill of one's Neighbour; and that one cannot tell what Men are at present, nor how they will one Day appear to be in the Eye of God.

Lan-frank's Treatise of Confession.

These Letters are follow'd by a small Tract, concerning the Secrecy of Confession. Lanfrank doth demonstrate, That 'tis a great Sin to reveal it, or to give any Hints whereby the Sins that have been confess'd may be discover'd. He would not have them in Confession inform themselves of the Sins of other Men, but only of those who are confess'd, nor to require them to discover their Accomplishes. He afterwards says, That the Confession of publick Sins ought to be made to the Priests, by whose Ministry the Church binds and looses that which it takes publick Cognizance of: But that one may confess private Sins to all the Ecclesiasticks, and even to Laicks; since we read that there have been Holy Fathers, who were the Guides of Souls, tho' they were not in Holy Orders. These are Lanfrank's own Words; who perhaps by publick Sins, understood mortal Sins; and by private, only venial Sins: Or rather, by the Confession of publick Sins, he meant a particular Confession of Sins; and by that of private Sins, a general Confession, without specifying any particular Offence, such as Laicks usually make to one another. Altho' in Lanfrank's time it was a common common Custom among the Faithful, to confess their Sins to one another out of Humility, Lanfrank's and especially when they could not meet with any Priests; and 'tis to this Custom Lanfrank's Treatise of Confession alludes: For he adds, That if one cannot find a Person to whom one may confess one's self, we ought not to despair upon that Account, because the Fathers agree that in such a Case 'tis sufficient to make our Confession to God. Lastly, he says, That those to whom Confession is made, ought not to punish or correct publicly those who confess themselves, no not under the pretence of any other Fault. This Discourse is obscure and intricate, full of forc'd Allegories, and unjust Reasonings; which made Father Luke Dachery at first to question whether it were Lanfrank's or no. However, we are not sure that 'tis not his; and 'tis plain that its Author liv'd much about that time.

There is likewise a Treatise of Lanfrank in the Fourth Tome of Father Dachery's Spice-Other writings of Laufrank, which contains, in a few Words, the principal Duties of the Religious who wait upon the Churches. It was found in an ancient Manuscript of the Oxford Library. We have lost his Ecclesiastical History, which perhaps was the same with the Life of William the Conqueror; and a Commentary upon the Psalms, of which mention is made in the Author of his Life.

Lanfrank's Style was neither florid nor figurative, but plain and simple, and such as ought to appear in Dogmatical Treatises. His Reasonings are pretty just, and his Arguments cogent. He had thoroughly studied the ancient Latin Fathers, and the Canons of the Church, upon which he grounds the Doctrine which he advances, and the Judgments he makes upon the Discipline of the Church. There are but few who wrote at that time so distinctly and so exactly, or who pass'd such a just Judgment upon Things.

Father Luke Dachery was the first who publish'd Lanfrank's Works. They were printed at Paris by Billain, in the Year, 1648. The Edition is very correct, and in a fine Character. There are likewise very exact and curious Notes made by Father Dachery. At the end of Lanfrank's Works he has added several other Tracts, viz. The Chronicon of the Abbey of Bec; The Life of S. Herluin, first Abbot of Bec, wrote by Gilbert Crispinus Abbot of Westminster; and the Lives of William, Boso, Thibold and Letard, Abbots of that Abbey; the which, as well as that of Lanfrank's which is at the beginning of his Works, were wrote by Milo Crispinus a Monk of Bec, who liv'd in the Twelfth Century: The Life of S. Augustin the English Apostle, and two Tracts upon the Eucharist against Berenger; the one wrote by Hugh Bishop of Langres, and the other by Durandus Abbot of Troarn, who liv'd in the same Century.

Hugh Bishop of Langres.

THE first of these two last Authors was the Son of Gilduin Count of Breteil, near Beau- Hugh Bi-vau; and Brother to Waleran Abbot of S. Witon of Verdun. He had been Clerk of the Church of Chartres, and Monk of Cluny. He was made Bishop of Langres in the Year, 1031, and was depos'd by Leo IX. in a Council held at Rheims in the Year, 1049. But following that Pope to Rome, and being enjoy'd Penance, he was re-establish'd, and dy'd in his return homeward about the Year, 1052. His Piece is only a Letter directed to Berenger, whose Opinion he declares in the following Terms. "You maintain (says he) That the Body of JESUS CHRIST is in the Sacrament in such a manner, that the Essence and Nature of the Bread and Wine are not chang'd; and you make that Body you speak of, which was Crucified, to be an Intellectual Body; which makes us think that you believe it to be Spiritual: And in this you scandalize the Catholic Church, and offend our Lord, who made it appear, That this Body which you say was Spiritual, was such as might be felt. Besides, if the Nature and Essence of the Bread and Wine do really remain after Consecration, it cannot be said that there is any real Change: And if the Body of JESUS CHRIST be therein only figuratively and virtually, one might, upon the same Grounds say, That he is likewise in Baptism, and in the other Sacraments. He afterwards proves, by several Instances, That the change of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST is real and true; and that tho' one cannot conceive how it is, yet one ought to believe it. To strengthen this, he produces several Passages out of S. Ambrose and S. Augustin. He adds, That the Body of JESUS CHRIST is given to us under the form of Bread and Wine, because if it appear'd to be Flesh and Blood, Men would be startled at it, and would not eat it. This Tract is obscure and full of Niceties and School-Terms.

Durandus Abbot of Troarn.

THE other Author is Durandus Abbot of Troarn in Normandy, who is not the same with Durandus the Bishop of Liege of the same Name. His Treatise is a great deal larger, and better penn'd than the former. He therein cites a great many Passages of the Fathers, against the Troarn.

Error of Berenger; and in the Conclusion thereof gives a particular Account of the Condemnations of Berenger at Brionne, at Paris, and at Vercel. This Author liv'd till the Year 1088. but no Body knows at what time he wrote this Treatise.

Guitmond Arch-bishop of Averse.

SOME time after Berenger's Recantation in the Council of Rome, Guitmond Arch-bishop of Averse, formerly a Monk of the Monastery of S. Leufroy in Normandy, compos'd three Books against Berenger in the nature of a Dialogue; wherein Roger, to whom these Books were dedicated, is made to propose the Objections of Berenger and his Followers. After he had given a Character of the Temper and the Errors of Berenger, and mention'd his Condemnation in the Council of Vercel in his first Book, he then proceeds to tell us, That all the Berengarians hold, that the Bread and Wine are not substantially chang'd in the Sacrament of the Eucharist; but that they do not all agree in their Sentiments. For some believe, That the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST are not at all in this Sacrament, which they pretend to be only a Sign and a Figure. Others assert, That the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST are really there, but that they are conceal'd, and that we might receive them there is made a kind of Impanation; the most subtil Opinion which they say Berenger ever found out. Others, who were not thorough-pac'd Berengarians, but only shock'd by the Arguments of that Heretick, imagin'd the Bread and Wine are chang'd in part, and in part remain the same. Lastly, There were others who believe that the Bread and Wine are entirely chang'd; but that when unworthy Persons approach this Sacrament, it return'd to its first Substance of Bread and Wine. Guitmond undertakes to refute all these Opinions; and in the first place oppugns the two former, which were properly the Berengarian's Opinions, by shewing that there was a real Change made of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST. He proves first, That it was not impossible for God to effect this Change. Secondly, That the Body of JESUS CHRIST might very well be touch'd, broken, bruise'd and eaten, and yet not be passible, corruptible or mortal; and that when the Host is divided into several parts, yet the Body of JESUS CHRIST is not divided, but remains whole and entire, and the same under each Wafer; and such as is in a thousand distinct Places in the Hands of a thousand Priests, who say Mass in different Places, and yet this very Body is still in Heaven. That we ought not to wonder that this Change is not indeed perceptible by our Senses; but that we are not always to credit their Evidence, and that Faith is enough to persuade us of this Miracle. That 'tis indeed difficult to conceive, but easy to believe it, since nothing is impossible to God, who has produced Things more wonderful. And that we see Changes altogether as surprizing, such as the Change of Nothing into this visible World, the Change of Accidents into other Accidents, the Change of Substances into other Substances, together with the Change of their Accidents: If these Changes are possible, why should the Change of one Substance into another, without the Change of the Accidents, be counted impossible?

In the Second Book, Guitmond answers an Objection made by Berenger, which Roger proposes to him in these Words: "Berenger says, The Flesh of JESUS CHRIST is incorruptible, but the Sacraments of the Altar are corruptible if they be kept too long. To this Guitmond replies, That tho' the Consecrated Bread seems to be corrupted to the Apprehension of corrupted Men, yet in reality it is not chang'd at all; and that it does not appear alter'd, unless as a Punishment of the Infidelity and Negligence of Men: That it cannot be gnawn by Mice, and other Vermine; and if at any time it appears to be so, 'tis only to punish the Negligence, or to try the Faith of Men. Nor will he admit that the Fire can consume these Mysteries; and he says, That with Veneration they commit it to this most pure Element, to be carry'd up into Heaven. Lastly he affirms, That though the Eucharist may serve for Nourishment, yet it does not turn to Excrement; and as to that Objection which might be made, That supposing a Man should eat nothing for some considerable time but consecrated Bread, he would nevertheless have occasion to go to Stool. He answers, That 'tis a Matter of Fact, that has never been experienc'd, and that it could never enter into the Heart of any Catholick to try such an Experiment: That if any of Berenger's Party thought fit to do it, one should not trouble one's Head much about what became of the Mass of those Infidels, which committed so great a Crime; Because, says he, we do not believe, That the Bread and Wine are necessarily chang'd into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, unless among those who have the Faith to believe this Mystery, and that the Words of JESUS CHRIST are efficacious. That Lastly, If any of them should order a Catholick Priest to consecrate one or more great Loaves to try the Experiment, it is to be believ'd that this Loaf would not be turn'd into Excrement; or rather that God would permit these Hereticks to be deceiv'd, by ordering some Angel or Spirit to convey away this consecrated Loaf, and to put an unconsecrated one in its stead. After he had thus solv'd the Objections drawn from Reason, he answers the Passages cited out of S. Augustin, and makes it appear in what Sense, and of what the Eucharist is a Sign.

In the last Book he produces a great many Passages of the Fathers, upon which he grounds Guitmond the Doctrin of the real change of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, and confirms it by the Testimony of the Romish Church, and by the Condemnation brought against Berenger. To conclude, he demonstrates that 'tis much greater, and more excellent to believe that we receive the real Body of JESUS CHRIST, than to imagine that we only receive the shadow and sign of it.

Afterwards he refutes in short their Opinion, who pretended that one part of the Bread and Wine was chang'd, and that the other remain'd still the same: And the Opinion of those who believ'd that the Bread and Wine re-assum'd their former Nature, when unworthy Persons approach'd thereto. Both of these Opinions were grounded upon this, That they could not conceive how the Wicked could be partakers of the Body of JESUS CHRIST. To solve this difficulty, Guitmond distinguishes between two sorts of Receiving, the one Corporeal, the other Spiritual: That the Just receive the Body of JESUS CHRIST both these ways; that the Wicked receive it only in the first sense, though they do really receive it. He adds, That if only part of the Consecrated Bread were chang'd into the Body of JESUS CHRIST upon the account of those who were unworthy to receive it, then no Man could assuredly say, This is the Body of JESUS CHRIST, because no Man ought to affirm confidently that he is worthy to receive it. Wherefore it would be rashness in the Priest to say, This is the Body of JESUS CHRIST, as well as in the People to answer, It is so. That besides, if a vicious Priest should Consecrate an Host which he ought to receive all himself, then there would be neither Change nor Consecration; and by this means it would be true to affirm, That the Wickedness of the Priest would disannul the Efficacy of the Words of JESUS CHRIST, and that the Belief of the Church which is persuaded, that the Words of our Saviour are alike Efficacious in Good and Bad Priests, would be absolutely false. Lastly, To refute the last Opinion, he observes that 'tis contrary to sound Sense and Reason to say, That the incorruptible Body of JESUS CHRIST is chang'd in corruptible Creatures; and he concludes all by saying that, since the Sacrifice of the Eucharist, is not a bare representation of the Body of JESUS CHRIST, it does not constrain it by an Impanation: That the Bread and Wine are not chang'd in part only; and that being once chang'd, they cannot return again to their former substance; and that it must be affirm'd, that all the Bread and Wine are substantially and perpetually chang'd into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST.

There is likewise another small Tract of Guitmond, which is only a plain Exposition of Faith concerning the Mysteries of the Trinity, the Incarnation, and the Eucharist: It enlarges chiefly on the former, and explains in what Sense the Son is the Wisdom, and the Holy Ghost the Love of the Father. Nor ought we to forget a Discourse belonging to the same Author, which he directs to William the First, King of England, by which he refuses a Bishoprick which that Prince had offer'd to him. These Tracts are to be met with in the Bibliotheca Patrum. Guitmond liv'd to about the Year 1080. The Seventy eighth Letter of Ivo of Chartres is directed to him, wherein that Author gives him the Character of a Religious and Learned Man. His Style is not very elegant, but pretty cogent; he argues very methodically without wandering from his Subject.

Alger Deacon of Liege and Monk of Cluny.

Alger did not write till long after Lanfrank, for he flourish'd in the twelfth Century. He was of Liege, where he studied with great success, and there spent part of his Life, first of all in the quality of a Deacon of the Church of S. Bartholomew. From thence he was translated to the Church of S. Mary and S. Lambert, where he liv'd Twenty years, till the Death of Frederick Bishop of Liege, after which he retir'd, and took upon him the Habit of a Monk in the Abby of Cluny. We make mention of this Author here, tho' he belongs to the next Century, because the principal Treatise which he wrote, was that whereby he refutes the Errors which Lanfrank and Guitmond have oppos'd. This Treatise is entitled, A Discourse concerning the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, and divided into three Books. In the Preface he takes notice of the four Errors about the Eucharist, mention'd by Guitmond, and Subjoyns two more to them. The One is, That the Bread and Wine are chang'd into Flesh and Blood, but not into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST: The Other, That the Eucharist is turn'd into Excrements. He afterwards proposes to refute these Errors, not by the force of humane Reason, but by the Testimonies of JESUS CHRIST and the Saints. But before he does this, he advertises the Faithful, that tho' this Mystery be incomprehensible, yet it does not from thence follow that 'tis incredible, because God has a Power sufficient to do things which we are not capable of Comprehending. After this he divides his Work into two Parts: In the former he says, He will treat of the reality of the Body of JESUS CHRIST in the Eucharist; and in the latter, concerning several Questions relating to that Sacrament.

In the former he proves, That the Son of God after he had taken upon him a Nature like to Ours by the Incarnation, was likewise pleas'd visibly to communicate thereof to us, by giving us his Body and his Blood, not only in a figure, but likewise in reality under the Sacrament of Bread and Wine. That there are two Things to be distinguish'd in the Eucharist; the Sacrament, and the Matter of the Sacrament. That the Sacrament is the Form, the Figure, and the other Qualities of the Bread and Wine; and that the Matter of the Sacrament is the invisible Subtance of the Body of JESUS CHRIST, which is contain'd in that Sacrament, and into which the Subtance of the Bread and Wine has been chang'd. That it cannot be said, That JESUS CHRIST is united to the Bread, as the Son of God is personally united to Man, because the Subtance of the Bread and Wine is no longer there, but chang'd into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST. That tho' the Body of JESUS CHRIST in the Eucharist, is spiritual and invisible, yet 'tis really there; and that God has sometimes permitted that it should plainly and manifestly appear to be as really in the Eucharist, as it is in Heaven, at the Right hand of the Father. That 'tis the same whole and entire Body, which is distributed to all the Faithful under several consecrated Wafers. That it is not Sacrific'd nor offer'd up after the same manner, as it was upon the Cross, but that this myttical Sacrifice or Immolation is the Figure and Representation of that which was offer'd upon the Cross, tho' it be the same CHRIST, both upon the Cross and the Altar. That the invisible Body may in one sense be said to be the Figure of the visible Body, but that for all this, 'tis no less the real Body. That the Corporeal Communion is the Figure of the Spiritual Communion; but that by this Corporeal Communion, the Wicked as well as the Good, receive the Body of JESUS CHRIST Corporeally, tho' not Spiritually. These are the principal Points which Alger establishes upon the Testimonies of the Fathers in this first Book.

In the second Part he treats of other Questions relating to the Sacrament, and particularly whether the Eucharist be capable of any alteration, or subject to the same condition with other Aliments, part of which turns to Excrements? Upon this Head he sets upon the Grecians, who maintain'd, That by receiving the Communion, Men broke their Fasts. He owns that Men might live of Consecrated Bread and Wine, and that there are Instances of it: But he denies that any part of the Eucharist is Corrupted, or turn'd into Excrements; or if any are voided, they are produc'd by the flesh of the Man himself, or supply'd some other way. He further maintains, That tho' the Bread and Wine seem to be subject to alteration, as for Instance, to be devour'd by Animals, or consum'd by Fire; yet this is not in reality, but only in appearance, to punish the Incredulity of the Wicked, or the Carelessness of Ministers. After he had thus resolv'd that Question, he passes on to others that are less Considerable: Namely, (1.) Why God, who is invisible, would have us to offer him a visible Sacrifice? To this he answers, That 'tis to put Men in mind of what they owe him; and because Man being a Compound Creature made up of a Soul and Body, 'tis reasonable he should offer to God both Corporeal and Spiritual Sacrifices. (2.) The second Question is, Why the Sacrifice of the Church is made up of a Sacrament and the Body of JESUS CHRIST, and why 'tis not either a simple Sacrament, or the visible Body of JESUS CHRIST? This he resolves by saying, That if the Eucharist were a simple Sacrament, it would not be different from the Sacraments of the old Law; and that if the Body of JESUS CHRIST should appear therein openly, it would be subject to great Inconveniences. For (says he) it would appear either alive or dead; but it cannot appear as dead, since he is living; and if it appear'd alive, it would either be in the same State wherein it was before his Passion, or in the same State wherein it was after his Resurrection: In the first Case, it would be impossible to swallow it; and in the second, Men would not be able to endure the brightness of its Glory. That besides, it was necessary that the Body of JESUS CHRIST should be conceal'd under shadows and representations, to exercise the Faith of the One, and to prevent others from uttering Blasphemies, and from charging the Christians with eating and drinking humane Flesh and Blood. The third Question is, (3.) Why God requires so much Faith in this Sacrament? He answers, That Man being in a laps'd State, because Adam by giving too much Credit to the Words of the Devil, had eaten of the forbidden Fruit; 'tis necessary we should be sav'd by believing the Word of God, who enjoins us to eat his Body, and drink his Blood in this Sacrament. (4.) The fourth Question is, Why we make use of Bread and Wine, rather than any other Creature? For this he assigns several Reasons, Because Bread and Wine are the ordinary Nourishment of Man, which supports the corporeal Life, as the Eucharist is the Nourishment of the Soul, which supports the spiritual Life: Because as the Bread and Wine are chang'd into Flesh and Blood, so they are here chang'd into the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST: Because the Bread being made up of several Grains of Corn, and the Wine out of several Bunches of Grapes, is a figure of the Unity of the Church which is made up of several Persons. (5.) The fifth Question is, Why we do not immediately enjoy Life eternal, after having receiv'd the Body of JESUS CHRIST? He replies, That 'tis because we may have time to exercise our selves in Virtue. (6.) The sixth Question is, Why God bestows an eternal Recompence on temporal Merits? 'Tis, says he, Because he regards regards not the temporal Action, but rewards or punishes the Eternal Propensity and Inclination of doing Good or Evil. (7.) The seventh Question is, Why Bread is consecrated into the Body, and Wine into the Blood of JESUS CHRIST? He replies, That 'tis not because the Body of JESUS CHRIST is without the Blood, or the Blood without the Body, since JESUS CHRIST is whole and entire under each Kind; but that we offer and communicate under these two Kinds, because of the different Mysteries which they figure out to us. (8.) The eighth Question is, Why we make use of White Bread rather than Brown, though at the same time we consecrate Wine of all sorts of Colours? He answers, That in case of Necessity, one may make use of any sort of Bread; but that 'tis proper to use the Whitest, because it is to be chang'd into the glorious Body of the spotless Lamb. (9.) The ninth and last Question is, Why we make use of Unleaven'd rather than Leaven'd Bread, although we indifferently make use of Wine that has Lees as well as of that which has none? He says, That this is a grand Dispute between the Latins and the Greeks, who treat one another as Hereticks, and call each other Azymites and Fermentarians, though one may safely use the One as well as the Other; that notwithstanding this, JESUS CHRIST made use of Unleaven'd Bread as a Figure of Purity. He likewise relates the Reasons of the Greeks; and after he had answer'd them, he concludes, That it was better to make use of Unleaven'd Bread, which he believ'd to have been the Custom of the Latin Church from its beginning.

In the last Book he discourses of several other Points which relate to the Ministers of the Eucharist: And in the first place he demands, Whether Hereticks and Schismatics, which are without the Pale of the Church, do consecrate the Body of JESUS CHRIST; and at first he produces the Testimonies of the Fathers, which seem to prove, That they do not consecrate according to due Form. But afterwards having laid it down as a Principle, That the Validity of the Sacraments doth not depend on the Faith or Piety of the Minister; he concludes, That as Hereticks and Schismatics may baptize, so likewise can they consecrate; and that the Ordination of Priesthood is as much among them as Baptism. This he proves from several Principles and Passages of S. Augustin, and replies to those Passages which he at first started against the Sacraments of Hereticks and Schismatics, which (he says) ought not to be understood of the Sacraments themselves, but of the Abuse which they make of them, since they are so far from being beneficial to them, that they render them the more Criminal. He afterwards asks, Whether the Sacraments are valid, if any Addition or Alteration be made of the Words of the Office, either by the Wickedness or Carelessness of him who officiates? He explains this Question as it relates to Baptism; and, after he had cited several Passages out of S. Augustin and the Popes, and among others out of Pope Zachary, he concludes, That provided the Essential Words be recited, tho' by carelessness it happens that needless Words be added thereto, or some Ceremony be left out, yet this does not hinder the Efficacy of the Sacrament. He does not apply this Principle to the Eucharist, but only says in general, That in the Celebration of these Holy Mysteries we ought not to introduce any Heresies or Novelties; but faithfully to observe the Institution of JESUS CHRIST, that so as those Mysteries are truly effected by his Power, and founded upon his Authority, they may be likewise profitable to us by his Grace.

The same Author has compos'd a Treatise of Mercy and Justice, without affixing his Name thereto: It is divided into three Parts. In the first he shews in what Instances we ought to extend Mercy to Criminals, and to bear with them. In the second part he shews, at what times, with what discretion, and in what manner we ought to exercise Justice upon them. In the third, he discourses of the different Errors of the Hereticks about the Sacraments, and shews wherein they differ from the Catholics, and in what Points they disagree among themselves. This is what we gather from the Preface of that Treatise; which Preface Father Mabillon has publish'd in the first Tome of his Analeſti, with the Panegyrick of a Canon of Liege, who was Cotemporary with Alger. This Preface is taken out of his two Manuscripts, where the Work is compleat, but has never yet been publish'd. We have wholly lost several Letters, and the History of the Church of Liege, which he wrote whilst he resided in that City, of which the Author of his Elogy makes mention. Peter, surnam'd the Venerable, prefers Alger's Piece upon the Eucharist, to those of Lanfrank and Guirmond. It must be confess'd, That 'tis a great deal larger, and that he cites more Passages out of the Fathers; but his way of Reasoning is not so exact, nor is his Writing so compleat as Lanfrank's. He has observ'd Guirmond's Method, and done little else besides amplifying and confirming his Principles and Arguments. This Treatise was printed at Cologne in the Year, 1535. At Louvain, together with Lanfrank's Treatise, in the Year, 1561. and is to be met with in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

S. Anselm Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

THE same Principles which are establish'd in the Tracts of Guirmond and Alger, are likewise to be met with in the two last Letters of S. Anselm Arch-bishop of Canterbury; A. B. of wherein he establishes the real Presence; and refutes those who believ'd that the Eucharist Canterb. was

S. Anselm was only a Type and Figure. He asserts, That the Bread and Wine are chang'd into the Arch-bishop Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST; but withal owns, That it may be call'd Bread, a Sacrament and a Figure: Bread, because JESUS CHRIST is call'd so himself; A Sacrament, because under the visible Appearance of Bread and Wine, the Divine Power does therein internally present to us the Flesh of JESUS CHRIST: And a Figure, because we conceive and believe it to be quite another Thing than what it seems to be to our Sight and Taste. That God made Choice of Bread and Wine in this Sacrament, because of the Analogy which there is between our Spiritual and Corporeal Nourishment. That we ought not to believe that when we receive the Body, we do not receive the Blood; and that when we receive the Blood, we do not receive the Body; but that they are exhibited to us under these two different kinds, thereby to denote that we ought to be conformable to the Body and Soul of JESUS CHRIST. That Water is mix'd therewith, thereby to represent that Water which issu'd out of our Lord's Side, and which is the Figure of Baptism. That the Wicked do indeed receive the Substance, tho' not the Effects and Benefits of the Body of JESUS CHRIST. That the outward Elements of Bread and Wine, may be broken, eaten by Mice, and go into the Stomach; but that these are Accidents which only happen to the Elements which are left, but not to that which is really the Eucharist. That we ought not to ask, what becomes of the Body of JESUS CHRIST, nor how the Bread is chang'd into the Body of JESUS CHRIST, because God has wrought greater Miracles than these. Lastly, That a wicked Priest may as well Consecrate as a good Priest, because 'tis JESUS CHRIST who Consecrates, and 'tis he who Baptizes.

C H A P. IV.

An Account of the Popes and of the Church of Rome, from the time of Silvester II. to Gregory VII.

Silvester
II.

GERBERT, who goes under the Name of Silvester II. had the Possession of the Papal Chair only Five Years, from the Year, 999. to the Year, 1003. During this time he did not do much worth the mentioning, nor did he write so much as he had acted before. We have only Three Letters of his, written whilst he was Pope. The First is directed to Azolin Bishop of Laon, who was accus'd by King Robert of being disloyal to him. He had been cited before a Council held at Compiègne, where he had acknowledg'd his Fault, begg'd Pardon for it, given Hostages for a Security of his Allegiance, and promis'd to restore the Forts of Laon to the King. But afterwards he went back from his Word, would have taken the Arch-bishop of Rheims Prisoner, under a Pretence of restoring to him the Citadel of Laon; and kept those Men Prisoners who were sent to take Possession thereof. The Pope upbraids him with this Perfidiousness, and cites him to a Council to be held at Rome in the Easter-week; giving him to understand, That if he did not make his Appearance, he would pronounce Sentence against him, without admitting his Excuse of the Dangers of Travelling, since there was no more Danger in the Kingdom of Lorraine than in Italy: And whereas he might perhaps alledge Sicknes as an Excuse, the Pope adds, That if he made use of that Shift, he must send some to testify the Truth of it, and to answer to the Accusations which were prefer'd against him.

We have already mention'd his Second Letter, directed to Arnulphus Arch-bishop of Rheims, by which he confirms him in that Arch-bishoprick.

The Third is a Bull or Grant, which confirms and ratifies the Privileges of the Abbey of Vezelai.

We may likewise add to these Letters, his Tract against the Simonists, which he made in the beginning of his Poppedom. Ademar makes mention of one Action of Silvester, which, if true, is an Instance of unheard-of Severity. He says, That Guy, the Count of Limoges, having imprison'd Grimoald Bishop of that City, for taking Possession of the Monastery of Brantome, which that Bishop demanded of him; and having afterwards releas'd him upon certain Conditions, this Bishop went to Rome, and having complain'd of this Usage to Silvester, that Pope had cited Guy to Rome; where, his Cause being heard in an Assembly held on Easter-day, he had been condemn'd by the Pope and Senate to be ty'd by the Feet to wild Horses Tails, and to be drawn and torn to pieces: But that being committed to the Bishop's Custody, he adjusted Matters with him, and that they both fled from Rome, and return'd good Friends to their own Country again. 'Tis very probable that all this was done by Consent; for otherwise how can one excuse the Cruelty of this Sentence so disagreeable agreeable to the Spirit and Character of the Church, which breaths out nothing but Gentleness and Peace, and which desires not the Death, but the Amendment of a Sinner? [Here we may see how much Dupin, though a true Romanist, abhors those bloody Principles upon which the Inquisition, and other unbear'd of severities of the Church of Rome are founded.]

The two Popes, who immediately succeeded Silvester II. were both Johns. The first of these, who according to our Account is John XVI. and according to others John XVIII. firnam'd the Meager, was only four Months and some Days upon the Chair: The other held it almost six Years. He sent a Legat into Germany to confirm the Priviledges and Prerogatives of the Church of Magdebourg, and to raise the Church of Bamberg into a Bishoprick. This was done with the consent of the Arch-bishop of Mayence, and other Prelates of Germany in a Council held at Francfort, which approv'd of the Pope's Bull, which advanc'd the Church of Bamberg to be a Bishoprick. He gave the Pall to S. Ephege Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and sent Bruno his Missionary into Poland. He renew'd Communion with the Greek Church. S. Fulbert Bishop of Chartres wrote him a Letter, wherein he bestows great Commendations upon him, and prays him to be well advis'd before he granted Absolution to Count Radulphus.

John
and
XVII.

Sergius IV. succeeded John XVII. and was call'd before Os Porci. If Ditmar may be credited in the Case, he chang'd his Name into that of Sergius, and was the first who made a Law to authorise the changing of Names; however, there are instances of this Nature more ancient, as we have already observ'd. Authors say in general a great deal in Commendation of this Pope; but they have not mention'd any one of his Actions in particular, and we have none of his Letters by us. He was not upon the Chair above two Years, eight Months, and thirteen Days, for he dy'd May 13. in the Year 1012.

Sergius
IV.

After his Death there was a Schism in the Church of Rome, between Benedict VIII. Son to Gregory the Count of Frescati, who was first Elected by his Father's interest; and one Gregory, who was Elected by some Romans, who outed Benedict. He fled to Henry King of Germany, who immediately rais'd Forces, and march'd into Italy to re-establish him. As soon as the King arriv'd, Gregory fled for it, and Benedict was receiv'd without any Opposition. He confer'd the imperial Crown on that Prince, and on Queen Chunegonda his Wife. Under his Pontificate the Norman Lords who had drove the Sarazens out of Sicily, drove likewise the Greeks out of a great many of those places which they held in Italy, being assisted by the Emperor Henry, who came thither a second time at the instance of the Pope. Benedict dy'd in the Year 1024. and some Authors say that after his Death, he appear'd mounted on a black Horse, and that he strew'd the place, where he had deposited a Treasure, that so it might be distributed to the Poor, and that by these Alms, and the Prayers of S. Odilo, he was deliver'd from the Torments of the other Life. We have only one Bull of his in Favour of the Abbey of Cluny.

Benedict
VIII.

This Pope held a Council at Pavia, in which after he had discours'd at large against the Incontinence of the Clergy, he publish'd eight Decrees. The first and second, prohibite the Clergy from having any Concubines, and from living with Women. The third and fourth import, that the Children of such Clergy-men as are Slaves of the Church, shall be Slaves to the Church for ever, tho' born of a Mother that is Free. And the three last import, that such Clergy as are Slaves to the Church, can neither purchase nor possess any thing of their own, even tho' they should be born of a Mother that is Free. These Decrees were Sign'd by the Pope, by the Arch-bishop of Milan, and by five Bishops, and afterwards ratified by the Emperor's Authority, who at the Pope's Request, publish'd an Edict consisting of the same Articles, to give them the force of a Law.

The Council of Pavia under
VII.

The Count of Frescati, that the Popedom might be still in his Family, caus'd his other Son to be Elected in the room of Benedict VIII. tho' he was not then in Orders. He was ordain'd and call'd John, which according to us is the Eighteenth of that Name, but according to others the Twentieth. 'Tis said, that sometime after this Pope being sensible that his Election was Vicious and Simoniackal, he withdrew into a Monastery there to suffer Penance, and that he forbore performing any part of his Function, till such time as he was chosen again by the Clergy. The Emperor Henry dy'd at the beginning of this Popedom, and Conrad was Elected King of Germany in his place, in the Year 1024. and Crown'd Emperor three years after by this Pope. The Greeks having dispatch'd an Embassy to Rome, to get the Pope's Grant that the Church of Constantinople should be call'd the Universal Church, were oppos'd by the French Prelates; and William Abbot of S. Benign of Dijon, wrote a Letter to John XVIII. to divert him from that Design; which Letter is mentioned by Glaber. This Pope wrote a Letter to the Bishop of Limoges, by which he declares, that S. Martial shall have the Character of Apostle; and another Letter to Odilo Abbot of Cluny, wherein he blames him for having refus'd to accept of the Arch-bishoprick of Lions. He sent Letters of Absolution to the Bishop of Auxerre, who had sent him his Confession in Writing. Canutus King of England came to Rome in the Year 1031. where he was very kindly received by Pope John and the Emperor. He complain'd that they exacted too great Sums of his Arch-bishops for the Grant of their Palls, and it was order'd that for the future they should should not be so serv'd. He likewise obtain'd, That his Subjects might have free Access to Rome, and that they should be exempt from Customs. This is what the King acquaints the Peers of his Kingdom in his Letter, mention'd by William of Malmſbury.

- Benedict IX. John XVIII. dying November 7. in the Year, 1033. Alberic Count of Frescati caus'd his Son to be seated on S. Peter's Chair. He was Nephew to the two last Popes the Count's Brothers, and was not above Eighteen Years of Age at the most. He chang'd his Name of Theophylact into that of Benedict IX. Peter Damien speaks of him as a Man that liv'd very disorderly, and was very unworthy of that Dignity to which he had been advanc'd by the Tyranny of his Father. However, he enjoy'd the Popedom very quietly for Ten Years together; but at last the Romans, weary of his abominable Irregularities, outed him, and put up in his Place the Bishop of S. Sabina, who took upon him the Name of Silvester III. He enjoy'd his Dignity but three Months; for tho' Benedict voluntarily resign'd the Popedom, yet he return'd to Rome, and with the Assistance of Frescati's Party, drove out his Competitor, and re-assum'd the Papal Chair. But being altogether incapable of Governing it, and having nothing more in his Thoughts than the gratifying of his Brutal Appetite, he made a Bargain about the Popedom with John Gracian Arch-priest of the Church of Rome, and made it over to him for a Sum of Mony, reserving to himself the Revenues due from England to the Holy See. This Gracian took upon him the Name of Gregory VI. In the mean time King Henry, who had succeeded his Father Conrad in the Year, 1039. being incens'd against Benedict, who had sent the Imperial Crown to the King of Hungary, after he had defeated that Prince, resolv'd to march into Italy, to put an end to that Schism. After he came thither, he caus'd these three Popes to be depos'd in several Synods, as Usurpers, Simonists and Criminals. Benedict fled for it; Gregory VI. was apprehended and afterwards banish'd; and Silvester III. was sent back to his Bishoprick of S. Sabina. He caus'd Suidger Bishop of Bamberg to be Elected in their stead, who took upon him the Name of Clement II. and was acknowledg'd as lawful Pope by all the World. He crown'd Henry Emperor; and as he was waiting upon him home to Germany, he dy'd beyond the Alps, Octob. 7. in the Year, 1047. Nine Months after his Election. Immediately upon this Benedict IX. returns to Rome, and a third time remounts the Papal Chair; which he held for Eight Months, notwithstanding the Emperor had sent from Germany, Poppo Bishop of Bresse, who was consecrated Pope under the Title of Damasus II. but he did not long enjoy that Dignity, for he dy'd of Poyſon, as 'tis suppos'd, at Palestrina, Three and twenty Days after his Consecration.
- Silvester III.
- Gregory VI.
- Clement II.
- Damasus II.

It is no Wonder that these Popes have not left us the least Monument of their Pastoral Vigilance, either in Councils or by Letters, since all their Care and Aim was how to gratify their Ambition and the rest of their Passions, without watching over the Flock of JESUS CHRIST. Clement II. must be excepted out of that Number; for though he had been Pope but a very short time, yet the first thing he did after his Advancement, was to hold a Council at Rome against the Simoniackal, in which he endeavour'd to put a stop to the further progress of Simony, which was then so common at Rome, that almost all the Ecclesiasticks were guilty of it. He wrote likewise a Letter to John, Arch-bishop of Salerno Elect, by which he approves of his Translation, after he had examin'd whether it had been done by Intrigue or Simony; and being satisfied that it was only for the Benefit and Good of the Church, and that the Clergy and Laity of Salerno had elected him freely, he granted him the Pall, confirm'd him in the Arch-bishoprick, and gave him a Power to ordain and consecrate the Bishops of seven Diocesses mention'd in that Letter.

- Leo IX. In the mean time, Benedict being still in Possession of the Church of Rome, was guilty of strange Exorbitances there, which oblig'd the Romans to send fresh Deputies to the Emperor Henry, desiring he would grant them a Man fit to be advanc'd to S. Peter's Chair. He made choice of one Bruno Bishop of Toul, whom he sent to Rome with the Pontifical Purple Habit upon him. 'Tis reported, That in going through France, at Cluny he met with Hildebrand Clerk of the Church of Rome, who having been carried away with Gregory VI. stay'd in France after his Death, and withdrew to Cluny, where he was Prior. This Hildebrand attended Bruno to Rome, and perswaded him to lay aside his Purple Robes, and to leave the Romans to a free Liberty of Election; assuring him, That this would promote and further his Design. He attain'd his End, according as he had promis'd him, Bruno was very kindly receiv'd by the Romans, elected Pope unanimously, and ordain'd February 13. in the Year, 1049. under the Name of Leo IX. Benedict was likewise oblig'd to submit, and by Hildebrand's Persuasion he acknowledg'd Leo as Pope, and ingratiated himself to him. Leo having settled the Affairs of Rome and Italy, cross'd the Mountains twice and went into Germany. The second time he went to beg the Emperor's Assistance against the Normans of Pozzuolo, with whom he was then at War. Having obtain'd his Desire he return'd into Italy, and march'd against them. They surpriz'd his Forces, defeated them, and took him Prisoner. However, they us'd him very kindly; and having treated him with a great deal of Respect, conducted him to Benevento. He liv'd there a Year, from whence they dismissed him, without exacting any thing for his Ransom, attended with a great Train of Coaches, which conducted him to Rome, where he dy'd within a short time after. Peter Damien very vehemently tmently upbraids this Pope for having wag'd this War, born Arms, and appear'd in Person at Leo IX. the Head of his Forces. Benno assures us, That he undertook this War by the Advice and Intigation of Benedict and Hildebrand, and that they were the Persons who betray'd him to the Normans. However it was, Leo IX. in the rest of his Actions, shew'd a great deal of Prudence and Piety; and his Letters are an eternal Monument of his Learning, and of the Love he bore to Religion and Church-Discipline.

The First is directed to Leo Arch-bishop of Acride, and to the Patriarch of Constantinople, who had condemn'd the Custom of the Latin Church about Unleavened Bread, which it made use of in the Holy Mysteries. He therein raises the Dignity of the Church of Rome, founded by S. Peter. He says, That 'tis this Church which has refused, convinc'd and condemn'd all Heresies, and which has confirm'd other Churches in the Faith of S. Peter, which has and will always remain in the Church of Rome. He reckons up Four-score and ten Heresies sprung up in the Greek Church, among which he places the Presumption of John the Faster, who took upon him the Quality and Title of Universal Patriarch: He not only defends the Spiritual Authority of the Popes, but likewise their Temporal Sovereignty, which he founds upon a supposititious Donation of the Emperor Constantine. He upbraids the Greeks with the Constantinopolitan Council under Constantine Capronymus, and with the Affair of Photius. He adds, That in Contempt of the Canons of the Nicene Council, they had advanc'd Eunuchs to the Patriarchal See of Constantinople. Afterwards, comparing the Church of Rome with that of Constantinople, he says, That the former is as ancient as Christianity it self, and that it has undergone all manner of Persecutions; whereas the latter is wholly New, and sprung up in Pleasures: That the one is the Mother, the other the Daughter: That upon this Account the Latter ought to pay a due Respect to the Former, and not to be so ungrateful, as it is to that Church, from which it deriv'd its first Birth. He reproves, in particular, Leo of Acride, and the Patriarch, for having shut up all the Latin Churches, and taken away the Monasteries from the Monks and Abbots, till such time as they should conform themselves to the Greek Customs. "The Church of Rome (says he) acts with a great deal more Moderation and Prudence. Fortho' there are several Greek Monasteries and Churches both within and out of Rome, yet they have no Disturbance, but are permitted to live according to the Custom of their Ancestors, and are not constrain'd to relinquish their Customs. On the contrary, they are admonish'd and advis'd to observe them. To conclude, he enlarges very much on the Presumption of the Patriarchs of Constantinople, and on the Dignity of the Church of Rome.

Leo's second Letter is directed to the Bishops of the Provinces of Venice and Istria, whom he gives to understand, That Dominick Patriarch of Grado or Aquileia Nova, came to a Council held at Rome in the Year, 1053. wherein he had been ordain'd: That the Town of Grado should always be esteem'd the Metropolis of Venice and Istria, and that the Bishop of Foro-Julio or old Aquileia, should have no Power or Jurisdiction out of Lombardy, according to the Grant of Gregory II. and the Restriction of Gregory III. He thereupon orders these Bishops to submit to the Patriarch of Grado, as to their Metropolitan.

The Third is an Answer directed to Thomas a Bishop in Africa, who had ask'd the Pope's Advice about the Dignity of the Church of Carthage. He at first lets him know how deeply he is concern'd to understand, by his Letter, that the Church of Africa, where there were formerly so many Bishops, that in the Canons we read of Two hundred and five who were present at a Council held at Carthage, was now reduc'd to the Government of only five Bishops, and that even they could not live friendly together. Afterwards he congratulates him for having apply'd himself to the Church of Rome for the Resolution of his Doubts. Lastly, he declares to him, That the Bishop of Carthage is Primate and Metropolitan of all Africa; and that the Bishop about whom he wrote (whoever he were) ought not to consecrate Bishops, nor to depose them, nor to call a Provincial Council, nor to do any Thing, unless what concerns his own Diocess, without the Consent and Permission of the Arch-bishop of Carthage. He adds, by way of Advice, That they could not call a General Council, nor determine any thing about Bishops, without the Authority of the Holy See.

The Fourth Letter is directed to two other Bishops of Africa, call'd Peter and John. After a Preamble, very much like that of the former Letter, he gave them the same Answer concerning the Arch-bishop of Carthage, and the determining of Matters relating to Bishops; and thereto adds several Extracts out of the false Decretals, concerning the Institution of Metropolitans.

In the Fifth, he congratulates Peter Bishop of Antioch his Advancement to that Dignity, speaks of the Prerogatives of the Church of Rome, exhorts him to maintain the third Rank among the Patriarchs, approves of the Form of Faith which he had sent him, and makes another like it, declaring, That he wish'd, that the Latin and Greek Churches were happily united, and it was no Fault of his that they were not.

The Sixth is directed to Michael Patriarch of Constantinople. He declares to him the Inclination he had for Peace, and was glad to find the Patriarch of the same Mind too. However he reproves him, (1.) Because he being a Novice, had all of a sudden been made Patriarch. (2.) Because he was minded to make the Patriarchs of Alexandria and Antioch

Leo IX. submit to his Jurisdiction. (3.) Because he took upon him the Title of Universal Patriarch, which the Popes of Rome had never allow'd of, and says, That S. Peter was never stild Universal Apostle, tho' he had been made the Prince of the Apottles; and that the Council of Calcedon had granted that Title to S. Leo and his Successors. (4.) Because he calumniated the Latin Church, and anathematiz'd and persecuted all those who made use of Unleaven'd Bread in the Eucharist. In the close of this Letter, he exhorts him to put an end to this Schism. This Letter bears date January, Indictio septima, which is the Year 1054.

The Seventh is writ to the Emperor Constantine Monomachus, on whom he bestows great Commendations for his being so desirous of Peace and Union between the two Churches. He exhorts him to imitate the Piety of Constantine the Great, and the respect he bore to the Holy See, and to grant him his Protection. He complains to him that Patriarch Michael had done many unjust things, even whilst he pretended to be desirous of a Peace.

The Eighth is directed to all the Bishops of Italy, and contains an Injunction which he made to put a stop to the Avarice of Abbots and Monks, who converted all the Pious Donations to the use of their own Monasteries, without allowing any share thereof to the Churches. He enjoins that all those who should hereafter grant such Donations, shall leave the one Moyery of what they give to the Church where they live, and the other to the Monastery.

The Ninth, directed to the Bishops of France, has relation to the Council of Rheims, to which it is refer'd.

The Tenth is against those who rifle Bishops Houses after their Decease.

In the Eleventh he confirms the Right of Metropolitan to the Arch-bishop of Salerno.

In the Twelfth directed to the Princes of Bretagne, he Excommunicates the Bishops of that Province, because they would not submit themselves to the Arch-bishop of Tours, and because they were Guilty of Simony. However, he gave them leave to come and clear themselves if they could at the Council of Venceil. He pronounces the same Sentence against those who had ordain'd them.

One may likewise reckon among the Letters of Pope Leo, the Bulls which he has granted upon several Occasions, viz. The Bull by which he grants to the Vatican Church the Tenth of the Offerings: That by which he declares that the Body of S. Dennis is at Ratisbonne, and not at S. Dennis in France, where there are only the Bodies of S. Rusticus and S. Eleutherus; (but 'tis a question whether this Bull be genuine or no): That which relates to the Bishop of Porto: The Bulls confirming the Privileges of the Abbies of Cluny, of S. Sophia at Benevento, and of the Monastery of Peter Damien, to whom he wrote likewise a Letter, wherein he approves of one of his Works.

There is no question to be made, but that this Pope made several Laws in several Councils, tho' we have not an entire one left us. Authors make mention only of a Council of Rome held in the Year 1049. wherein he confirm'd the Decree of his Predecessor Clement II. concerning those who were Guilty of Simony: Of another Council held the same year at Pavia: Of a Council held at Rheims, wherein Hugh of Langres was depos'd, the Acts of which we have by us: Of a Council held the next year at Mayence, against a Bishop charg'd with Adultery: Of another Council held the same year at Rome against Berenger: Of another held at Sipontia against two Simoniack Arch-bishops: Of a third Council held at Rome after Easter in the Year 1051. wherein Gregory Bishop of Venceil was depos'd for Adultery, and wherein several Laws were made against Simoniack and Incontinent Clerks: Of another Council begun the year following at Mantua, which was disturb'd by a Sedition of the People; without making any mention of that which was held at Rome in the Year 1054. about the Contest which happen'd between the Arch-bishops of Grado and Aquileia. This Pope dy'd April 15. in the Year 1054. after he had presid'd over the Church of Rome for five Years and some Months.

Victor II. After his Death Benedict endeavour'd again to seize upon the Papal Chair; but the Romans sent Hildebrand to the Emperor, to desire a Pope of him. He nominated to them Gebehard Bishop of Eichstat, who was Elect'd and Consecrated in the Year 1055, under the Name of Victor II. 'Tis said that he met with some disturbance in the beginning of his Pontificate, and that a Sub-deacon would have Poison'd him, by mixing Poison with the Wine in the Chalice; which was discover'd by a Miracle: For after it was Consecrated, he could not lift up the Chalice, and the Sub-deacon who had done this wicked Thing, was immediately possess'd by an evil Spirit. He call'd a Council at Florence, in which he depos'd several Bishops convicted of Simony; and order'd Laws to be made to prohibit the Alienating of the Revenues of the Church. He sent Hildebrand his Legat into France, who held there several Councils; among the rest one at Lions, in which a Bishop convicted by a Miracle, of Simony, was depos'd: And that at Tours against Berenger. In the Year 1056. Victor went to Germany, being call'd thither by the Emperor Henry III. whom he found at the Point of Death. This Prince before his Death, caus'd his Son Henry to be Elect'd King, who was scarce five Years old, and recommended him at his Death to the Pope and the Church of Rome. Victor did not long survive the Emperor, for being return'd into Italy, after he had held a Council at Rome, he dy'd at Florence, July 28. in the Year 1057. We have V. for II. only one Letter of this Popes, by which in favour of Cardinal Humbert, he confirms and augments the Privileges granted to the Church of Blanchefevre.

After Victor's Death, Frederic Abbot of Mount Cassin was advanced to the Holy See. He descended from a noble Family of Lo-rain, and had been Chancellor and Arch-deacon of the Church of Rome. Pope Leo had sent him on an Embassy to Constantinople. At his Return he became one of the Religious of Mount Cassin under his Brother Richeus, who was Abbot of the Place; and after his Death Cardinal Humbert got him to be Elected Abbot of that Monastery in the Year 1057. having constrain'd the Person, whom the Monks had Elected without the Knowledge and Consent of the Holy See, to lay down that Preference. Some time after, Victor created him Cardinal under the Name of S. Chrysogone; and that Pope dying, he was Elected in his place, and Consecrated on S. Stephen's day, in the Year 1057. from whence he took upon him the Name of Stephen IX. He immediately set upon reforming the Clergy of the Church of Rome, and made several Statutes against the Clerks who kept Concubines. He brought the Church of Milan to submit to that of Rome, after it had for several years withdrawn from its Jurisdiction; and sent an Embassy into the East, to re-unite the two Churches. He went to Florence in the beginning of the Year 1058. where he dy'd on the 29th of March. We have one Letter of his left us, directed to the Arch-bishop of Rheims, by which after he had Complimented him for the submission he express'd towards the Holy See, he inform'd him of the Council which was to be held at Rheims, that he wonder'd he had not sent him word whether the King had consented to it or no. He wrote to him about the Arch-bishop of Bourges, that nothing could be determin'd upon his business in the absence of Hildebrand; that he would come with him, and that they would settle this and other Affairs together. He exhorts him vigorously to defend the Interests of the Holy See and the Church; and order'd him to be at a Council which was to be held at Rome, a Fortnight after Easter. There is likewise another Letter writ by this Pope to Pandolphus Bishop of Marsi, by which he re-unites that Bishoprick, which had been divided into two.

Stephen IX.

The News of the Pope's Death being brought to Rome, the Count of Frescati and the Roman Lords plac'd by force on the Papal Chair Mincius Bishop of Velitra, to whom they gave the Name of Benedict X. Peter Damien and the other Cardinals who had no hand in this Election, withdrew from Rome after they had protested against it: And being met at Sieme, they Elected for their Pope Gerard Arch-bishop of Florence, a Burgundian by Nation. They immediately sent Embassadors to the Empress Agnes, to prevail upon King Henry to confirm this Election. They had their request granted, and the Empress order'd Godfrey Marquis of Tuscany to place Gerard in Possession of the Holy See, and to turn out Benedict. In the mean time Gerard held a Council at Sutri to depose Benedict; but he perceiving his Interest to decline, thought fit to retire to his own House, and relinquish the Chair. Gerard being inform'd of this, came to Rome with the Bishops and Cardinals, was there acknowledg'd as lawful Pope, and ordain'd in the beginning of January 1059. by the Name of Nicholas II. Within a few days after, Mincius waited upon him to ask him Pardon, and having solemnly declar'd that he had been basely us'd, and own'd himself Guilty of Perjury, for being put in Possession of the Holy See before the return of Hildebrand, contrary to the Oath which he had taken to him, he was for ever suspended from all his Ecclesiastical Functions: And to prevent such disturbances for the future, which might happen upon the Election of Popes; it was Enacted in a Synod of an Hundred and thirteen Bishops, held at Rome in the Year 1059. That the Cardinals should have the greatest share in the Election of a Pope, and that if any one should intrude into the Papal Chair without being Unanimously and Canonically Elected by the Cardinals, and with the consent of the other Orders, both of Clergy and Laity, he should not be look'd upon as an Apostolick Pope, but as an Apostate. This is the First Act of that Council. The Second imports, That at the Death of a Pope, or any other Bishop, no Body should make a seizure on their Estates, but they should be reserv'd to their Successors. The Third is, That no Person shall be present at the Mass of a Priest, whom he knows keeps a Concubine. The Fourth imports, That the Canons or Prebendaries shall hold all things in Common. The Fifth, That the Tenth and other Offerings shall be at the disposal of the Bishop. The Sixth, That no Person shall be entitled to any Church at the Presentation of Laicks. The Seventh, That no Person shall take upon him the Habit of a Monk, upon the promise or hopes of being made Abbot. The Eighth, That no Priest shall hold two Churches at once. The Ninth, That Laicks shall not be the Judges of the Clergy. The Tenth, That no Person shall be ordain'd by Simony. The Eleventh, That no Person shall Marry his Relation, to the seventh Generation, or so long as the Kindred may be known. The Twelfth, That a Laick who has a Wife, and keeps a Concubine shall be Excommunicated. The Thirteenth, That Laicks shall not be advanc'd all of the sudden to Ecclesiastical Degrees, but shall be try'd for some considerable time, after they have lay'd aside their secular Habit. These Acts are follow'd by a Decree against those who are guilty of Simony, by which it is order'd, That those who have been formerly ordain'd by Persons guilty of Simony, without having given Money for their Ordination, may continue in those Ecclesiastical istical Degrees to which they have been advanc'd; but that for the future, those who shall be ordain'd by Persons whom they know to be guilty of Simony, shall be depos'd. With reference to Popes 'tis added, That those who shall take Possession of the Papal Chair, either by Bribery, or by Intrigue, or by Force, without being Unanimously and Canonically Elect-ed by the Cardinal-bishops, and the rest of the Clergy, shall be look'd upon not as Apostolick Popes, but as Apostates: And that it shall be lawful for the Cardinal-bishops, and any other Persons of known Piety, whether Clerks or Laicks, to turn out such an one, who shall thus seize upon the Holy See, by Excommunicating him, and by calling in to their Assistance the secular Power. And that if they cannot do this in Rome, they shall meet together out of that City, in what place they please, to Choose one whom they shall judge more worthy to fill the Chair: And that the Person whom they shall Choose, shall be look'd upon as Lawful Pope; Salvo omnino Imperatoris Privilegio, as 'tis worded in that very Decree concerning the Election of a Pope. It was in this Council that Berenger retracted his Error, as we have said before.

The other Councils under Nicholas II.

This same Pope being reconcil'd to the Normans of Pozzuolo, held a Council at Amalfi, where he depos'd the Bishop of Trani; and another Council at Benevento, wherein he adjusted a difference concerning an Hospital depending upon the Monastery of S. Vincent of Volaterra, upon which one Albert a Monk had seiz'd.

The Letters of Nicholas II.

The Letters of this Pope do almost all of them relate to the Affairs of France.

The Four first are directed to Gervais Arch-bishop of Rheims. In the First he gives that Bishop to understand, that there was a flying Report of his being a favourer of his Adversary: That however, he was willing to believe the contrary upon the Testimony which he had receiv'd of him by a very creditable Person. He exhorts him to maintain the Rights of the Church, and to admonish the King of France nor to hearken to the evil Counsels which were given him, nor to oppose the Holy See, particularly with relation to the Person whom he would have to be ordain'd Bishop of Mascon. He assures him that he has a particular Respect and Kindness for that Prince; and let him do as he pleas'd, yet he would always Pray for him and his Army. In the Second, He enjoyns that Arch-bishop to interdict the Bishops of Beauvais and Senlis, in case it appear'd that they had been ordain'd by Simony, as he was assur'd. In the Third, He orders that Arch-bishop to give Satisfaction to the Church of Verdun for the Injuries he had done it, and to release the Prebendaries whom he had caus'd to be apprehended. In the Fourth, He lets him know how well satisfied he was with those signs of Submission which he had express'd to him; that he granted him what he desir'd for the Bishop of Senlis, because it was nothing but what was reasonnable; and that he could not tell whether he should come to France or no.

The Letter of Gervais Arch-bishop of Rheims, to Pope Nicholas II.

We have likewise a Letter of Gervais, directed to this Pope, in which he thanks him for the kind Entertainment he gave to his Deputies, and for the Charity he shew'd to one of them who dy'd at Rome. He acquaints him of the Death of King Henry, tells him how earnestly he wish'd to see him in France; and assures him in very express Terms of the Submission and Respect which he bore to the Holy See. This doubtless is the Letter which Nicholas answer'd by the foregoing.

The Fifth Letter of this Pope is a Privilege, granted to the Monastery of the Religious of S. Felicity near Florence.

The Sixth, directed to Edward King of England, is a confirmation of the Privileges granted to the Church of Westminster.

The Seventh, directed to Ann Queen of France, is a Tract of Peter Damien's, which was among his Letters.

The Eighth is directed to the Bishops of France, Aquitain, and Gascogne. He informs them of the Decrees made in the Council of Rome, against the Clerks and Monks who kept Concubines, or were Apostates; against those who abuse Ecclesiasticks, or seize upon the Revenues of the Church; and concerning the Compass of the Courts and Church-Yards.

In the Ninth, directed to the Count of Rouergue, he exhorts him to take the Churches and Poor under his Protection; and in particular, to restore to the Monastery of S. Peter of Verdun, the Lands and Revenues which he had in his Country, threatening to Excommunicate him, if he detain'd them any longer. This Pope dy'd at Florence, July 3. in the Year 1061.

Alexander II.

After his Death there were great Contentions about the Popedom, occasion'd by the two powerful Factions which were then in Rome: Namely, the Faction of Hildebrand, and that of the Counts of Frescati and Galera, and of other Lords of Rome. Both Factions sent Deputies to King Henry's Court, to obtain his Vote in favour of some one of their own Party. Gerard Count of Galera deputed by the Lord's Faction, having presented King Henry with a Crown of Gold, and offer'd him the Title of a Roman Peer, insinuated so far into his favour, that Stephen a Cardinal-Priest deputed by Hildebrand and the other Cardinals, could not so much as get Audience, but return'd without doing any thing. After his return the Cardinals in October, Elect'd for their Pope one Anselm a Native of Milan, and Bishop of Lucca, who took upon him the Name of Alexander II. They believ'd he would prove agreeable enough to the

the Court. But King Henry looking upon this Election as a breach of his Prerogative, Alexander caus'd Cadalous Bishop of Parma to be Elected Pope, who was acknowledg'd as such by the Bishops and Princes on the other side the Alpes. He intending to take Possession of the the Papal Chair by Force, sat down with an Army before Rome; but was beaten off by the Forces of Godfrey Marquis of Tuscany, and of Matilda his Wife, who had enter'd into the Interests of Alexander. This first attempt proving very unsuccessful, he return'd a second time with greater strength, and became Master of the Town Leonina, and of the Church of S. Peter; but he was oured thence also, and his Forces put into such a Consternation, that he himself had like to have been taken, and was forced to throw himself into a Castle, from whence he very narrowly made his Escape, by giving Money to those who Besieg'd him. Some time after Anno Arch-bishop of Cologne, who had the greatest hand in the Administration of the Affairs of Germany, ever since the Empress Agnes was remov'd, being come into Italy, and alledging that the Election of Pope Alexander was invalid, because it was carry'd on without the Emperor's Approbation, and because he lay under a suspicion of having given Money for to be Elected: It was agreed upon to call a Council at Mantua, to adjust this difference. Alexander and Cadalous met there, with Peter Damien, Hildebrand, and several other Bishops of Italy, Lombardy and Spain. Alexander did there very stoutly defend his Election; Cadalous had not the face to maintain his pretended Right, and so withdrew. The former likewise clear'd himself by Oath of the Accusation of Simony, which was lay'd to his Charge; so that Anno and the Bishops of Lombardy acknowledg'd him alone to be Lawful Pope. But the Emperor's Prerogative was preserv'd for the future, and Alexander was oblig'd to Pardon Cadalous, and to make Guitbert Grand Signior of Parma, Chancellor to King Henry, and formerly the Popes greatest Enemy, Arch-bishop of Ravenna. This Council was held in the Year 1064. and put an end to a Schism which would have been the Cause of very great disturbances in the Church of Rome, if it had continued as it had begun.

The year before, Alexander had held a Council at Rome, consisting of above One hundred Bishops, wherein he had reviv'd the Decrees of his Predecessors, Leo IX. and Nicholas II. against those who were guilty of Simony, against those who kept Concubines, against such of the Laity who seiz'd on the Revenues of the Church, against those who Marry'd their Kindred till after the seventh Degree, and against the Apostate Clergy and Monks. This is only a renewal of the Council held under Nicholas II. The Councils under Alexander II.

In two other Councils held at Rome the year following, Alexander Condemn'd those who maintain'd, that the Degrees of Consanguinity ought to reach no farther than to Cousin-Germans, which he calls the Heresy of the Nicolaitans. He likewise Condemn'd those who had maintain'd, that one may without being guilty of Simony, give Money to Princes to be instituted into the Revenues of the Church. He makes use of Peter Damien to confute these Errors; and sent him to Milan to reform the Clergy of that City; into France, to relieve the Monks of Cluny; and to Florence, to put an end to the Schism of the Church, belonging to that City.

Whilst Peter Damien was employ'd in Reforming the Church, Hildebrand Arch-deacon of Rome, who had the sole Administration of Affairs relating to the Holy See, made use of his utmost endeavours to advance the temporal Power thereof. With the Assistance of Godfrey Marquis of Tuscany, and the Princess Matilda, he repuls'd the Normans of Pozzuolo, and oblig'd them to surrender several places. He engag'd several Lords of Burgundy and France to bind themselves by Oath to defend the Church of Rome. He exhorted William Duke of Normandy to take upon him the Kingdom of England, vacant by the Death of King Edward. Lastly, From the Pontificate of Alexander he began the Contest with King Henry about the Right of Investitures, and caus'd him to be cited to Rome upon that Subject. We attribute all this to Hildebrand, because 'tis evident that it was he who Govern'd under the Name of Alexander II. who led a reserv'd and a retir'd Life, and spent more of his time at Lucca and Mount Cassin than at Rome. However he dy'd in that City, April 22. in the Year 1073.

Since this Pope was eleven Years and some Months on the Chair, we may very well expect a great many Letters written in his Name. We have Five and Forty of them compleat, and the Fragments of several Acts related by Ives of Chartres and by Gratian. The Letters of Alexander II.

His First Letter is directed to the Clergy and Laity of Milan, whom he exhorts to lead a Christian Life.

The Second is directed to Harold King of Norway, whom he exhorts to own the Arch-bishop of Breme as Vicar of the Holy See, and to submit to him as such. He reproves him for that the Bishops of his Kingdom, were either not Consecrated, or else had given Money to be Consecrated.

By the Third, directed to the King of Denmark, he demands of that Prince the payment of what was due from that Kingdom to the Holy See.

By the Fourth, directed to the Arch-bishop of Dalmatia and Sclavonia, he sends him the Pall, and gives him some Instructions concerning his Office.

The

Alexander

The Fifth is the Decree of the Council of Rome, of which we have already spoken.

In the Sixth, directed to Gervais Arch-bishop of Rheims, he writes to him against Cadalous, congratulates him of the endeavours he us'd for the extirpation of Simony; and intrusts him and the Arch-bishop of Sens with the Tryal of the Bishop of Orleans, who was Charg'd with Simony, and orders him to turn out the Abbot of S. Medard of Soissons, Excommunicated long before, and to Elect another in his Place.

This Letter is follow'd by a Decree made at Milan by two Cardinal Legats of the Holy See, against the Clergy who were either guilty of Simony, or kept Concubines.

The Seventh Letter is directed to the Bishops of Denmark, whom he enjoyns to be present at the Synod held by the Bishop of Hamburg.

In the Eighth he exhorts William King of England to pay him the Peter-pence which were due to him.

In the Ninth he grants to Anno Arch-bishop of Cologne, a Privilege which he had beg'd of him in the behalf of a Monastery.

The Tenth is directed to William King of England: He exhorts him to take into his Protection the Ecclesiasticks of his Kingdom; and advises him to follow Lanfrank's directions, to whom he committed the Determination of the Bishop of Chester's Cause, and of the Dispute on foot between the Arch bishop of York, and the Bishop of Dorchester.

In the Eleventh, directed to Landulphus, he determines that the Man who had Vow'd to take upon him the Monastick life and had forc'd his Wife to consent to it, ought not to be made a Monk, till she should give her voluntary consent thereto.

The Twelfth is directed to Gervais Arch-bishop of Rheims: He assures him that he was deeply concern'd for what had befalln him, and invites him to come to a Synod held at Rome.

In the Thirteenth, directed to the same Arch-bishop, he admonishes him to put an end to the difference on foot between Him and two Clerks of his own Church, and that in the presence of the Legats of the Holy See, and of the Bishop of Laon, whom he had Committed for that purpose: And he lets him know that he has written to the Lords who molested him, either to do him Justice in the presence of his Legats, or else to appear before his Synod.

In the Fourteenth, he admonishes him again to put an end to the Affair of those two Clerks, about whom he had already written.

In the Fifteenth, he enjoyns him to Excommunicate those who had unlawfully seiz'd upon the Revenues belonging to a Monastery.

In the Sixteenth, he gives the same Arch-bishop to understand how deeply he was concern'd for the Afflictions which the Church of Rheims labour'd under, and promises to send him a Legat to his Assistance.

In the Seventeenth, he exhorts him to assist the Bishop of Laon, in doing Justice to an Abbeys, who was turn'd out of her Monastery of S. John of Laon.

In the Nineteenth, he informs him, That he had confirm'd the Privilege of the Abbey of Corbey, and adjust'd the difference which was between the Abbot, and the Bishop of Amiens, who had given him satisfaction in the Synod. He refers to him the other Contestts which might be between them, and orders him to give the Holy Chrism and other Rites to the Monastery of Corby, if that Bishop refus'd to give it them.

In the Twentieth, he lets him know, that he has confirm'd the Privileges of the Abbey of S. Dennis of France, and put an end to the difference between the Abbot and the Bishop of Paris, after he had heard both Parties at Rome.

The One and twentieth directed to the Arch-bishops of France, is the Letter of Legation which he grants to Peter Damien, when he sent him into France.

In the Three and twentieth, he thanks that Arch-bishop and the King of France, for having turn'd out the Arch-bishop of Chartres, who was Convicted of Simony; and he desires that they would do the same with respect to the Bishop of Orleans.

In the Four and twentieth, he refers the Tryal of the Divorce between Count Radulphus and his Wife, to the Arch-bishops of Rheims and of Sens, and to their Suffragans.

In the Five and twentieth, he orders the Arch-bishop of Rheims to cause the Bishop of Chalons to restore to the Church of S. Menne the Body of that Saint, which he had by force taken away.

In the Six and twentieth, directed to the Arch-bishop of Treves, and the Bishop of Verdun, The Letter he orders, that a Priest who in his Sickness had vow'd to turn Monk, and was of another pers of mind after his Recovery, should be restor'd to the Benefices which he held be- Alexander fore. 11.

In the Seven and twentieth written to the Clergy of Naples, he determines that the Degrees of Kindred ought to be reckon'd according to the Number of the Generations.

In the Eight and twentieth, that he who Marries a Relation of his Concubine, who is promis'd in Marriage to another, ought to restore her to him.

In the Nine and twentieth, he enjoyns a Priest, who had kill'd another Priest, four years Penance, and suspends him for ever.

In the Thirtieth he imposes ten years Penance on a Laick who had kill'd a Priest, tho' the Priest had been the first Aggressor.

In the One and thirtieth he moderates the Penance impos'd by the Bishop of Constance upon an Abbot, who had given his Servant a blow with a Stick, of which he dy'd within six Months after.

In the Two and thirtieth, he determines, that a Man who was ordain'd Deacon and Priest, without having been made Sub-deacon, shall forbear performing his Ministerial Functions, till such time as he had been ordain'd Sub-deacon.

In the Three and thirtieth, he moderates the Penance impos'd on a Man who had been the occasion of Homicide, tho' he had not been an Instrument thereof.

In the Four and thirtieth, directed to the Bishops of Spain, he declares that they ought not to put the Jews to death for their Religion.

In the Five and thirtieth, he orders the Clergy and Laity of Lucca, not to sell the Offices belonging to the Church.

In the Six and thirtieth, he adjuges that a Priest, who is subject to the Falling Sicknes, ought to abstain from Celebrating Mass.

By the Seven and thirtieth, he declares that he had impos'd seven years Penance on a Man who had kill'd his own Son involuntarily.

In the Nine and thirtieth, which is among Lanfrank's Letters, he confirms the Privilege of the English Monks, to officiate in Cathedral Churches.

The Fortieth is the Privilege granted to the Abbey of Vendem.

The One and Fortieth is the Privilege granted to the Monastery of Peter Damien.

In the Two and fortieth, he enjoyns the Bishop of Amiens to forbear disturbing the Monks of Corby; otherwise he would Suspend and Excommunicate him, till such time as he should give them satisfaction in the presence of the Arch-Bishop of Rheims.

The Three and fortieth, directed to the Monks of Cluny, is a Privilege which he grants to them, that they should not be Excommunicated or Interdicted, but by the Sentence of the Holy See.

By the Four and fortieth he permits Gebehard Arch-bishop of Salzbourg, to erect a Bishoprick in his Diocess.

By the Five and fortieth he confirms the Establishment made by the Bishop of Passaw, that the Regular Canons should hold all things in Common.

The greatest part of the Fragments of his other Letters, are his Judgments preferr'd against the Clerks who were guilty of Simony and Fornication; or else his Determinations upon several Points of Discipline, particularly concerning the Degrees of Consanguinity. We likewise gather from them, that an Excommunicated Person cannot Excommunicate another: That a Priest ought to Celebrate but one Mass a day; tho' some say one for the day, and another for a deceased Person, when 'tis necessary: That those who offer any Violence to Bishops, shall be Excommunicated; and that those who offer any to Priests, or to any other Clergy-men, shall be enjoyn'd Penance.

An Account of the Church of Rome under Gregory VII. of the Differences between this Pope, and the Emperor Henry, and other Princes of Europe; With an Abstract of his Letters.

Gregory
VII.

THERE happen'd no disturbance among the People upon the Death of Pope Alexander: For Hildebrand, who had the whole Power in his own Hands, gave such good Orders, that all was still and quiet. He order'd a Fast to be kept, and Prayers to be made for three Days together, before they consulted about the Election of another Pope. But at the very time of Interring the Corps of the deceased in the Church of S. Saviour, April 22 in the Year, 1073. being the very Day of his Death; the People being mov'd thereto, proclaim'd Hildebrand Pope, and put him into the Possession of the Holy See. The same Day he acquainted the Prince of Salerno of his Election, and pray'd him to come to Rome to defend him. This is what he says himself about the manner of his Election: But he withal declares that it was much against his Will, and that he was very Angry at it. His Adversaries tell us quite another Story, and say, That they were his Soldiers and other of his Creatures, who made this tumultuary Proclamation: That neither the Cardinals, nor the Clergy, nor the most considerable among the People had any Hand in it. However, there is an Act of Election in the Name of the Cardinals and the Clergy of Rome, made in the presence of the Bishops and Laity, which bears date the very Day of his Election. However the Case was, it must be own'd that this Election was very Precipitate; and that Didier Abbot of Mount Cassin and Cardinal, had a great deal of reason for the Reply he made to Hildebrand, who check'd him for coming too late, when he told him, that it was himself who was too hasty, since he took possession of the Holy See, before the Pope his Predecessor was lay'd in his Grave: And Hildebrand himself has acknowledg'd the Fault of this Election, which he casts upon the People, and maintains that he had no Hand in it. He was of Tuscany, of the Borough of Soana, the Son of a mean Artificer, if most Historians may be credited. He spent the first Years of his Life in Rome, where he had for his Master, Laurence Arch-bishop of Meipha, and was extremely in the favour of Benedict IX. and Gregory VI. He attended the latter in his Banishment to Germany, and after his Death retir'd into the Abby of Cluny, where he abode till such time as Bruno Bishop of Toul, who was nominated for Pope by the Emperor Henry, going through France took him along with him to Rome, not questioning but by the Acquaintance and Interest which he had in that City, he might be very serviceable to him. He was no sooner return'd but he renew'd his Familiarity with Theophylact or Benedict IX. and grew within a while so Rich and Powerful, that he became Lord and Master of all Affairs, and the Popes were in a manner his Dependents. It was he who negotiated the Election of Victor II. between the Emperor and the Romans; and under Victor's Pontificate he was sent Legat into France. He turn'd out Benedict IX. and caus'd Nicholas II. to be Elected in his stead, who made him Arch-deacon. In a Word it was by his means that Cadalous was turn'd out, and Anselm Bishop of Lucca ordain'd Pope under the Name of Alexander II. It was he who supported that Popes Interest, and having taken upon him the Character of Chancellor of the Holy See, had the absolute Administration of all Affairs both Ecclesiastical and Civil, as well as the entire disposal of the Revenues of the Church of Rome during his Papedom.

Hildebrand foreseeing that his Election might be molested, because it had been carry'd on so precipitately, and without the Consent of Henry King of Germany; he forthwith wrote to him about it, and requested by his Deputies that he would be pleas'd to confirm it, assuring him that he had been elected against his Will, and that he put off his Ordination till such time as he was inform'd of his Will and Pleasure. King Henry took some time to consider on it, and sent Count Eberhard to Rome, to learn after what manner that Election had been carry'd on. Hildebrand shew'd so many Civilities to this Count, that he wrote to the King in his behalf: And Henry perceiving that it signified nothing to oppose his Election, because he was more powerful in Rome than himself, gave his Consent to it. By this means Hildebrand was ordain'd Priest, and afterwards Bishop of Rome, in June, Anno Dom. 1073. At his Ordination he took upon him the Name of Gregory VII. in honor to the Memory of John Gratian his old Patron, who had assum'd the Name of Gregory VI. when he was seated upon the Papal Chair.

No sooner was this Man made Pope, but he form'd a design of becoming Lord Spiritual and Temporal over the whole Earth; the supreme Judge and Determiner of all Affairs both Ecclesiastical and Civil; the Distributer of all manner of Graces of what kind soever; the Disposer not only of Arch-bishopricks, Bishopricks, and other Ecclesiastical Benefices; but also of Kingdoms, States, and the Revenues of particular Persons. To bring about this Resolution he made use of the Ecclesiastical Authority, and the Spiritual Sword which God had put into his Hand, not only to maintain the Faith and Discipline of the Church, to reform Abuses, and to punish those who were guilty of Spiritual Offences; but he likewise made use of it to deprive Kings of their Kingdoms, Princes and Lords of their Estates and Revenues; to render them his Tributaries, to dispose at his pleasure all that belong'd to them, and to force them to do whatsoever he desir'd; to engage Arch-bishops and Bishops to pay him a blind Obedience, and to do nothing in their own Diocesses without his Order. He liv'd in times very lucky for him, and very proper to establish his Pretensions; the Empire of Germany was weak; France govern'd by an Infant King, who did not much mind the Affairs of State; England newly Conquer'd by the Normans; Spain in part under the Government of the Moors; the Kingdoms of the North newly Converted; Italy in the Hands of a great many petty Princes; all Europe divided by several Factions, so that it was easy for him in such a juncture to establish his Authority. But this undertaking created a World of Business to him, and engag'd him in Contests with a great many European Princes. The most considerable was that which he had with Henry King of Germany, which lasted all his Popedom, and was of very pernicious Consequence, both to the Church and the Empire: The account of which is as follows.

Henry, the Fourth King of the Germans of that Name, since Henry the Falconer, succeeded (as we hinted before) his Father Henry, in the Year, 1056. being then about five Years old. His Father at his Death recommended him to Pope Victor II. and threw him under the protection of the Holy See. He was at first under the Government and Tuition of the Empress Agnes his Mother, who had the administration of the Empire in her Hands. But the Princes and Grandees of Germany, being weary of the Government of this Woman, took Henry away from her, and committed the Charge of his Royal Person to Anno Arch-bishop of Cologne, who had likewise the greatest share in the Government. These Lords, to retain their Authority the longer, left Henry to his liberty of doing what he pleas'd, and to live in the Debaucheries common to Youth; and in the mean time Govern'd Absolutely under his Name, and dispos'd as they saw fit of the Offices, Revenues, and Affairs of the Empire. Henry was in this kind of dependency upon them till he came to be Eighteen or Twenty years old: At which time he began to take Cognizance of the Affairs of his Estate, and to Govern them himself: It was then that he began to be sensible that a great many things had been done contrary to Justice, and that the Grandees abusing the Confidence which he had repos'd in them, were advanc'd by indirect means, and regarded more their own private Interests, than those of the State: It was then, he revok'd part of what they had caus'd to have been done, prohibited the Exactions and Outrages which they had been guilty of, re-establish'd the Course of Justice and the Force of the Laws, and punish'd the Offenders. The measures which he took, made several of his Lords to become Malecontents; for they being us'd to do what they pleas'd themselves without fearing to be check'd for it, could not be easie under this new Yoke. Thereupon they conceiv'd an Aversion to King Henry, which they continued for ever after, and they took up a Resolution either to Kill him, or to Out him of the Empire. The Saxons were the first who openly Rebell'd against him; they set upon him with such an Advantage, and with so great Numbers, that he was forc'd to fly for it. He return'd with an Army, and the Saxons were twice defeated, but still kept to their Resolution. They enter'd into a Confederacy with several Lords of Lombardy, France, Bavaria and Suabia; and finding themselves not strong enough to make open War against him, they charg'd him with several Crimes before Pope Gregory, and intreated that Pope to turn him out of his Throne, and to put up another King in his place, whose Conduct and Wisdom should be answerable to his Dignity.

Gregory VII. had formerly begun under the Popedom of Alexander II. to form a Process against King Henry, and had caus'd him to be cited to Rome upon the account of Simony, and other Crimes lay'd to his charge. But after Alexander's Death, he thought it would redound to his Interest to manage him, that he might be the more inclinable to confirm his Election. Some Authors say, That he secretly threaten'd that Prince to Prosecute him, in case he would not approve of his Election; but this Matter of Fact is not prov'd by any Authentick Testimony. What is more certain, is; That before his Ordination, Gregory sent word to Beatrice and Matilda, That he had a design of sending some pious Persons to King Henry, to give him some wholesome Advice about his Conduct, and to persuade him to return to that Obedience which he ow'd to the Church of Rome. At the same time he advises these Princeesses not to communicate with the Bishops of Lombardy, who were either guilty of Simony, or favour'd those who were so. This Letter of Gregory, which is the Eleventh of his first Book, bears date May 25, 1073.

A New Ecclesiastical History

The Persons guilty of Simony, of whom he speaks in this Letter, are the Bishops of Lombardy, and particularly Godfrey Arch-bishop of Milan, who was (as Gregory says) advanc'd to that Dignity by Simony; and even whilst Guy Arch-bishop of that City was Living. He and his Adherents had been Excommunicated for this by the Pope in a Council of Rome, but this Excommunication had no other Effect upon him than to Incense him; and entering into a League with all the Bishops of Lombardy, they conspir'd together against the Holy See. Gregory VII. being advanc'd to the Papal Chair, had nothing more in his Thoughts, than to bring them to submit, and to cause the Excommunication issued out against them to be put in Execution; as appears by the Letter which he sent on that Subject to all the Faithful of Lombardy, bearing date July 1, 1073. which is the Fifteenth of the first Book. King Henry on the other hand protected the Arch-bishop of Milan, and the Bishops of Lombardy, and continued in Communion with them; and this gave the first Rise to the Contest betwixt him and Pope Gregory.

The first of September in the same year the Pope advis'd Anselm, Bishop of Lucca Elect, not to receive the Investiture of his Bishoprick from King Henry, till such time as he had given Satisfaction for his holding Communion with Excommunicated Persons, and till he was reconcil'd to the Holy See, which he hop'd would be effected by the Mediation of the Empress Agnes; of Beatrice and Matilda Countesses of Tuscany; and by Radulphus Duke of Suabia, who had undertaken the Accommodation. The same day Gregory wrote to that Duke, telling him, That he had no particular ill Will to King Henry; but on the contrary, wish'd him well, as he was oblig'd to do, because he had acknowledg'd him for King; because he had receiv'd several signal Favours from his Father Henry; and because that Prince upon his Death, had recommended him to Pope Victor II. But for as much as this Concord between the Empire and the Church, ought to be pure and sincere, it was requisite in the first place that he should manage the Affair with him, with the Empress Agnes, with the Countess Beatrice, and with Reginald Bishop of Cuma; that for this purpose he desir'd a Conference with him, and pray'd him to come to Rome. He wrote likewise at the same time to this Bishop of Cuma, telling him, That he wish'd with all his Heart, that the King were Master of all that Religion and Piety which he ought to be Matter of; and that he were in Union and Amity with the Holy See; and to bring this about, he pray'd him to be ready to come to Rome with the Empress, Radulphus, and the Countess Beatrice, that so all things might be adjust'd: That he might hold Conferences with the Bishops of Lombardy, but that he ought not to Communicate with them. These three Letters are the Nineteenth, Twentieth and the One and twentieth of the first Book. In the Four and twentieth written to Bruno Bishop of Verona, bearing date September the 24th, he declares that he retains the same Love and Tenderness for King Henry as ever he did. This Prince replies to the Pope's Civilities in a very submissive Letter, wherein he declares, That for as much as it was requisite that the Empire and the Papacy should be mutually assisting to each other, it were to be wish'd that they were united together: That he own'd he had not as yet paid all that Respect to the Papacy which he ought, nor punish'd the Guilty with sufficient Severity: That he confess'd his Fault, in order to obtain Pardon for it: That he acknowledg'd that the Levity of his Youth, or his being Jealous of his Authority, or Lastly, his being led by evil Councillors, was the cause of his Sinning against Heaven and the Pope, not only by unlawful seizing upon the Revenues of the Church, but also by communicating with unworthy Persons, and such as were guilty of Simony, and by selling of Churches, instead of protecting them as he ought: That he desired he would for the future assist him with his Authority; and that he implor'd his Aid and his Advice for the Reformation of the Churches, and particularly that of Milan; assuring him that he would assist him as far as possible, and hop'd he was of the same mind with respect to him. The Pope seem'd satisfied with this Letter, as he declares in the Five and twentieth Letter of the first Book, directed to Herlembold, whom he had made Arch-bishop of Milan after the Excommunication of Godfrey, wherein he does not stick to tell him, That King Henry had sent him such a submissive Letter, as was never in his Memory sent by that Prince, or any of his Predecessors to the Popes of Rome. This Letter bears date September the 28th, so that King Henry's Letter, which is not related till after the Nine and twentieth of Gregory, is written some time before. The Six and twentieth Letter bearing date October the 9th, is likewise directed to Herlembold, whom he advises to use his utmost endeavours to reclaim the Bishops of Lombardy, and among the rest, the Bishop of Vercell, by treating them with meekness; and to grant Absolution to those who had communicated with excommunicate Persons, whenever they would repent. In the Seven and eight and twentieth, he exhorts the Bishops of Aix and Pavia to assist Herlembold, and to shun Excommunicated Persons; these Letters bear date the 13th, of the same Month. However, he would not have the Germans to rise up in Arms against Henry, he desires that both Parties would refer themselves to his Judgment, as he sent word to the Arch-bishop of Magdebourg by the Nine and thirtieth Letter of the same Book, which bears date December the 20th, in the same Year.

By the Two and three and fortieth Letters, dated January 25, and 26, 1074. he summoned the Arch-bishops of Aquileia and Milan with their Suffragans, to a Synod which was to be held at Rome in the beginning of Lent. This Synod being met, the Pope order'd that all those who had been promoted to Ecclesiastical Dignities, or had obtain'd any Benefices by Simony, should be suspended and depriv'd of them: That it should no longer be lawful for Clerks guilty of Fornication to celebrate Mass, nor to wait at the Altar; and that the People should not assist at the Mass, or any other Office of such Priests or Clerks who kept Concubines. In this Council he gave Absolution to Ganier Bishop of Straßbourg, who had been Excommunicated by Alexander. This Bishop was the only Person of the German Bishops who were guilty of Simony, who came to Rome to beg Pardon for his Fault; so that the Pope thought this Submission deserv'd an absolute Pardon: But as for the Bishops of Placentia, and the other Bishops of Lombardy, who were likewise come to Rome, he only granted them the Power of Confirming Infants, in case of Necessity. This is what he gives an Account of to the Princesses Beatrice and Matilda in the Seventy seventh Letter of the first Book, dated April the 15th, 1074. A proposal was likewise made in this Synod to ordain Anselm Bishop of Lucca, and Hugh Bishop of Dia; but a Remonstrance was made in behalf of King Henry, that the Pope ought not to Consecrate them, till they had receiv'd Investiture. However, the Pope did not stick to ordain the Bishop of Dia; but put off for some time the Ordination of the Bishop of Lucca. Notwithstanding a little time after he ordain'd him; the People of Lucca would not acknowledge him, but turn'd him out in spite of all the intreaties the Pope us'd for his Reception. Some Authors say that Gregory in this Council, made a Decree against the Investitures of Benefices by Laicks. It appears by the Letter written by this Pope to Beatrice and Matilda, the Sixteenth of November the same year, that Robert Guiscard Duke of Pozzuolo was already Excommunicated, and 'tis probable that this was done in this Council.

Some time after the Pope sent to King Henry the Bishops of Ostia, Palestrina and Cuma, as his Legats, with order to call a Council of Bishops in Germany, to reform the Abuses; to communicate to that Council the Decrees of the Council of Rome against such Clerks as were guilty of Simony, or kept Concubines; and to oblige King Henry to abandon the Interests of the Bishops of Lombardy, and to put himself upon the zealous Reformation of the Church. These Legats attended with the Empress Agnes, waited upon Henry about Easter at Nuremberg. He receiv'd them very obligingly; regulated several Abuses, promis'd them to extirpate Simony wholly out of his Dominions, and to submit to the Holy Sec. But he would not separate himself from the Communion of the Arch-bishop of Milan, and return'd this Answer upon that Subject, That he hop'd that when the Pope should be fully inform'd of the matter, he would revoke what he had done against that Arch-bishop, and the Bishop of Lombardy. Nor would he promise the Legats to call a Council, under a pretence that it did not belong to them, but to the Arch-bishop of Mayence to act in Germany as Vicar of the Holy Sec, since he had receiv'd that Privilege from the Predecessors of Gregory. It was Liemar Arch-bishop of Breme who furnish'd King Henry with this reply. The Legats insisted and remonstrated that the Power which had been granted to the Arch-bishop of Mayence, ended at the Death of that Pope who had given him the Grant; that besides they had a Commission or Power which that Arch-bishop had not; but they were not harken'd to, and were oblig'd to return, after they had suspended the Arch-bishop of Breme, and cited him to a Council to be held at Rome about the Feast of S. Andrew.

The Legats having brought this Answer back to Gregory, he wrote word to Henry, That tho' he had not satisfied him in the business relating to the Arch-bishop of Milan, yet he was very well pleas'd with his Submission, and with the Civilities he shew'd to his Legats: That he was willing to have another hearing of that Affair, to see whether any alteration ought to be made in the Judgment that had been pronounc'd against that Arch-bishop. By this very Letter, he gives him to understand, that he had cited to the Synod to be held at Rome the beginning of the next Lent, Sigefroy Arch-bishop of Mayence, and the Bishops of Bamberg, Straßbourg and Spire; to give an account of their advancement to the Episcopacy, and of their Morals: He desires that he would oblige them to come, and send Deputies along with them, who should give in their Testimony of their Lives and Conversations. This Letter is dated December 7th 1074. There is likewise another Letter of the same date directed likewise to Henry, wherein he expresses a great deal of Affection to him, and prays him not to hearken to their Counsels, who were willing to sow Dissensions between them. He tells him of the Afflictions which the Eastern Christians labour'd under, and assures him that he had provided several Italian Lords to go to their Assistance, and that he had already Fifty thousand Men who were ready to follow him, if he would Head them, and March as far as our Saviours Sepulcher. That he is the more inclin'd to undertake this, because it would be a means of reuniting the Greek Church to the Latin, and of reducing the Armenians and all the other Orientals into the Bosom of the Church. But forasmuch as it was a business of great Consequence, he ask'd his Advice and Assistance, and declares that if he should go, he would leave him Protector of the Church of Rome. These two Letters are the Thirtieth, and one and Thirtieth of the Second Book.

VII.

Some Days before this, the Pope had summon'd to the Synod of Rome, by the Twenty eighth, and Twenty ninth Letters of the Second Book, Liemar Arch-bishop of Breme, Sigefroy Arch-bishop of Mayence, Orbo Bishop of Constance, Garnier of Strasbourg, Henry of Spire, Herman of Bamberg, Imbric of Augsburg, and Adelbert of Wirtzburg.

The Pope's Decree against those who were guilty of Simony, and against the Clerks, who either kept Concubines or were Marry'd, remov'd in Germany, Italy, and France a great many Ecclesiasticks out of their Places, who were found guilty of Simony, or of having unlawful converse with Women. These Men not only complain'd of this Yoke which the Pope would impose upon them, but they likewise inveigh'd against him, and accused him of advancing an insupportable Error and such as is contrary to the Words of our Saviour, who says that all Men are not able to live continently; and contrary to the Words of the Apostle, who enjoins those who cannot live continently, to Marry. They added, that this Law he would impose on them, which oblig'd them to live like Angels by offering force to the ordinary course of Nature, would be the Cause of great Disorders: That moreover if the Pope persisted in his Resolution, they had rather renounce the Priesthood than Marriage, and let him see if he could get Angels to take care of their Flocks, since he would not make use of Men. This was the Language of these corrupted Ecclesiasticks, according to the account of an Historian of that time. But the Pope for his part press'd the Execution of his Decree, and wrote very warm Letters to the Bishops to oblige them to take strict care of it. The Arch-bishop of Mayence doing his utmost therein, found how difficult it was to root out an Abuse so inveterate and so general as this was; and before he proceeded against the Refractory, he gave them six Months time to reclaim. Lastly, having call'd a Synod at Erford in October, he told them in express Terms that he was oblig'd to put the Pope's Decree into Execution, and that they were oblig'd either to renounce their pretended Marriages, or else their Attendance on the Altar. When they found they could not by their Prayers prevail upon him to alter his Resolution, they withdrew from the Council in a great Rage, threatening the Arch-bishop either to turn him out, or to kill him. The Arch-bishop to pacify them, order'd them to be call'd back again; and promis'd, when an Opportunity should offer, he would send to Rome and endeavour to work the Pope over to another Mind. The next Day he propos'd to them the Question about the Tenth.

The Decree of Gregory met with no less opposition in France, Flanders, England and Lombardy, than it did in Germany, as we are inform'd by several Letters sent by this Pope to the Princes and Bishops of these Countries; and this opposition rose so high at Cambray, that they caus'd a Man to be Burnt who had asserted that those who were guilty of Simony, and the Marry'd Priests ought not to celebrate Mass or any Divine Office; and that no Man ought to assist them therein. This we find related in the Twentieth Letter of the Fourth Book.

This Opposition did not discourage Gregory VII. in the least; on the contrary he wrote several Letters to the Bishops and Princes, whereby he enjoins them to put his Decree in Execution, and not to tolerate Clerks guilty of Simony, nor such as were Marry'd or kept Concubines. Upon this Head, we may consult the Thirtieth Letter of the First Book directed to the Arch-bishop of Salzburg, dated November 15, 1073. the Five and fortieth of the Second Book directed to Radulphus Duke of Sabia, and to Berthold Duke of Carinthia dated January 11, 1075. the Sixty first directed to Dietwin or Theodwin Bishop of Liege, whom he charges with Simony: The Sixty second directed to Sicard Bishop of Aquila dated March 23. The Sixty sixth to Burchard Bishop of Halberstat, of the same Month: The Sixty seventh to Anno Arch-bishop of Cologne: The Sixty eighth to the Archbishop of Magdebourg bearing the same date: The Tenth and Eleventh of the Fourth Book directed to the Count and Countess of Flanders dated November 2, 1076. the Twentieth of the same Book: Lastly, he order'd an Apology of his Decree to be issued out in the nature of a Manifesto, wherein he very much exalts the Authority of the Holy See, and the Decretals of his Predecessors.

The Synod call'd at Rome by the Pope the Year before, was held there about the end of February this Year. He therein Excommunicated Five Persons belonging to King Henry's Court, who were the Instruments of that Prince in selling of Benefices: He suspended from their Episcopal Functions Liemar Arch-bishop of Breme, Garnier Bishop of Strasbourg, Henry of Spire, and Herman of Bamberg. He likewise therein suspended William Bishop of Pavia, and Cunibert Bishop of Turin, and depos'd Dennis of Placentia, without any hopes of being reestablish'd. Some of these Bishops went to Rome for Absolution: The Bishop of Bamberg was likewise in the way thither, and sent Deputies beforehand by Presents to corrupt the Bishops who were his Judges; but seeing he had no hopes left, he return'd again, after promise made of retiring into a Monastery. Upon his return, instead of performing his promise, he enter'd again into the possession of his Church, and committed there new irregularities. This oblig'd the Pope to renew his sentence of Condemnation issu'd out against him, and withall to excommunicate him. This is what Gregory wrote to the Clergy and Laity of Bamberg, to Sigefroy of Mayence, and to King Henry by Three Letters of the Third Book Gregory VII. dated July 20, 1075. In the last he commends that Prince for opposing those who were guilty of Simony, and for using his utmost endeavours to oblige the Clergy to live in Celibacy.

King Henry willing to hold a fair Correspondence with the Pope, whom he thought fit to keep his Friend, as long as the War between him and the Saxons lasted, sent two Embassadors to him before August. By them he sent him Word, that since all the Princes of his Dominions wish'd more to see them at variance than in Peace, he sent him these two Persons privately, to manage the Peace between them. That he would not have any one know any thing of it, but his Aunt Beatrice and Matilda. That when he return'd from his Expedition against the Saxons he would send other Embassadors to him to acquaint him of his Mind, and to testify to him the respect he bore to the Holy See. The Pope having receiv'd this Letter, return'd him this Answer, That he was heartily glad to find he had trust'd this Negotiation to Persons of Piety, and that he was ready to receive him into the Bosom of the Church, without exacting any thing else from him, but that he would follow the wholesome Counsels which he had to give him. At the close of his Letter he exhorts him to use the Saxons with Clemency, to turn the Bishop of Bamberg out of his Bishoprick, and to put another in his Place. This Letter which has no date, is the Seventh of the Third Book.

When Henry had Conquer'd the Saxons, he began to put a Slight on the Pope's Favour; and instead of sending a private Embassy to him according to his promise, he resolv'd to make it publick. This gave the Pope to understand, that he did not care how the Affair was Canvass'd, as he sent word to Beatrice and Matilda by the Fifth Letter of the Third Book, which bears date September 11, 1075.

Much about the same time he who was in possession of the Arch-bishoprick of Milan against the Pope's Will, dy'd, and Henry put up in his place a Clerk of the Church of Milan nam'd Tedald, without taking any notice of the Person whom Gregory pre ended to be the lawful Arch-bishop of the place. Immediately upon this the Pope wrote to Tedald and to the Suffragans of the Arch-bishoprick of Milan, to prevent his Ordination; and cited him to the Synod which was to be held at Rome. These Letters are the Eighth and Ninth of the Third Book dated September 7th, and October 10th, 1075. That very Day he wrote a long Letter to King Henry, by which he exhorts him to separate himself from the Communion of those who were Excommunicated by the Holy See, and to receive immediate Absolution from some Bishop who had receiv'd Commission from him to grant it to that Prince. He tells him, that he is surpriz'd to see, that tho' in his Letters he expresses all manner of respect and submission to the Holy See, yet he opposes the Canonical and Apostolick Institutions thereof; and particularly that he had not kept to the promises which he made to him by the Princess his Mother, and by his Legats concerning the Church of Milan; and that on the contrary he had bestow'd the Bishopricks of Spoleto and Fermo to the prejudice of what had been injoyn'd by the Holy See: He exhorts him to a sincere submission to the Sanctions of the Holy See, and to put them in Execution: And he promises him however that if he could shew him by Persons of Prudence and Piety, how an Accomodation might be found out, he would very readily lay hold on it for his Satisfaction.

About the end of this Year, the Pope fell out with Cincius, Son of Alberic, the Prefect of Rome; and after he had Excommunicated him, he cast him into Prison, if Benno may be credited in the Case. Cincius having made his Escape, conspir'd against the Pope; and having rais'd a Troop of Soldiers, set upon him unawares on Christmast Day, whilst he was celebrating Mass in his Pontifical Robes, seiz'd upon his Person, drew him by Violence out of Church, and shut him up in a strong House. No sooner was this News spread about Rome, but the People flock'd in great Multitudes to the House of Cincius to storm it, and to oblige him to release the Pope. Cincius finding that he was constrain'd to do it, made the Pope to promise him, before he set him at liberty, that he would not do any thing to him, or his Accomplices. But the People being inrag'd burnt and pillag'd the Revenues belonging to Cincius both within and without the City. Cincius for his part burnt and demolish'd all that belong'd to the Church of Rome. This Contest held for some Days, being fomented by Guilbert Archbishop of Ravenna, who had excited Cincius to this undertaking. But at last Cincius was constrain'd to leave off, and to depart from Rome to go to the Emperor. Guilbert likewise retir'd, pretending to be reconcil'd to the Pope, tho' his design was to create him new troubles. This he did by joyning himself with Tedald Arch-bishop of Milan, the Bishop of Lombardy, Cardinal Hugh, and several others of the Clergy of Rome.

King Henry being very much dissatisfied with the Pope, who had treated his Embassadors unkindly, and had sent him a Nuncio who had discours'd with him in an haughty and threatening Air, was easily persuaded by Cardinal Hugh, and the other Bishops and Lords, the profess'd Enemies of Gregory, to abandon the Interests of a Man who treated him with an intolerable severity. To bring this about, he wrote a circular Letter to the Bishops and Princes of the Empire, by which he implores their Assistance in the urgent necessity he lay under, and in that oppression under which both the Empire and Church labour'd through the Tyranny of Hildebrand, who design'd to take upon himself alone the Regal and Sacerdotal Authority contrary to divine Institution, which has committed the One to Princes, and the Other to Bishops: To the prejudice of which Institution he design'd to deprive him of the Kingdom and his Life, after he had depriv'd the Bishops of their Priesthood. That in this publick Grievance both of Church and State, he invites them to meet at Worms about Septuagesima, to take such measures as might conduce to the good of the Church, and the honour of the State. Thierry Bishop of Verdun, wrote likewise a circular Letter in his own Name to all the Prelates and Princes of the Empire, which was full of Investives against Gregory VII. in which he declares that they ought to proceed to the Election of a new Pope. Engelbert nominated to the Arch-bishoprick of Treves, wrote likewise another Letter no less abusive than the former. Lastly, all the Bishops of Germany were so dissatisfied with Gregory VII. because he had declar'd publickly that there was not one single Man among them who was a lawful Bishop, and that he would oblige all of them to resign their Bishopricks to him, and to hold them from him, as he had already serv'd several of them; that they all declar'd openly against him. They thereupon met together in great Numbers at Worms on the day appointed, where Cardinal Hugh, (whom the Pope had Depos'd and Excommunicated a few days before) with Guilbert of Ravenna met, and preferr'd several things against the Life, Conduct, Election, and Constitutions of Gregory. Upon this Charge, the Assembly declar'd that Hildebrand could no longer be look'd upon as lawful Pope, and all the Bishops Subscrib'd to his Condemnation. Herman of Metz, and Adelbert Bishop of Wirtzbourg, were the only Persons who made any scruple: But William Bishop of Utrecht, who very warmly maintain'd the Interest of the King, oblig'd them to Subscribe, by saying, That they must either do that, or renounce the Allegiance which they ow'd to their Prince. Afterwards they wrote a Letter to Gregory, in the Name of the Arch-bishops of Mayence and Treves, and of Four and forty Bishops of Germany, by which they declar'd to him, That tho' they knew he had been advanc'd to the Papal Chair contrary to all manner of Right, yet they had thought fit to tolerate his Intrusion, in hopes that he would have made amends for these criminal Beginnings, by his Probity, and the good Services he would do the Church: But that the miserable Estate of the Universal Church, was a sufficient demonstration that the sequel of his Actions was answerable to these unhappy Beginnings. That tho' our Saviour had recommended Peace and Charity as the principal Character of Christians, yet he on the contrary, sow'd Divisions in the Church by his Novelties, and tore it in pieces by his proud Cruelty, or rather by his cruel Pride. That he was the Head of the Schism, and that he had created Confusion and Trouble to the Members of the Church, who before his Time liv'd in Union and Peace, by blowing up the Flames of Discord in all the Churches of Italy, Germany, France and Spain. That he was desirous to strip the Bishops of that Power which they receiv'd in their Ordination from the Holy Ghost; and had deliver'd them up to the fury of the People, who could not endure any Bishops or Priests, but those who had by an unworthy Complaisance beg'd their Power and their Priesthood from his Pride. That he had been the cause of great Confusions between the Members of JESUS CHRIST; subverted the Subordination which was requisite to be observ'd among them; and destroy'd the Rights and Privileges of all other Bishops, by asserting that as soon as ever he should have notice of the Offence of any one of their Diocessans, the Bishops should have no farther any Power of binding or loosing them. That since they could not find in their Consciences to leave the Church in the danger to which it was expos'd by his continued Outrages, they thought it proper to acquaint him with that, which they were hitherto willing to pass by in silence, viz. That he had never been capable of being lawfully seated upon the Holy and Apostolick See, because he had taken an Oath in the Life time of the Emperor Henry of blessed Memory, that he would never be Pope, nor suffer any other to be advanc'd to that Dignity without the consent of that Emperor, or his Son after him. That he had formally renounc'd the Popedom, in order to bring over the other Cardinals to do the like. That in the time of Pope Nicholas II. he himself had been the Author of a Decree made in a Council of One hundred and fifteen Bishops, importing that no Pope should be made but who was Elect'd by the Cardinals, acknowledg'd by the People, and approv'd of by the King. That he had transgress'd all these Promises and all these Sanctions: That moreover he gave a great scandal to the Church, by holding too great a familiarity with a Woman (meaning Matilda) and that it became a general complaint, that all the Affairs of the Church were manag'd by the Counsels of Women. That one cannot complain too much of the unworthy Treatment he shews to Bishops. Therefore for as much as 'tis evident, that by Perjury he entred upon the Papacy; that he has disturb'd the Church by his dangerous Novelties; and scandaliz'd it by the irregularity of his Life, they renounce that Obedience which they never promis'd him, and would no longer esteem him as an Apostolick Pope, since hitherto he has not esteem'd them as Bishops. Rowland a Clerk of the Church of Parma was fixt upon to carry this Letter to Rome; to declare to Gregory that he should renounce the Popedom; and to protest that all he should do or injoin for the future should be Null. This Clerk attended by the Envoys of King

Henry,

Henry, came to Rome the day before the Pope held his Synod which was immediately before the first Week in Lent. He deliver'd the Letter of the Assembly of Worms to Gregory, and made those Declarations and Protestations, which he had been order'd.

Gregory without being startled at it held his Council on the Morrow, and caus'd the Letter which had been brought him, to be read in the presence of those who assisted therein. Rowland did there renew the Denunciation he had made, threatening that if he would not obey and relinquish the Holy See, the King should be at Rome before Whitsontide, and turn him out by force, because he was a Wolf and not a lawful Shepherd. King Henry's Envoys made the same protestations. But for all this, the Courage of Gregory VII. was not abated; on the contrary, fir'd by this Affront, he began by excommunicating Sigefroy Archbishop of Mayence, and by suspending the other Bishops of Germany, who had any hand in this undertaking; he pronounc'd likewise a Sentence of Excommunication against the Bishops of Lombardy, and against several Bishops beyond the Mountains, who were charg'd with Simony or other Crimes; and lastly, he declar'd King Henry to have forfeited the Kingdoms of Germany and Italy, and his Subjects absolv'd from the Oath of Allegiance, and thundred out a Bull of Excommunication against that Prince.

The Pope immediately publish'd this Sentence, and directed it to all the Faithful, with a very warm Letter against the Proceedings of the Bishops and King of Germany. This is the Sixth Letter of the third Book, where 'tis misplac'd among the Letters of the Year, 1075. whereas it was not written till after the Council held the first Week in Lent, in the Year, 1076.

This Excommunication made an Impression on a great many Peoples Minds. The Enemies of King Henry made use of it to promote their Designs, and it serv'd as an Umbrage to the League which the Princes and Lords of Germany renew'd against him. It likewise shock'd some of those who assisted at the Assembly of Worms; and amongst others, Udo Arch-bishop of Treves, who went express to Rome, to procure his Absolution, and be reconcil'd to Gregory; and being return'd to Germany, he was one of the first who maintain'd, That they ought not to communicate with the King, till such time as he should be reconcil'd to the Pope. The Archbishop of Mayence and a great many more became of the same Mind, and there were but a very few of the Prelates who would venture to stand to what they had done. The Pope for his part, made sure of the Forces and Places belonging to Matilda, the Widow of Godfrey Duke of Lorrain, who dy'd this year in his Duchy, being parted from his Wife a long time before. This Princess was Daughter to Beatrice the Sister of the Emperor Henry III. and to Boniface Lord of Lucca. She was possess'd of a very considerable Estate in Italy, having the Sovereignities of Lucca, Parma, Reggio, Mantua, and a part of Tuscany under her. She has wholly wedded to the Interests of Gregory VII. who likewise espous'd her Interests with all the warmth imaginable.

Whilst Affairs stood in this posture, Gregory thought that before he broke out into an open War, it was advisable to use his fresh endeavours to bring over King Henry to submit to what he was minded to require of him. To forward this design he directed a Letter to all the Bishops, Abbots, Priests, Dukes, Princes, Knights, and in general, to all the Faithful of the Roman Empire, wherein after he had declar'd what he had done in favour of Henry, and the base returns he had receiv'd for it; he exhorts them to prevail upon this Prince to do Penance, that so he might be reconcil'd to the Church, declaring that if he would not hearken to their Counsels, they ought to convene together to consult the Wellfare of the Universal Church. He puts them in mind of holding no Correspondence with those who were not separated from Communion with Henry. To conclude, he calls God to witness, that he had no temporal Advantage in his eye, but the Wellfare of the Church was the only Motive of what he did. This Letter which is the First of the fourth Book, bears date July 25, in the Year, 1076.

Within a while after Herman Bishop of Metz, who kept Neuter in this Affair, wrote to Gregory, to ask him whether the Bishops who communicated with Henry were excommunicated, and at the same time he takes notice to him that there were some Persons who maintain'd, that a King could not be excommunicated. Gregory answer'd him by the Second Letter of the same Book written at Tivoli, August 25. That there was no question to be made but that all those who communicated with King Henry (if it be lawful to call him King) were excommunicated: And that with respect to those who say that a King ought not to be excommunicated, there was no need to return them an Answer, since their Opinion was so Ridiculous. However, he did not stick to prove that Kings might be excommunicated from the example of Pope Zachary, by whom he says the King of France had been depos'd, and his Subjects absolv'd from their Oath of Allegiance to him: From several Privileges which are among the Letters of S. Gregory, wherein he declares the Kings and Princes excommunicated, and depriv'd of their Dignity who shall infringe them. He subjoyns the instance of Theodosius; and lastly he alledges as a convincing Argument, that when JESUS CHRIST gave S. Peter the Power of feeding his Sheep, and the Power of Binding and Loosing, he excepted no Person from it. Afterwards he gives Herman to understand stand, That he had granted some Bishops a Power of Absolving the Bishops and Grandees who would separate themselves from communion with King Henry; but that he had forbidden them to grant Absolution to that Prince till such time as he was assur'd by good credible Witnesses of his Repentance, and the satisfaction he would make, since he knew very well that there were Bishops enow who would not scruple to absolve him, if he had not forbidden it.

'Tis much in the same Air he wrote Eight Days after a Second Letter to the Prelates and Grandees of Germany, wherein after protestation made that it was neither Pride nor Interest which mov'd him to excommunicate King Henry, but only for the welfare of the Church, he prays them to be tender of him, if he did sincerely Repent: Upon condition however that he would turn out of his Council those excommunicated Persons who were guilty of Simony, and for the future follow the Advice of those who value the welfare of the Church above their own Interests: That he would look upon the Church as his Mistress, and use her no longer as a Servant: That he would no longer defend such Customs as were contrary to the Liberties of the Church; but follow the Doctrine of the Holy Fathers: That if he gave them an assurance of performing these and other things which with Reason might be required of him, they shall give him notice thereof by their Deputies, that so they might consult together what is best to be done on that occasion; but that he absolutely forbids them to absolve him from his Excommunication, till they had receiv'd an Approbation in writing from the Holy See for it. That if he would not repent, they ought to proceed to the election of a Prince, who would discharge the Duties aforementioned, and that they ought to inform him of the Conversation and Manners of the Person they shall elect, that so he might confirm their Election: That with regard to the Oath which they had taken to the Empress Agnes, in case her Son should dye before her, they ought not to be concern'd about it, because they might very well perceive that she had no longer a Right thereto, whether she oppos'd or consented to his being Deposed: That upon the whole, they should let him know who the Person was whom they design'd for Emperor, after they should have resolv'd to Oath Henry. This is the Third Letter of the Fourth Book. It was no sooner receiv'd in Germany, but the Princes and Grandees of the Empire resolv'd to meet at Tribur or Oppenheim, to consult of the measures they ought to take. Radulphus Duke of Suabia, and the Dukes of Bavaria and Carinthia, with the Bishops of Wirtzburg and Wormes, having held a Conference at Uima, appointed this Convention to be on the Twenty sixth of October, and acquainted therewith all the Princes of the Empire, and the Pope, who sent thither two Legats, to wit Sigehard Patriarch of Aquileia, and Alman Bishop of Passaw. These Legats declaim'd against the Conduct of Henry, and desir'd that they would elect another King in his stead. Henry for his part sent every Day his Deputies to promise the Legats, that he would correct what he had hitherto done amiss, and that he would make reparation for it by consulting the Welfare of the Church for the future: That if they mistrusted his Promise, he was ready to confirm it by his Oath, and to give Hostages for a security thereof. They return'd him this Answer, That they could not tell how to rely on his Words, since he had falsify'd them so often already. That nothing but the very utmost extremity could have brought the Holy See to use such methods, after it had try'd all other: That it had waited his leisure as long as possible; but that at present it could not forbear laying hold of an Opportunity which offer'd it self of placing on the Throne a Person worthy to fill it. After several Conferences of this Nature, both Parties were ready to Engage, for the two Armies were over against each other, on either side of the Rhine, when the Lords of Suabia and Saxony sent their Deputies to the King with this Declaration, That tho' he had behav'd himself very ill towards them, and tho' the Crimes laid to his Charge were evident, yet they were willing to submit the Determination thereof to the Holy See. That they would prevail upon his Holiness to come to Augsburg about the Feast of the Purification, to determine this Affair in a general Assembly of the Princes of the Empire: That if he could not get his Absolution in a Year's time, he should be depriv'd of his Right for ever: That in the mean time he should disband his Army, and withdraw to Spire with the Bishop of Ferdin, and several other Ministers, who were not excommunicated; that he would lay aside all his ensigns of Royalty; and forbear going to Church; that he should restore the Church of Wormes to its Bishop; and that he should order the Garrison which he had thrown into that City to march out. The King finding his Forces to be in a bad Condition, esteem'd it a happiness to extricate himself out of these Difficulties, tho' upon such dishonourable Terms. He therupon promis'd to gratify them in their demands, took his leave immediately of the Archbishop of Cologne, and of the Bishops of Bamberg, Stratzbourg, Basil, Spire, Namburg, Osnabruck, and others who were excommunicated; caus'd the Garrison of Wormes to march out, disbanded his Forces, and withdrew to Spire. The Princes of Suabia and Saxony being satisfied with his Submission, sent the Pope word of all that happen'd in their Convention, and pray'd him to come to Augsburg to put an end to this Affair. The King whose Interest it was to be beforehand with the Pope, and to get his Absolution as soon as possible, set forward on his Journey to the Pope about the end of the Year; and understanding that his Enemies had seiz'd upon the Passes which open'd into Italy, to apprehend him, him, he went through Burgundy and Savoy, and with much ado enter'd Italy. He was Gregory VII. there receiv'd very honorably by a great many, who promis'd him all manner of Assistance. In the mean time the Pope upon the intelligence he had receiv'd from the Princes of Germany set forward on his Journey, and came as far as Vercell, where having understood that King Henry was come into Italy, and had rais'd some Forces, he withdrew to the Castle of Canossa in the Diocese of Reggio, which belong'd to the Princess Matilda. Whilst he was there, a great many Bishops and several Lords of Germany waited upon him, to receive their Absolution at his Hands. He enjoyn'd them to Fast for some time in Cells, and afterwards gave them Absolution according to their request, upon condition that they should hold no Correspondence with Henry, till such time as he was reconcil'd to the Holy See. In the mean time the King carry'd on his Reconciliation by the Mediation of Matilda, the Abbot of Cluny and several other Lords, and very earnestly requested that he would take off the Excommunication issu'd out against him, promising that he would always be ready to answer the Accusations of his Enemies, and to refer all to the Pope's Determination. At last Gregory consented to grant him Absolution, provided he would come in Person, and humbly sue for it. This Prince resolv'd to submit to it, rather than be entirely dispossest of the Empire by the Princes of Germany. He thereupon came to Canossa, and entred the Outworks of that place bare-footed, without any ensign of Regal Dignity. He waited three Days together at the Castle Gate, without receiving any Answer from the Pope. On the fourth Day, after several Conferences, the Pope granted him Absolution, upon condition that he would appear at the time and place which he should appoint, to answer to the Accusations brought against him by the Princes of Germany, whereof the Pope shall be Judge; and that he shall either leave or keep his Kingdom, according to the Sentence he shall pronounce: That till that time, he shall not assume to himself any Character of the Royal Dignity; nor perform any Act of Sovereignty, unless receiving of such Revenues as were necessary for his Subsistence: That all his Subjects should be absolv'd from their Allegiance both before God and Men: That he should remove Robert Bishop of Bamberg, and Ulrick Bishop of Costheim from his Person; and that if he faild in the Observation of any one of these Articles, the Absolution which he receiv'd should be Null and Void: That from thenceforth he should acknowledge himself to be Guilty, and should not require any longer to be heard in his own Defence: Lastly, He bound himself by Oath to submit to the Judgment which the Pope should make, or come to the Agreement which he desir'd; and if the Pope should cross the Mountains, he should give him free Liberty of coming and going, without offering him any Molestation. These Articles were Sign'd and Sworn to by Henry, January the 28th, in the Year, 1077. and as Gurantees of his Word, he offer'd the Princess Matilda, Hugh Abbot of Cluny, the Bishops of Vercell, Naumburg, and several Lords. Afterwards the Pope celebrated Mass, and having taken a Consecrated Host in his Hands, and directing his Discourse to King Henry, he told him, That for a proof of his being Innocent of the Crimes laid to his Charge, he would take the Sacrament upon it; and if his Majesty were as Innocent of the Crimes laid to his Charge, he conjur'd him to do the like. This proposal somewhat puzzled the King, who perhaps was not very much dispos'd to communicate. Some Historians relate that he shifted it off by saying, That this proof of his Innocence would not perhaps be satisfactory to the German Princes, who were not there present: Others say, That he did receive the Communion from the Hands of the Pope. Let the Case be how it will, 'tis certain that after Mass, he was treated very nobly, and sent away with manifest tokens of Friendship and Reconciliation. These Matters of Fact are apparent from the Relation of cotemporary Authors, and from the Letter which Gregory wrote immediately after to the Princes of Germany, which is the Twelfth of the fourth Book.

Henry repented of this Action as soon as he had done it; for the Italians of Lombardy perceiving how disadvantageous the Agreement would be to them, ridicul'd him for what he had done, and cast reproaches upon him for it, telling him, That for their parts, they did not value the Excommunication of a Man, who had himself been very justly Excommunicated by the Bishops of Italy; who was possess'd of the Holy See by Simony; who had stain'd it by several Murders, and polluted it by his Adulteries: That his Majesty had receiv'd a Treatment unworthy of himself, and cast such a Blot upon his Honour, as could never be wip'd off, by submitting to an Heretick, and to an infamous Person: That they were very unfortunate in having made choice of one for the Protector of the Justice and Laws of the Church, who had by this dishonorable Submission betray'd the Catholick Faith, the Authority of the Church, and the Dignity of the State. These and such like were the common Discourses of the Princes and Grandees of Italy, and which they ventur'd to speak publicly. This render'd Henry so odious, that they propos'd to make his Son their King, and to carry him to Rome with an Army, there to have him Crown'd by a Pope of their own choosing. Henry to clear himself, represented to them that he was necessitated to do what he did; that he had not done it but only for the good of the Publick, and because he could not otherwise satisfy the Pope, and the German Lords, who had declar'd against him: That at present being in a place of safety, he would make use of all his strength to revenge the Affront which had been offer'd him. He had much ado after all to pacifie them, and perceiv'd himself himself abandon'd by many, and despis'd by others. This put him upon resolving to break entirely with the Pope, by not observing the Articles agreed upon betwixt them. He recall'd the Excommunicated Bishops, and declar'd publicly that Gregory had betray'd him, and that he would be reveng'd of the Affront which had been offer'd him.

On the other side the Arch-bishop of Mayence, and the Bishops of Wirtzburg and Mets, the Duke Radulphus, and a great many other Princes and Grandees of Germany, appointed a Convention to be held at Forcheim the 13th of March, and invited the Pope thither, who was still at Canossa, where he was detain'd three Months by the Princess Matilda. Having receiv'd this Intelligence, he sent Cardinal Gregory to King Henry, to give him notice that the time was come for the performing of what he had promis'd: That the German Princes were to meet March the 13th at Forcheim, to regulate the Affairs of the Empire: That he ought to be there, to clear himself of the Accusations prefer'd against him. The King return'd him this answer, That since this was the first time of his coming to Italy, he had too much business upon his hands to think of returning so suddenly and in so short a time. The Pope having receiv'd this Answer, immediately dispatch'd away his Legats to Forcheim, to declare to the Convention, that he could not safely go into Germany, or return back to Rome, because Henry had caus'd all the Passes to be block'd up: And that therefore they should in his Absence consult the Necessities both of Church and State, and do what they thought most proper for the welfare of both.

This Convention was held at the place and time appointed. Radulphus Duke of Suabia caus'd himself to be Elected King, and was Consecrated by Sigefroy at Mayence. He immediately sent one to the Pope to acquaint him of his Election, and to assure him of his obedience. Henry for his part, pray'd the Pope to assist him against Radulphus, to declare his Election Null, and to Excommunicate him. Some Authors report that Gregory approv'd of the Election of Radulphus, and acknowledg'd him for King: But he himself assures us of the contrary in the Eight and twentieth Letter of the ninth Book, where he calls God to witness that this Election was carry'd on without his Consent and Knowledge; and that the Answer which he had return'd to Henry, was to this effect, That he would do him Justice, after he had heard the Arguments on both sides, to know which had the most Right on his side. Upon this he resolv'd to go to Germany, and for this end wrote the last of May, in the Year, 1077. two Letters, the one directed to the Legats which he had in that Country, and the other to the Princes of Germany, wherein he acquaints them of his Intention of coming to Germany to decide the difference. That they ought to take all necessary security of the two contending Parties, for his free passage thither; and that if either of the two Parties should oppose his coming, they should esteem him as an excommunicated Person, and acknowledge him as lawful King, who should submit to the Holy See, and was willing to refer himself to its determination. These two Letters are the Three and Four and twentieth of the fourth Book.

Henry foreseeing that if the Pope went into Germany, he would not fail of passing a Sentence contrary to his Interests, resolv'd to stop his Journey, and to engage in a War against Radulphus, and the other Rebels. The Pope having caus'd several Bishops of King Henry's Party to be apprehended, that Prince by way of reprisal, order'd Cardinal Gerard Bishop of Ostia, who was Legat in Lombardy, and Bernard Abbot of Marseilles, one of the Pope's Legats in Germany to be apprehended. Gregory being concern'd that the Affairs of Germany did not go according to his desires, complain'd of it to Udo Arch-bishop of Treves, and his Suffragans, and exhorts them to do all they could to divert the Storm which was coming upon Germany. The Letter which he wrote to them upon this Subject, bears date the last of September, in the Year, 1077. and is the Seventh of the fifth Book.

The Council of Rome in
1078.

The beginning of the next Year, the Pope cited Guilbert Arch-bishop of Ravenna and his Suffragans, with the Bishops and Abbots of la Marche, Fermo and Camerina of Pentapolis, of Emilia and Lombardy, to the Council which was to be held at Rome according to Custom the first Week in Lent, and assures them by his Letter, (which is the Thirteenth of the fifth Book, dated January 28.) That he would do them no harm, and that he would be as indulgent towards them as in Conscience he could be. These Bishops did not think it proper to appear at this Synod, which consisted of almost One hundred Bishops. The Pope did therein renew his Anathema issu'd out already against Tadald Arch-bishop of Milan, and against Guilbert Arch-bishop of Ravenna, and suspended them from all Episcopal and Sacerdotal Functions. He therein depos'd (without any hopes of being re-establish'd) Arnulphus Bishop of Cremona, who was there present, and had own'd himself guilty of Simony, and excommunicated him till such time as he should do Penance. He therein likewise depos'd Rowland Bishop of Trevisi, for having acquir'd his Bishoprick by taking upon him the Deputation of the Assembly of Worms, which had been the cause of the Schism between the Empire and the Papacy, and excommunicated him for ever, if he did not do Penance. He serv'd after the same manner Cardinal Hugh of S. Clement, as one Condemn'd thrice by the Holy See: First, For having favour'd and supported the Schism of Cadalous: Secondly, For having joyn'd himself, when Legat, with Hereticks and Persons Condemn'd by the Holy See for Simony: And Thirdly, for having stir'd up Schisms and Dissentions in the Church.

He

He therein renew'd the Excommunication issu'd out by his Predecessors against the Arch-bishop of Narbonne; and after he had thus determin'd Matters with relation to Bishops, he orders with reference to the Affairs of Germany, that two Legats should be sent into that Country, to hold there an Assembly of Prelates and Grandees of the Empire, wherein they should endeavour to bring things to an Accomodation, or to pass a definitive Sentence in favour of him who had the best Title. And that no Person might disturb the Execution of this design, he excommunicates all such as shall oppose it, and shall hinder his Legats from going into Germany. He therein likewise excommunicates the Normans of Pozzuolo, and interdicts all the Bishops who did not appear at his Synod. Lastly, He prohibits under the penalty of Excommunication, the detaining of those who had been cast away at Sea, or seizing of their Effects. He therein declares the Ordinations made by excommunicated Persons to be Null, and absolves from the Oath of Allegiance all such as had taken it to excommunicated Persons, and prohibits them from paying any Obedience to them. But that the great number of Excommunications might not be the cause of the Damnation of those, who by ignorance, simplicity, fear or contrait were oblig'd to communicate with excommunicated Persons, he exempts out of the Excommunication all Women, Children, Servants, and other Subjects, who had no hand in the Crimes which the others committed, and in general all those who communicated with excommunicated Persons without knowing them to be so. He likewise gives Travellers leave, who are in the Country of excommunicated Persons, to buy what they want of them; and he does not hinder any Man from assisting or shewing any Acts of Charity towards the excommunicate. These Decrees are of the third of March, in the Year, 1078.

This Council being broke up, the Pope wrote to the Bishops, Princes, and other Lords of Germany, sending them word what had been resolv'd upon with relation to the Affairs of Germany: And after having excommunicated all those who should hinder the Execution thereof, he gave them to understand, that the Bearer of his Letter shall agree with Udo Arch-bishop of Treves, who is of King Henry's party, and with some other Bishops of the party of Radulphus, about the time and place of their Assembly, that so his Legats may be there with safety. He wrote likewise in particular to that Arch-bishop, recommending to him the making up of the Peace, and the putting in Execution what had been enjoyn'd in the Council of Rome; and that he might take such measures as were most equitable, he advises him to consult with him who should be chosen Mediator of the other party. These two Letters dated March 9. in the Year, 1078. are the Fifteenth and Sixteenth of the fifth Book.

The Pope wrote and disturb'd himself in vain about the holding of this Convention; Henry would not agree to it, and prepar'd himself for carrying on the War; and even those of the party of Radulphus suspected the Pope's Sentence. Thereupon he wrote another Letter dated the first of June into Germany, wherein after he had declar'd that all the care or pains which he had taken to procure Peace were in vain, because the Enemies of God and the publick Good, who only minded the gratifying of their Ambition, by destroying the Empire, and ruining Religion, hinder'd the holding of the Convention which was propos'd: He enjoyns all the Germans not to assist these Enemies of the publick Peace, and not to communicate with them, giving them to understand that they were excommunicated. Lastly, he assures them that he would never favour the party which was unjust, and prays them not to harbour any such thoughts of him, whatever might be said or written to them about it; for he was one who fear'd God, and who suffer'd every day for his sake. This Letter is the First of the sixth Book.

In the mean time King Henry without minding all these Excommunications, being march'd into Germany at the Head of an Army, and became Master of the Countries of Bavaria and Suabia, which Radulphus had left to retire into Saxony. Radulphus did there raise some Forces, and came before Wirtzburg, and besieg'd it. Henry being come to its Relief, gave Battle to him, which did not prove successfull to him, for several of the Horse, who pretended to be on his side, falling upon him to kill him, put his Army into confusion. The Cavalry fled, the Infantry were cut in pieces, and the Town was taken; but Henry re-took it within a short time after.

About the end of November, Gregory held a Council at Rome, wherein he excommunicat- The Council of ed Nicophorus Botoniatus, who had seiz'd upon the Empire of the East, after he had outed Michael Ducas. The Envoys of Henry and Radulphus, took an Oath in the Name of their Masters, that they would not hinder the Legats of the Holy See from holding an Assembly in Germany, to put an end to their Conteſts. Lastly, The Pope made in this Council twelve Canons concerning Benefices, and Ecclesiastical Revenues. 1078.

In the First, he excommunicates all Laicks who were possess'd of Ecclesiastical Revenues, and in particular those who had seiz'd upon the Revenues belonging to the Monastery of Mount Cassin. This Decree was made upon the account that Jordanes Duke of Capua, had taken away from that Monastery a Sum of Mony which had been deposited there by the Bishop of Roscella.

Gregory
VII.

The Second imports, That having understood that several Laicks granted in several places the Investitures of Churches, contrary to the Constitutions of the Holy Fathers, and that this was the cause of great Disturbances, he orders that no Ecclesiasticks shall receive Investiture of any Bishoprick, Abby or Church, from the hands of an Emperor or a King, or any other Laick whatever, and declares that if any shall receive it, his Investiture shall be Null and Void, and he shall be excommunicated, till such time as he has given satisfaction for his offence.

The Third imports, That if any one sell any Prebends, Arch-deaconries, Provostships, or any other Ecclesiastical Benefices, or disposes of them otherwise than the Holy Canons direct, he shall be suspended from his Functions, because 'tis requisite that he who receives the Dignity of a Bishop gratis, should likewise dispense the things which belong to it gratis.

The Fourth declares those Ordinations to be Null, which are made for Money, or at the Solicitation of any one, or in consideration of any Service done for that purpose; and all such as are not made by the joynt consent both of Clergy and Laity, or such as are not approved of by those to whom the Consecration of elected Persons does belong.

The Fifth imports, That such Pennances as are not proportion'd to the Quality of the Crimes committed are insignificant; and that they who cannot bear Arms, or exercise a Trade without falling into Sin, ought to quit their Profession or Trade: And that those who bear any Malice to, or detain any Goods of their Neighbour, shall be reconcil'd and make full restitution to him, before they shall be admitted to Communion.

The Sixth, prohibits Laicks from possessing Tenthis, what Title soever they may have thereunto.

The Seventh, enjoyns abstinence from Meats every Saturday, unless some solemn Festival fall thereon.

The Eighth imports, That no Abbot shall be possess'd of the Tenthis, or other Ecclesiastical Revenues which of Right belong to the Bishop, unless by the Authority of the Pope, or by the License of the Bishop of the place.

The Ninth, That Bishops shall not impose any new Burden on the Abbots or Clergy.

The Tenth, That all those who are possess'd of any Revenues belonging to the Holy Sec, or know of any who do possess them, shall be bound to discover it, under the Penalty of paying Fourfold.

The Eleventh, That the Bishops who shall permit the Priests, Deacons, or Sub-deacons of their Diocess to live Marry'd, shall be suspended of their Functions.

The Twelfth, That all Christians shall endeavour to offer something at the Celebration of the Mass.

The Council of Rome, in
1079.

The next Year Gregory held another Council the beginning of Lent, in which Berenger abjur'd his Error. After this the Envoys of Radulphus complain'd to the Council, That King Henry offer'd great Violences to the Ecclesiasticks of Germany. Several Bishops of the Council propos'd to excommunicate him; but the Pope thought it more advisable to put it off, and contented himself with taking an Oath from his Envoys, who swore that their Master should send Persons with Pass-ports for the Pope's Legats to go safely into Germany, and should submit to their Judgment. The Envoys of Radulphus took likewise an Oath, That their Master should either come, or send Deputies to the Assembly, which the Pope or his Legats should appoint, and that he should submit to the Judgment of the Holy Sec. The Arch-bishop of Aquileia likewise promis'd to be faithful for the future to Pope Gregory, and his Successors; to make no attempt on their Persons or Estates; and to be in all things submissive to them. In this Synod were excommunicated and depos'd, without any hopes of being re-establish'd, Tedald Arch-bishop of Milan, the Arch-bishop of Narbonne, Sigefroy Bishop of Boulogne, Rowland Bishop of Trevisi, and the Bishops of Fermo and Camerine. Lastly, The Bishop of Reggio promis'd on the Holy Evangelists to quit forthwith his Bishoprick, if the Pope or his Legat should order him to do it.

Gregory upon the Oath taken by the Envoys of the two Competitors, sent away his Legats, as he hints in a Letter written to the Princess Matilda, March 3. in the Year, 1079. But King Henry finding he had the better of his Enemy, whom he defeated in a Battle near Fladesheim, would not permit any Assembly to be held, wherein his Right might be call'd in question; and the Pope's Legats perceiving the success of his Arms, not only abstain'd from acting any thing against him, but likewise seem'd to favour him. Those who were of Radulphus's Party preferring their complaints to the Pope about it, and taking notice that it was suspected that he had alter'd his mind, he return'd them this Answer, That tho' all the Latins who were of King Henry's Party accus'd him of too much severity us'd towards that Prince, he had always objected to them, and declar'd that he would be of no Party, but of that which had Justice on its side; that if his Legats had done any thing contrary to the orders which he had given them, he was very sorry for it, and that he understood that they were constrain'd to do it, either by Fraud or by Force; that he had only given them orders to appoint the time and place, that so he might send his Legats to determine this great Affair; to re-establish the Bishops, and to forbid them them communicating with excommunicated Persons. This Letter dated October 1. in the Gregory Year, 1079. is the Third of the seventh Book.

Lastly, Gregory in the Council held the beginning of Lent in the Year 1080. after he had renew'd the prohibition of receiving Investitures of Benefices from Laicks; anathematiz'd those who granted them; reiterated the Excommunications issu'd out against Tedald Arch-bishop of Milan, Guilbert of Ravenna, Peter of Narbonne, Rowland Bishop of Trevisi and others; prohibited the Normans of Pozzuolo from invading the Revenues belonging to the Church of Rome; repeated and enlarg'd the Decrees made in the Council of the foregoing year, concerning Pennances proportion'd to the greatness of the Crimes, and the Elections of Bishops: He thunder'd out a terrible Excommunication against King Henry, wherein he anathematiz'd Him and all his Adherents; declar'd him to have forfeited the Kingdoms of Germany and Italy, and all Regal Dignity; forbad all Christians to obey him; and bestow'd the Kingdom of Germany on Radulphus, Elected by the Princes of Germany: And Lastly, Exhorts all of them to take up Arms against Henry, to divest him of his Dominions.

When the News of Henry's Excommunication was brought to Germany, it incens'd those of his Party against the Pope, who meeting at Mayence about Whitsontide, resolv'd to endure him no longer on the Papal Chair. But that his Deposition might be the more solemn, they appointed a Council to be held at Bresse, which was made up of Thirty Bishops, Bresse and a great many Princes of Germany and Italy. They there unanimously depos'd Hildebrand, because, say they, it is manifest that it was not God who Elected him, but that he caus'd himself to be Elected by Fraud and for Money; because he overthrew the Order of the Church; disturb'd the Empire; threatned Death to a Catholick King, and a lover of Peace; defended a perjurd King; sow'd discord among those who were at Peace, and scandaliz'd the Church. They likewise cast Reflections upon him, calling him Obstinate, Perverse; a Preacher up of Sacrileges and Combuitions; a Protector of perjurd Persons and Homicides; a Disciple of Berenger, who call'd in question the reality of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST in the Eucharist; a Sorcerer; a Necromancer possess'd by an evil Spirit; an Heretick; an Infidel. For these Reasons they thought that he ought to be depos'd and turn'd out of the Chair, and that if he did not recede of his own accord, he ought to lye under a perpetual Condemnation. They Elected in his stead Guilbert Arch-bishop of Ravenna, one of the principal Actors in this Tragedy, who took upon him the Name of Clement III. All this was done June 25, in the Year, 1080.

After the Assembly, Henry wrote a Letter to Hildebrand (for so he calls Gregory) in these Terms: " Henry by Divine Providence, and not by Usurpation, King, to Hildebrand who is no longer Pope, but a Wicked Monk. You very justly deserve this Title, having been the cause of that Confusion, which the Church at present labours under, and which is so great that there is scarce a Man but has had his share in your Curses. For without making much mention of other Things, you have lay'd under your feet Arch-bishops, Bishops, Priests, and others of the Lord's Anointed, to get the Applause of the People, and to make them believe that you know every thing, but that they know nothing. WE have born with you as long as WE thought WE might with safety do it without prejudice to the Holy See; but you fancy'd that WE did that out of fear, which Humility put US upon doing. You have advanc'd your self against the Regal Power; you have dar'd to threaten to divest US thereof, as if it were you who had bestow'd it on US, and as if WE had not receiv'd it from God, who has call'd US to the Empire, but not you to the Papacy; for you were advanc'd thereto by Craft and Fraud, and by your Money gain'd the favour you had. This favour you thus gain'd has put you upon making use of the Sword to ascend the Throne of Peace, and being mounted thereon, you have disturb'd the Peace, by Arming the Subjects against those whom they ought to obey, by bringing a contempt on those Bishops whom God hath call'd, even you who who had no call. You your self have assaulted OUR Royal Person, though an Anointed King, and one who could not be call'd to Account but by God alone, nor be depos'd for any other Crime but that of Apostatizing from the Faith. For as much therefore as you are Anathematiz'd and Condemn'd by OUR Sentence, and by the Sentence of OUR Bishops, quire the Holy Apostolick See which you have unjustly usurp'd, and let another take your Office, who exercises no Violence under the Umbrage of Religion; but who Teaches the pure Doctrin of S. Peter. WE Henry by the Grace of God King, with all our Bishops, enjoyn you to descend from the Papal Chair.

Henry at the same time wrote likewise to the Laity and Clergy of Rome, that Hildebrand being depos'd, he order'd them to turn him out of the Holy See, and to receive him in who had been Elected in his place. He sent likewise Embassadors to the Christian Kings and Princes, to prevail upon them to Recognize Clement, and to withdraw their Obedience from Gregory.

From Words they came at last on both sides to Blows. The Pope, to make his party good against Henry, reconcil'd himself with Robert Guiscard Duke of Pozzuolo, who promis'd him all manner of Assistance and Obedience; and by way of Reraltion receiv'd the Investiture of the Countries which he possess'd, with a permission of enjoying (durante beneplacito) the preparations of War between Henry and Gregory.

Gregory VII. Salerno, Melpha, and part of the March of Fermo, which he had invaded. This Accommodation gave the Pope a Right of imploring his Aid by the Letter, which is the Fifth of the eighth Book, dated July 21. Afterwards, to fall particularly on Guilbert, he nominates another Arch-bishop of Ravenna, declares he would come with the assistance of the Normans of Pozzuolo to turn out Guilbert, and exhorts those of Ravenna, Fermo, and Spoleto to abandon him, and to place him whom he had nominated, into Possession of that Arch-bishoprick. These are the Seventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth, and Fourteenth Letters of the eighth Book. He wrote likewise to the German Rebels, by the Ninth Letter of the same Book, dated September 22. by which he exhorts them to behave themselves like Men, and vindicate the Honor of the Church of Rome.

dulphus. Henry for his part, prosecuted his design against the Saxons, with whom he had hitherto engag'd without Fortune's declaring her self absolutely on either side. But at last Octob. 15. in the same Year, there was a bloody Engagement between Henry and Radulphus. The Engagement was very sharp on both sides, and Radulphus seem'd to have the better of it, till such time as being hot in the Engagement, he receiv'd a Wound in his Arm. This oblig'd him to retreat, and leave the Field to his Enemy: He was carry'd to Mersburg, where he dy'd within a short time after, shewing a great deal of concern for having swerv'd from his Allegiance to his King. Henry entred Saxony, and made there great Havock, and upon his return re-took all Suabia.

Gregory was the more concern'd for the Death of Radulphus, because it expos'd him to the Mercy of Henry, who prepar'd to fall down into Italy. He had the Princess Matilda at his Devotion; but the Forces which she had, were weak in comparison of Henry's. A great many advis'd him to adjust Matters with that Prince: But being resolv'd to try his utmost before he came to that, he wrote to the Bishop of Passaw, and to the Abbot of Richenou, who still held out against Henry; to learn of them, whether they were in a capacity of giving him any Assistance, and exhorted them to choose instead of Radulphus, a King entirely devoted to the Interests of the Holy See, sending them likewise the form of an Oath which he would have him take. He wrote likewise at the same time to the Abbot of Mount Cassin, to desire Assistance from Robert Guiscard, and he himself desir'd the same of that Prince, as appears by the Eleventh and Seventeenth Letters of the same Book.

Henry's Expedition into Italy, and the Siege of
Rome. In the mean time Henry after he had given necessary Orders for the Affairs of Germany, march'd into Italy in the Year, 1081, at the Head of an Army. He march'd directly to Rome without meeting any opposition, only when he came near that place he engag'd with the Forces of Matilda, which he quickly defeated. But the City of Rome shutting the Gates against him, he ravag'd and laid waste all the adjacent Countries as he retreated to Lombardy. The next year he return'd and laid Siege to that City, which he vigorously assaulted during all Lent: But Easter coming on, and the Heat being insupportable, he quarter'd his Forces round about Rome, and return'd to Lombardy, leaving Guilbert at Tivoli to Command the Blockades. The next Campaign he return'd, and took the Town Leonina, where he caus'd Guilbert to be ordain'd, some say by the Bishops of Modena and Rimini; others by the Bishops of Bologna, Vincenza, and Cervia. Afterwards he carry'd on a vigorous Assault against the City. At this time the Romans being weary of so long a Siege, advis'd Gregory to call a Council to put an end to these disasters. Henry consented to it, and promis'd to grant a free Pass-port to all the Prelates, who should come to that Synod. But he Arrested by the way the Deputies of the German Rebels, and Otho Cardinal Bishop of Ostia who came along with them. Notwithstanding this, the Pope held that Council in November; and tho' his Affairs were so desperate, yet they had much ado to prevent him from pronouncing a new Sentence of Excommunication against Henry, so full of Passion was he. He would not so much as hearken to an Accommodation, so that this Synod which lasted three Days, determin'd nothing, and was wholly taken up with Complaints and Invectives against Henry. In short, the Romans perceiving themselves very much incommoded by the Army of that Prince, and won over by the Money he distributed among them, surrender'd the City to him the beginning of the Year, 1084. and Gregory fled into the Castle of S. Angelo, where he was besieg'd by Henry. That Prince being Master of Rome, caus'd himself to be Crown'd Emperor by Gilbert on Easter-Day in the same Year. Gregory in this Exigency had recourse to Robert Guiscard, who return'd with all expedition from Greece, (whither he had went to Fight the Emperor Alexis) in order to set the Pope at Liberty. Henry did not stay for his coming, whether it was for fear that he was not strong enough to oppose him, or rather because the present state of his Affairs call'd him back again to Germany (for the German Rebels had Elect'd in the Year, 1082, one Herman in the place of Radulphus) he left Rome, took Gilbert along with him, and re-pass'd the Mountains, to go in all haste to Germany.

Henry returns into Germany. The Pope was still besieg'd by part of his Army, and by the Romans: But Robert Guiscard rais'd the Siege; and having entred Rome in Triumph with his Army, he laid part of the City in Ashes, and restor'd it to the Pope's Authority. Henry's Party was likewise worsted in Lombardy. In Germany that Prince laid Siege to the City of Auf- burg, which the Rebels had seiz'd upon, and re-took it from them. Afterwards he made Gregory VII. it his business to punish those who had declar'd against him, and turn'd those Bishops who had been his Adversaries, out of their Churches.

The year 1085. was more quiet, the two Parties being contented to have several Conferences, and to hold Conventions one against the other. There was one the beginning of the year at Goslat or Berchach, where Otho Cardinal Bishop of Ostia appear'd. Tho' it chiefly consisted of those of Herman's Faction, yet there came some of Henry's Deputies to maintain his Right. The Question discuss'd, was; Whether the Pope had a lawful Power to excommunicate King Henry, and deprive him of his Dominions. It was debated by Gebehard Arch-bishop of Salzburgh on the behalf of Herman, and by Wicelin, who had succeeded Sigefroy in the Arch-bishoprick of Mayence, on the behalf of Henry. The one strongly maintain'd the Negative, the other the Affirmative: But each continu'd obstinate in his Opinion; and nothing was determin'd in that Convention.

There was another held after Easter at Quintilineburgh, in the Presence, and by the Order of Herman, and the Cardinal of Ostia, compos'd of Arch-bishops, Bishops, and other Prelates and Lords of their Party, who began by determining that it was not lawful to question whether the Pope's Judgment were lawful or no, and that no body could meddle with it. Gunibert Clerk of Bamberg, being willing to argue upon this Proposition, was contradicted by the whole Assembly, and forc'd to withdraw. In this Convention, they declar'd the Ordination of Wiceline to the Arch-bishoprick of Mayence, that of Sigefroy to the Bishoprick of Ausburg, that of Norbert to the Bishoprick of Chur or Coire, and in general all the Ordinations and Consecrations made by excommunicated Persons, to be Null and Void. They there condemn'd Wiceline, as one who maintain'd, that Laicks when dispossest of their Estates, could not be subject to the Judgment of the Ecclesiasticks, nor be excommunicated; and that those who were excommunicated for their Temporal Estates, might be receiv'd into Communion, without being reconcil'd. They there prohibited the receiving such into Communion, who had been excommunicated by their Bishops, unless they had receiv'd Absolution. They there renew'd the Law which enjoin'd Celibacy to Priests, Deacons and Sub-deacons. They prohibited Laicks from meddling with the Consecrated Vessels or Coverings of the Chalice belonging to the Altar, and from possessing of Tenths. They order'd that the Ember-Week in the Spring should be observ'd the first Week in Lent; and That in Summer the Week after Whitsontide; that no Person shall eat Eggs or Cheese during Lent. They there ratified and confirm'd all that Gebehard Bishop of Constance had done as Legat of the Holy See. But there arose some difficulty about the Legality of the Marriage of King Herman, who they said had Marry'd his Kinswoman. He said he would refer the Determination thereof to the Synod; but that Affair could not there be try'd, because there were not any of his Accusers. Lastly, They pronounc'd an Anathema, by lighted Candles, against Guilbert, whom they call'd Arch-Heretick and Intruder into the Holy See; and against Cardinal Hugh, John Bishop of Porto, Peter the Chancellor, Liemar Arch-bishop of Breme, Otho Bishop of Hildesheim, Otho of Constance, Burchard of Basil, Hufman of Spires; and against Wiceline Arch-bishop of Mayence, Sigefroy Bishop of Ausburg, Norbert of Coire and their Accomplices. This Decree is Sign'd by Herman, by Cardinal Otho, by the Arch-bishops of Salzburgh and Magdeburgh, by twelve Bishops of Germany, who were most of them ordain'd Bishops in the room of those of King Henry's Party, who had been depos'd. For at that time there were several Churches which had two Bishops; the One of King Henry's placing, and the Other of the Pope's: And he of the two whose Party was most prevalent in the City, was in Possession.

Henry soon reveng'd himself on this Convention, for in May he held another more numerous Convention at Mayence, at which Assisted the Bishop of Porto, and two Priests of Rome, who took upon them the Character of the Legats of Clement III. the Arch-bishops of Mayence, of Treves, of Cologne and of Breme, twenty Bishops of Germany, and a great many other Bishops of France and Italy. Hildebrand, his Legat Otho, and his Adherents were there Condemn'd, together with the fourteen Prelates of the Assembly of Quintilineburgh, whom they depos'd, as being Guilty of Perjury, Rebellion and Homicide. They excommunicated Herman, Eckbert of Saxony, and the Lord Welfo; prohibited all Christians from holding any Correspondence with them, and plac'd other Bishops in the room of those who were of Herman's Party.

Whilst these things pass'd in Germany, Gregory VII. not finding himself secure enough in Rome, because the Romans look'd upon him as the cause of that Desolation which they endure'd; went to Mount Cassin, and from thence retir'd to Salerno, where he dy'd May 24th, of the Year, 1085. Authors do not agree about what were the last Thoughts he had concerning his Difference with Henry. Some say that he testified a great deal of regret for what he had done; and others on the contrary tell us, That he continued fix'd in the same Mind to his very Last; and that he said, that he dyed in Exile, because he had lov'd Justice and hated Iniquity. However, the Case stood, 'tis plain that his Death did not put an end to that notorious Quarrel which he had rais'd, and which had drawn along with it such dreadful Consequences.

Gregory VII.

The Difference between

quences, as were the cause of a world of Mischiefs, both to the Church and to the Empire, as we shall shew in the sequel; after we have done with that which relates to Gregory VII.

The Emperor was not the only Person with whom Gregory VII. was Engag'd: He had likewise Contest with the Kings of France and England, and his aim was to bring all the Crown'd Heads under his subjection, and to oblige them to hold their Kingdoms as Fiefs from the Holy See, and to govern them at his Discretion.

Philip I. was then King of France: And since the Death of Baldwin, who had been Regent of the Kingdom during his Minority, he took the Government into his own Hands; but he Administr'd it so remissly, that France was full of Disorders and Disturbances. The Churches, which have always greater Sufferings than other Societies, when Justice is not maintain'd in a State, were the first who were oppress'd. Gregory VII. who never slip'd an opportunity of making himself the Judge and Reformer of Princes, cast several reproaches upon him for it, and threatned to punish severely his unjust proceedings against the Churches. The King assur'd him by Alberic, that he would reform his Conduct, and govern the Churches according to such Rules as his Holiness should prescribe him. Gregory who was not satisfied with empty Words, required that he would begin to demonstrate the reality of his Promises, by permitting that the Arch-deacon of Autun, elected Bishop of Mafcon, after a long vacancy, by the Clergy and People, and even by the consent of the King, should be put into the Possession of that Church, without giving any Thing for it. To this purpose he wrote to the Bishop of Chalons upon the Seyne, and to the Arch-bishop of Lions: And at the same time acquaints them, that in case the King should refuse to do what he desir'd, and would not permit the Churches of France to be supply'd with Bishops without Simony, he should be oblig'd to excommunicate all the French Nation, if they continu'd in their Allegiance to Philip. He likewise enjoyns the Arch-bishop of Lions to ordain that Arch-deacon Bishop of Mafcon, what opposition soever he might meet with, either from the King, or the other Competitor. These two Letters are dated December 4th, 1073. and are the Thirty fifth and the Thirty sixth of the first Book. The Bishops of France would not venture to ordain the Bishop of Mafcon, whereupon the Pope ordain'd him himself, as he sent word to the Arch bishop of Lions, by the Seventy sixth Letter of the same Book, dated August the 4th, 1074. Two days before, he had written expressly to King Philip, to oblige him to make reparation for the wrong he had done to the Church of Beauvais: And had absolv'd those of that City, who had abus'd their Bishop. See the Seventy fourth and the Seventy fifth Letters of the same Book.

That same year Gregory VII. renew'd his Complaints and his Threatnings against Philip, with a great deal more Noise, by writing a large Letter to all the Bishops of France, wherein after he had given a description of the Disorders of that Kingdom, he says that the King, whom he ventures to call Tyrant, is the Author and Cause of all; because his whole Life being one continu'd Debauch, he took no care to punish the Crimes, whereof he himself gave so bad an Example. That he not only converted the Revenues of Churches to Profane and Criminal uses, but within a little while ago exacted a very considerable sum of Merchants, who were come from all parts to import their Effects into France, under the publick Faith. He likewise accuses the Bishops of contributing to these disorders, either by their Approbation or Connivance: He upbraids them for their Remissness, and exhorts them to meet, and to tell the King plainly of his Faults, that he may correct them, and regulate the Affairs of his Kingdom; and in his Name to declare, that if he does not do it, he can no longer shelter himself from the Censure of the Holy See: That afterwards they should separate themselves from Communion with that Prince, and forbear performing Divine Service in all France: That if he does still hold out notwithstanding this Punishment, he would have the whole World take notice, that he would use his utmost endeavours to deprive him of the Kingdom of France. This Letter dated September the 10th, 1074. is the Fifth of the second Book.

Some time after he wrote likewise to William Duke of Aquitain, against King Philip, and pray'd that Duke to do all he could to bring the King to change his Conduct; declaring that if he did not reform, he would excommunicate him and all the Subjects who paid him any Obedience; and that he would lay this Excommunication on S. Peter's Altar, in order to reiterate it every day. This Letter dated November the 13th, of the same year, is the Eighteenth of the second Book.

He continu'd these menaces in the Two and thirtieth Letter of that Book, dated December the 8th, directed to Manasses Arch-bishop of Rheims.

However, it does not appear that Gregory has acted any thing more against the Person of the King of France, but he took upon him the sole Jurisdiction over the Bishops and the Ecclesiastical Affairs of that Kingdom; and sent thither Hugh Bishop of Dia with other Legats, who took cognizance of the Life, Manners and Elections of the Bishops; took upon them the liberty of citing them to the Synods, which they call'd; of passing Sentence upon them; of injoining them Penance; and even of deposing them, in case they would not make their Appearance: And lastly, Of disposing absolutely the Affairs of that Kingdom, without minding whether the King concern'd himself self with the defending of them, or with vindicating the Liberty of the Churches of France. Gregory VII. So that these Bishops were oblig'd to go to Rome to beg the Pope's Favour for their re-establishment, and upon such Terms as he saw fit; which Gregory did not scruple to grant them. There are a great many Instances of this Nature; and the Seventeenth Letter of the fifth Book furnishes us with a great many. For Hugh Bishop of Dia having cited to a Synod, which he held at Autun, the Arch-bishops of Rheims, Besançon, Sens, Bourges and Tours, and having inflicted several Penalties upon them, because they had not made their appearance; they were forc'd to wait upon the Pope, who absolutely re-establish'd the Arch-bishop of Rheims and the rest, upon condition that they would clear themselves before his Legat. This is what he orders by the foremention'd Letter, dated March the 9th, in the Year, 1078. That Legat having excommunicated the Bishops of Paris and Chavres, they went likewise to Rome, and obtain'd a favourable Sentence from the Pope. See the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Letters of the ninth Book.

But Gregory was not satisfied with taking Cognizance of the Ecclesiastical Affairs of France; he likewise endeavour'd to make them his Tributaries, as he had made England and all other Countries. 'Tis upon this Account that he wrote to the Bishop of Albania, and the Prince of Salerno, his Legats in France, that they acquaint all the French, and enjoyri them in his Name, that each House pay at least a Penny every Year to S. Peter, as an acknowledgment of his being their Father and Pastor. He pretends that Charlemagne rais'd every Year upon his Subjects a Tax of Twelve hundred Livres for the use of the Church of Rome, and that he had offer'd Saxony to the Holy See. These are two such Matters of Fact as are only groundd on the imagination of Gregory VII. This is the Three and twentieth Letter of the eighth Book.

This is what relates to the Kingdom of France; we now proceed to what concerns England, which met with a little better Treatment from Gregory; because King William took care to ingratiate himself with him by a seeming Submission and Respect. That Prince, to give him some signs thereof, took care to send him a complimentary Letter on his Advancement to the Popedom, wherein he declares to him, That tho' he was very sorry for the Death of Alexander II. yet he was as glad to see him in his Place. Gregory answers him by the Seventieth Letter of the first Book, dated April the 4th, 1074. wherein he tells him, That he is oblig'd to him for the Affection which he express'd towards him; and exhorts him to demonstrate the Submission which he bore to the Holy See by its Effects. At the same time he acquainted him of the dangers to which the Church of Rome was expos'd. He confirm'd the Privilege of the Monastery of S. Stephen, and recommended to that Prince to take care of the Revenues which the Church of Rome possess'd in England. He wrote likewise to Matilda Queen of England the Seventy first Letter, by which he exhorts her to persevere in Virtue, and to give her Husband good Counsel.

By another Letter written to the Bishops and Abbots of England, dated August the 28th, in the same year, he exhorts them to come to Rome to his Synod, and to put in Execution the Ecclesiastical Laws concerning the Marriages of Kindred. This Letter is the First of the second Book.

The King of England would not suffer the Bishops of his Kingdom to go to Rome. This very much displeas'd the Pope, who complain'd of it by the First Letter of the seventh Book, directed to Hubert his Legat, who was sent into that Kingdom to Collect the Peter-Pence. He therein presses that Legat to return with all speed, and orders him to admonish the King of England to pay, and cause to be paid the Deference which is due to the Holy See; withal threatening him, if he did not do it, he should incur his Displeasure. He orders him to prevail upon the Prelates of England and Normandy to send to Rome, to the approaching Synod, at least two Bishops out of each Arch-bishoprick. This Letter bears date September the 23d, 1079.

The Three and twentieth, and the Four and twentieth Letters of the same Book, dated April the 25th, and May the 8th, in the Year 1080. are full of Exhortations to the King of England, to bear a due Submission to the Church of Rome, and to Govern his Kingdom with Justice, and in the fear of the Lord. The Six and twentieth is a Letter of Compliment to the Queen of England; and the Seven and twentieth a Letter to Robert, the Son of the King of England, whereby he exhorts him to be subject to his Father, and to follow his Advice.

In the Fifth Letter of the ninth Book, he order'd Hugh Bishop of Dia to restore the Bishops of Normandy, which he had depos'd, for not appearing at his Synod. This he did that he might not exasperate King William, who paid greater Deference to the Holy See, than any other Prince. And he order'd him to behave himself more tenderly towards that Prince's Subjects, and to grant Absolution to the Soldiers which had kept back some Tithes.

Part of Spain being (as we said before) in the Hands of the Moors, Gregory VII. from thence took an occasion of becoming Lord of those Countries, which could be taken from these Infidels. To this purpose he pretended that the Kingdom of Spain formerly belong'd to the Holy See; and that tho' the Pagans had since seiz'd upon it, yet the Right of the Holy See was not thereby difannul'd; because no Prescription can take place to the prejudice of the Church.

The Pre-sensions of Gregory VII. upon Spain.

Gregory VII.

'Tis upon the account of this pretension, that he granted to Abold Count of Rocy all the Country which he could recover from the Barbarians, upon condition that he would hold it in Fee from the Holy See, and pay him a certain Duty. He likewise granted the same Donation to those who would assist that Count, or undertake the same Thing upon the same Conditions. And that this Agreement might be put in execution, he gave Orders to Cardinal Hugh the White to go into Spain, and wrote to the Princes of Spain to aid the Count of Rocy. This is the Subject Matter of the Sixth and Seventh Letters of the first Book, dated April the 30th, 1073.

Gregory VII. had not only a design of bringing the Provinces of Spain, which were newly Conquer'd, under his Subjection, but likewise sought to establish an absolute Dominion over the ancient Churches of that Kingdom. It was upon this account that he wrote the Sixty third and fourth Letters of the first Book to Sancho King of Arragon, and to Alphonso King of Castile, recommending to them the Submission which they ought to bear to the Holy See, and to order the Roman Office to be receiv'd in their Kingdoms. These two Letters are dated March the 19th and 20th, 1074. He wrote upon the same Subject to Simcon a Bishop of that Kingdom, by the Eighteenth Letter of the third Book.

In the Eight and twentieth of the fourth Book, directed to the Kings and Princes of Spain, he renews the Pretensions which the Holy See made to that Country, as being a Kingdom which belong'd to it before the Sarazens were Masters thereof; and exhorts them to pay the Tribute which he pretended was due from them to the Church of Rome. This Letter is dated June the 28th, 1077.

The Sixth Letter of the seventh Book, dated in October 1079, is directed to Alphonso King of Castile, whom he compliments for his good Intentions towards the Holy See, sending him a small Golden Key with S. Peter's Chain affix'd to it, by a Legat whom he recommended to him.

Some time after that Prince, harkening to the Advice of a Monk nam'd Robert, would no longer be so subject to the Pope as he had been, and openly took upon him to grant the Investitures of the Benefices in his Kingdom. This provok'd Gregory very much: He excommunicated Robert, and order'd him to be confin'd in the Monastery of Cluny. He wrote to Alphonso, willing him, To harken no longer to his Counsels; to make reparation for the ill he had done; to part from the Relation of his Wife, whom he had Marry'd, and to do what Richard his Legat should advise him. See the Second, Third, and Fourth Letters of the eighth Book, which are dated in the Year, 1080.

That Prince very probably submitted to the Counsels of Gregory: For by the Second Letter of the ninth Book, the Pope wrote to him, as to a Prince entirely devoted to the Holy See; who had introduc'd the Service of the Church of Rome into his Dominions; who refer'd the choice of the Arch-bishops of his Kingdom to the Pope; and who ask'd his advice upon some Cases of Conscience, and upon what concern'd the Churches of Spain. Gregory by this Letter admonishes him, not to tolerate the Jews to have Christian Slaves, and grants Absolution to him and his Adherents of all their Sins, and wishes them an absolute Victory over all their Enemies.

The Pretensions of Gregory to the Kingdoms newly converted.

The Pretensions of Gregory to Hungary.

Spain was not the only Kingdom of Europe which Gregory VII. pretended did formerly belong to the Holy See; he maintain'd the same Pretension with respect to most of the other Countries of Europe; and was of Opinion, that those who were in Possession of them, ought to hold them as Fiefs from him. He more especially carry'd this Pretension to the most remote Countries whose Kings were newly converted to the Christian Religion. This he grounded upon the account that these Princes, at the time of their Conversion, had either remitted their Crowns into the hands of the Pope to receive them again from him, or thrown their Kingdoms under the protection of the Holy See. Or Lastly, Permitted the Raising of a certain Contribution for the Church of Rome. He establish'd upon these demonstrations of Submission, and upon these Alms or Liberalities, a certain Tribute to be paid to the Holy See. 'Tis upon this Principle that he took it ill that Solomon King of Hungary had receiv'd that Kingdom from the hands of King Henry: Because (as he pretended) Stephen formerly after his Conversion had offer'd and given it to the Holy See; and the Emperor Henry after he had Conquer'd it, had sent to Rome its Lance and its Crown: From whence he concludes that he ought to receive the Scepter from his hands, and threatens him, if he did it not, he would make use of the Apostolick Authority against him. This is the Subject of the Thirteenth Letter of the second Book, directed to that Prince, dated October the 28th, 1074. Gregory wrote likewise a consolatory Letter to Queen Judith his Wife, who was the Daughter of the Emperor Henry; it is the Four and fortieth of the second Book, dated June the 10th, 1075.

Solomon had a Kinsman nam'd Geisa, who was at War with him. This Geisa sent Ambassadors to Gregory, to gain him on his side. The Pope by his Letters express'd kindness to him, and exhorts him to be entirely devoted to the Holy See; assuring him that his Kinsman [Solomon] had not fallen into the Misfortunes he labour'd under, if he had receiv'd the Crown from the Holy See, and not from the Hands of the King of Germany. He advises him to make Peace with Solomon; w^hal giving him some hopes that he would enter into his Interests, so soon as he was assur'd what overtures he would make to the Holy See. You may consult the Fifty eighth Letter of the first Book, and the Sixty third and Seventieth of the second. Gregory VII.

In the Five and twentieth of the fourth Book, he exhorts the Arch-bishop of Serigonia to bring it about, that he who is Elected King of Hungary, should be made sensible of the Duty he ow'd to the Holy See. It bears date June the 9th, in the Year, 1077.

In the Nine and twentieth of the sixth Book, he extols the Piety of King Ladislav, and his Submission to the Holy See. He recommends to him several Persons who were unjustly Banish'd, and exhorts him to take the Churches into his Protection; and to send him forthwith Embassadors, if he had not already done it.

All the Kings of Europe receiv'd either Reprimands or Admonitions from Gregory. The King of Denmark had neglected to write to him in the beginning of his Pontificate; he checks him for it in the Fiftieth Letter of the second Book, and gives him some Instructions about the Government of his Kingdom. He tells him likewise, that he had sent him Legats upon the Affairs about which he had written to the Holy See, in the time of Pope Alexander. But that they could not get to him, because of the Wars of Germany. That therefore if he were deeply concern'd for any one of these Affairs, he ought to send Deputies to him with full Instructions, that so he might consult with them what ought to be done in the Case. Lastly, He prays him to send word what Assistance the Holy See could expect from him, against her Enemies; and acquaints him that there is a Province not far from Rome, held by Heretics, which one of his Sons, if he would come into Italy with a small Force, might easily Conquer. This Letter bears date January the 27th, in the Year, 1075. In the Seventy seventh Letter of the same Book, he offers to grant that King, all that in Justice he could, of the things which he should desire of him by his Envoys, or by the Legats which were dispatch'd to his Kingdom. This Letter is dated April the 17th, in the same Year. That King being dead, and his Son succeeding him, Gregory VII. continues his exhortations to him, to be submissive to the Holy See, by the Tenth Letter of the fifth Book, dated November the 6th, in the Year, 1077. He likewise gave the like exhortation to King Canute, who was in Possession of that Kingdom, by the Fifth Letter of the seventh Book, dated October the 15th, 1079. and by the One and twentieth of the same Book, dated May the 19th, 1080. The Let- ters of Gregory VII. sent to the Kings of Denmark.

The Sovereigns of Poland and Russia felt likewise the Effects of the desire which Gregory VII. had to have an hand in the Affairs of all Kingdoms. He recommended to them, as well as to others, the being devoted to the Holy See, and wedded to its Interests; gave them Instructions about the methods of administering the Government; sent them Legats to regulate the Ecclesiastical Affairs of their Countries: Enjoyns Boleslaus Duke of Poland, to restore to Demetrius King of Russia, the Money which he had taken from him; and to the Holy See, the Lands which belong'd to it; and undertook to bestow the Kingdom of Russia, on the Son of Demetrius. This is what we gather from the Seventy third and fourth Letters of the second Book, the First of which, directed to Boleslaus, is dated April the 15th, in the Year, 1075. and the Second, directed to Demetrius, bears date the 17th of the same Month. Gregory VII. sent to Poland and Russia.

Gregory VII. was no less careful even of Norway; for he wrote to Olaus the King of that Country, exhorting him to get himself fully instructed in the Christian Faith, and for that end to send some of his Nation to Rome, that he might send him back necessary Instructions, how he ought to demean himself towards the Holy See. He forbids him siding with either of the two Brothers, who pretended to the Crown of Denmark, and orders him to procure a Peace to be made between them. This Letter, which is the Thirteenth of the sixth Book, is dated December the 15th, 1079. Gregory VII. sent to Norway and Dalmatia.

He gave a King to Dalmatia; and a Lord of that Country intending to rise up in Arms against him, he enjoyns that Lord to acknowledge and obey him, under pain of Excommunication, by the Fourth Letter of the seventh Book, dated October the 4th, in the Year, 1079.

Uratisslaus Duke of Bohemia, was entirely in Pope Gregory the Seventh's Interest. He had admitted into his Dominions the Pope's Legats, in spite of Jaromir Bishop of Prague, as appears by the Seventeenth Letter of the first Book. In a grateful acknowledgment of this, the Pope confirm'd to him, by the Eight and thirtieth Letter of the same Book, dated December the 16th, 1073. all the Privileges which had been granted him by Alexander II. his Predecessor, and exhorts him to persevere in his Obedience; assuring him that he himself will determine such Causes, as his Legats could not pass a definitive Judgment upon. The Let- ters of Gregory concerning Bohemia.

The Bishop of Prague, who had been interdicted and divested of the Revenues of his Church by the Sentence of the Pope's Legats, having sent word to Rome that he could not come thither, because he had not wherewithal to defray the charge of his Journey; the Pope gave Orders that he should be put into Possession of his Revenues, except those to which John Bishop of Moravia laid claim: And he desires the Duke of Bohemia, by the Five and fortieth Letter of the first Book dated January the 30th in the Year, 1074. to cause them to be restor'd to that Bishop, and to send hith to Rome, with the Bishop of Moravia and some Embassadors, that with them he might regulate all the Ecclesiastical Affairs of his Dominions. By another Letter of the same date, which is the Four and fortieth of the Book, he acquaints the Bishop of Prague, that he had written to the Duke to put him in same Possession of the Revenues of his Church.

Sigefroy Arch-bishop of Maience, at the Instance of Jeromir Bishop of Prague, who was afraid of the Popes Judgment, was minded to take cognizance of the difference between him and the Bishop of Moravia. Gregory being advertis'd thereof, wrote forthwith to Sigefroy, that he should not dare to concern himself in an Affair, which was referr'd to the Holy See, and at the same time he sent word to Uratisslaus, that he should not be concern'd at the rash proceedings of that Arch-bishop. These two Letters dated March the 18th 1074. are the Sixtieth and Sixty first of the first Book.

At last the Bishop of Prague perceiving that he could no longer shift off the Pope's Sentence, went express to Rome, and when he appear'd before Gregory, he acknowledg'd part of what was laid to his Charge, declaring that he was ready to make Satisfaction; and justified himself with respect to other Things, particularly as to the ill usage which was said that he offer'd to the Bishop of Moravia, or his People. The Pope who requir'd nothing more than such a Submission, sent him back to his own Country reconcil'd and re-established, with a Recommendatory Letter to the Duke of Bohemia, which is the Seventy eighth of the first Book, dated April the 16th 1074. wherein he takes notice to him that he could not put an end to the Difference between that Bishop and the Bishop of Moravia, because of the absence of the latter; but that he would decide it in the first Council: That in the mean time he allow'd Provision to be made in behalf of the Bishop of Moravia for the Territory that was in Dispute. He advises the Duke to silence the Complaints of the Bishop of Prague concerning the Right which he pretended to have to a certain Castle; if not, he orders him to send his Deputies to the first Synod, to examine whether he has any Right to it, or no.

The Bishop of Prague being return'd to his own Country in Triumph for his Re-establishment, seiz'd upon the Lands which were in dispute between him and the Bishop of Moravia, being confident that the Pope had adjudg'd them to be his. Gregory being inform'd that he thus abus'd the Levy he had shewn him, wrote him a Letter full of Invectives about it, and enjoyns him to restore to the Bishop of Moravia the Castle which he had seiz'd on; and orders Duke Uratisslaus to cause him to restore it to the Bishop, whom he comforts in a particular Letter. These three Letters are the Sixth, Seventh, and Eighth of the second Book, dated October the 22d in the Year, 1074. In the second Letter he thanks the Duke of Bohemia for having sent him the Tribute which he paid to the Holy See. This Affair between the Bishops of Prague and Moravia was again discuss'd in the Year, 1075. and ended at Rome by an agreement between them, by which they agreed to divide into equal shares the Lands which were in dispute, till either of them could produce more authentick Titles; which they continu'd to do for the space of Ten Years. And this Accomodation was approv'd of by a Bull of Gregory, dated March the 2d which is the Fifty third Letter of the second Book.

The Seventy first Letter of the second Book, is written to Uratisslaus, in favour of his Nephew Frederick, for whom the Pope demands of that Prince the Lands which his Father had left him. At the same time he exhorts him to live peaceably with his Subjects. This Letter is dated April the 14th 1075. By the next Letter written the Day after, he exhorts all the Faithful of Bohemia to lead a Christian and Innocent Life.

The Pretensions of Gregory
to Italy.

Since Gregory VII. had pretensions to Kingdoms so remote as those we have been speaking of, it is not to be wondred that he should imagine that all Italy, and the Islands of Sicily, Sardinia and Corfu belong'd to him; that he might dispose of them as he thought fit; and that all the Lords of these Countries were oblig'd to take an Oath of Allegiance to him. It was no difficult matter for him to bring the petty Princes round about Rome under his Subjection; because being weak, they desir'd nothing more, than the support of the Holy See: But he had much ado to bring his design about upon the Normans, whose Power became formidable in Italy, forasmuch as they were establish'd so firmly there as we shall now relate.

The Conquests of the Normans in Italy.

Several Norman Lords having been invited to the Relief of the Greeks and Italians against the Sarazens of Sicily, upon Condition that they should have share in their Conquests; after they had done wonderful things against these Infidels, were dealt falsely with by the Greeks, who refus'd to give them what they had promis'd. But these Bravoes knew very well how to do themselves Justice, and seiz'd on Pozzuolo under the Conduct of William Firebrass their General, who in a short time after defeated the Greeks in a great Engagement, and weaken'd them so far, that in a small time they lost all that they had left in Italy. The Normans afterwards turn'd their Arms against the Lords of Italy their Neighbours, and seiz'd upon some Lands which belong'd to the Holy See. The Popes, who could not without Jealousy behold so formidable an Enemy so nigh at Hand, declar'd against them, and Leo IX. engag'd in a War with them: But the Forces of that Pope having been defeated, and himself taken Prisoner, as we formerly said, that Respect which they shew'd him, by Gregory VII. setting him at Liberty, and reconducting him to Rome with all the Demonstrations of Honour and Submission, inclin'd that Pope to grant them by way of Recompence all the Lands which they had Conquer'd from the Greeks and Sarazens. Robert Guiscard, in league with Onfroy, Brother to William Firebrass, extended these Conquests, and having made an end of taking Calabria, caus'd himself to be call'd Count thereof for the space of two Years, and afterwards took upon him the Title of Duke. His Brother Roger undertook to Conquer Sicily from the Sarazens, and having at first taken Panorma and Messina, he open'd himself a way to become Master of the whole Island, of which he took upon him the Quality of Count.

It was very difficult for these Warriors to forbear Contesting with the Lords their Neigh- The Differences and Agreement of Gregory VII. with the Normans. bours; and their Forces who were used to Plunder, could not forbear seizing upon the Lands, Cattles, and Territories of private Persons; upon Churches, upon Abbies; and even upon the Holy See it self. This was the cause of the many Anathemas thunder'd out against them by Gregory, who from the very beginning of his Popedom excommunicated Robert, Roger, and all the Normans who made any attempts upon the Revenues of Churches, or of the Holy See, or upon those Lords who were under its Protection. But afterwards foreseeing that he might stand in need of their Assistance, he grew milder, and by his Letter dated March the 13th 1076. which is the Eleventh of the third Book, he grants the Bishop of Cirenza Power to absolve Roger and all his Soldiers, upon condition that he would promise to Obey the Holy See; do Penance for his Offences, and abstain for the future from all capital Crimes. At the same time he advis'd that Bishop, that if Count Roger should speak to him about his Brother Duke Robert, he should declare to him, that the Church of Rome was ready to shew Mercy to those who being affected with true Repentance, would give Satisfaction for the Scandal, which they had given: That therefore if Duke Robert would be obedient to the Holy See, he was ready to give him Absolution, and to receive him into the Communion of the Church: But that if he would not, Roger ought not to communicate with him. Lastly, he order'd that Bishop to give the Bishop of Melfa Absolution. In the fifteenth Letter of the same Book to Wifroy, Lord of the Milanois, he sends word that the Affairs of the Normans were in a hopeful way of Accommodation, and that he hoped shortly to render them faithful to the Church of Rome. However this Accommodation was not so soon concluded; and we see by a Letter dated October the 31st of the same Year, directed to the same Wifroy and to two other Lords of the same Country, that the Normans were still contesting with the Pope about the Revenues of the Church, which they had seiz'd upon; but that he hop'd to reclaim them as soon as Henry. This Letter is the Seventh of the fourth Book.

At last Robert thought fit to submit to the Pope, to take an Oath to him to be always faithful to the Holy See; to assist it in the Defence of the Pope's Person and its Revenues; to pay him an annual Rent for the Church Lands which he held; to permit the Churches of his Dominions to enjoy quietly their Revenues, and to procure a free Election of a Pope, in case Gregory should dy before him. This Rent amounts to twelve Pence, the Coyn of Pavia, payable every Year at Easter. In pursuance of this Treaty, the Pope invested Duke Robert with all the Lands which the Popes Nicholas II. and Alexander II. his Predecessors had formerly granted him: And as to others which he unjustly held; to wit, Salerno, Melfa, and part of the March of Fermo, he left them to him by way of Connivance. This Treaty was made June the 29th in the Year 1080.

In the same Year Michael Ducas being turn'd out of the Empire of the East, sent into Italy to beg Assistance of the Pope and Duke Robert. The Pope wrote to the Bishops of Pozzuolo and Calabria, by the sixth Letter of the eighth Book, desiring them to exhort the Faithful to engage in this Expedition with Duke Robert; and before they went away, to enjoin them Penance for their Faults, and to give them Absolution.

Gregory soon after had himself need of the Assistance of Robert, to protect him against Henry. Whereupon he wrote to the Abbot of Mount Cassin, to know of him whether he could bring him any Assistance about Easter, or send him some. This is the Subject matter of the fourth Letter of the ninth Book, which doubtless belongs to the Year, 1081.

Henry at his coming into Italy, wisely foreseeing that the greatest Enemy he had to fear was Duke Robert, propos'd to come to an Accomodation with him, upon condition that his Son should Marry that Duke's Daughter, and give him the March of Ancona. The Pope being inform'd of this Proposal, by the Princess Matilda, was very much surpriz'd at it, and forthwith wrote to Didier Abbot of Mount Cassin, to prevail upon Robert to keep his Word to him. This is the Subject matter of the eleventh Letter of the ninth Book.

By the Seventeenth of the same Book, written to that Duke, he exhorts him to come to the Assistance of the Church of Rome, which was annoy'd by King Henry.

In the mean time whilst Robert was in the East with all his Forces, the Normans of Italy perceiving that Henry was like to become Master of Rome, and being afraid what the Consequence would prove to them, endeavour'd to bring about the Peace between the Pope and the the Emperor, and sent Didier Abbot of Mount Cassin, with the Prince of Capua, and several Deputies to Henry, to treat with him. But neither the Pope nor the Emperor were inclinable to it; and the latter receiv'd some Money from the Emperor of Constantinople to carry on the War against Robert. That Duke understanding this, and being sent for by the Pope, left his Son in the East, and immediately return'd to Italy to the Pope's Assistance, whom he relieved, as we formerly have declar'd.

Gregory VII.

The Pretensions of Gregory VII. to Sardinia and Corfu.

Gregory VII. was likewise willing to make the Islands of Corfu and Sardinia his Tributaries. For part of the former having been retaken by the Christians from the Sarazens, he immediately sent a Legat thither to govern absolutely, and promis'd them Succours to Conquer the rest; upon condition that this Island should be dependent on the Holy See. This appears by the Second and fourth Letters of the fifth Book, dated September the 1st and 16th in the Year, 1077. He afterwards bestow'd this Legation on Landulphus Bishop of Pisa, and his Successors, with one Moyety of the Revenues of that Island, reserving the other Moyety for the Holy See, together with all the Fortresses, whose Governors however he was willing should still be dependent on that Legat, as appears by the twelfth Letter of the sixth Book, dated November the 30th in the Year, 1079.

With respect to Sardinia, he was so strongly perswaded that it belong'd to the Holy See, that writing to the Sovereign of that Island, he shew'd that Prince what a piece of service He [the Pope] had done in having refus'd to give it to the Normans and Lombards, who had demanded it of him, tho' they offer'd him the Moyety of their Conquests; till such time as he should see after what manner that Prince would receive the Pope's Legat, and how he was inclin'd to the Holy See. By this means he suppos'd, that if that Prince would not be subject to the Holy See, he was so far the Disposer of his Estates, as to give them to whom he pleas'd. This is the subject of the tenth Letter of the eighth Book, dated October the 5th 1080.

The Oath of Fidelity exacted by Gregory VII. from the Princes of Italy.

After all this 'tis no wonder that he should treat all the Lords near Rome, as his Vassals, and exact from them Oaths of Fidelity. We have one made by Landulphus, Duke of Benevento, by which he engages himself to forfeit his Duchy, if he fail'd in his Duty to the Holy See, or to Gregory and his Successors, and if he did any wrong to the Church of Rome or its Members. This Treaty sign'd by the Bishops of Porto, Frescati, Palestrina, by Didier and Peter, Cardinals of the Church of Rome, is in the first Book of Gregory's Letters, after the Eighteenth, and is dated August the 11th in the Year, 1073.

He also exacted the like Oath from Richard Duke of Capua, by which that Prince was engag'd to enter into no League against the Pope; upon all occasions to defend the Revenues and Rights of the Church of Rome and of his Holiness; to make no Pillage on its Territories, and to suffer no body else to do it; to pay yearly the Rent which he ow'd for the Lands which he held in S. Peter's Patrimony; to be faithful to King Henry, and his Successors; yet without prejudice to the Fidelity he owes to the Holy See: And lastly, that whenever the Pope should die, he should do his utmost to get him to be elected and ordain'd Pope, who should have the Suffrages of the major part of the Cardinals, Clergy, and Laity. This Oath dated September the 24th 1073. is after the One and twentieth Letter of the first Book.

There is another Oath of this Nature taken by Bertran Count of Provence, after the twelfth Letter of the ninth Book.

The Project of the CROISADE set on foot by Gregory VII.

Lastly, Gregory VII. not willing to omit any one means of aggrandizing the Church of Rome, had resolv'd upon a CROISADE, to go into the East at the head of an Army, to assist the Christians, and to fall upon the Infidels. Big with this Design he wrote to William Count of Burgundy, by the Six and fortieth Letter of the first Book, dated February the 2d in the Year, 1074. ordering him to be ready, and to give notice to his Allies, to furnish him with Forces, that so he might, after he had reduc'd the Normans of Pozzuolo to their Duty, march directly with an Army to Constantinople, and relieve the Christians of the East.

By the Nine and fortieth Letter of the same Book, dated March ensuing, he exhorts all the Christians of the West to unite together for the relief of the Christians of the East against the Infidels. He did the same thing by the Seven and thirtieth Letter of the second Book, which bears date the 16th of December of the same Year:

This Project of Gregory had not that success which he desir'd: But he engag'd Duke Robert to lead an Army into the East, under Colour of placing Michael Ducas again upon the Throne of the Eastern Empire. This Duke gave Battle to the Emperor Alexis in Thrace, and became Master of the Field, tho' the Enemy were much superior in Number. The Difficulties which the Pope's Affairs labour'd under, and the War with the Emperor Henry prevented that Duke from pursuing his Conquests in the East, and from extending the Limits of the Roman Church, and the Authority of the Holy See by his Victories: The which Gregory had attempted in vain, by the way of Accommodation, in sending to the Emperor Michael (who had writ to him, and made proposals on his part for the re-union of the two Churches) Dominick Patriarch of Venice, to treat with him viva voce concerning this Peace; and in remonstrating to that Emperor, by his Answer, that the Division which had been between the Roman and the Greek Church; had done great prejudice to the Affairs of the Holy Gregory See, and the Empire of the East. This Letter is the Eighteenth of the first Book, dated VII. June the 9th 1073.

Gregory VII. was no less Solicitous about the Churches of Africa; and having understood that the Christians of Carthage, tho' persecuted by the Sarazens, quarrell'd among themselves, and that some of them had betray'd Cyriacus their Arch-bishop into the Hands of those Infidels, who had very much abused him: He wrote a neat Letter to the Clergy and Faithful of that City, whereby he exhorts them to suffer patiently the Persecution of the Sarazens, and to live in Peace and Unity one with another; and after he had in a very lively manner represented to them the Enormity of the Offence committed in betraying Cyriacus, he exhorts them who were guilty of it, to do Penance. This Letter dated September the 15th 1073, is the Two and twentieth of the first Book.

The Letters of Gregory VII. sent into Africa.

In the next Letter of the same date, he comforts that good Bishop, extolls his Constancy, and exhorts him to rejoyce in his Sufferings, and to persevere in the Faith; assuring him that he would continually offer up his Prayers to God, that he would be pleas'd to look down with an Eye of Pity and Compassion upon the Church of Africa, which has so long groan'd under the pressures of Persecution and Distress.

Some time after the Church of Africa being reduc'd to the Government only of two Bishops, the Africans were oblig'd to send one Servandus to Rome, whom they had elected Bishop of Hippo, to be ordain'd by the Pope. Gregory ordain'd him, and sent him away with Recommendatory Letters directed to the Arch-bishop of Carthage, to the People of Hippo, and to Auxir King of Mauritania. These are the three last Letters of the third Book, and belong to the Year, 1076.

In the first Letter of the eighth Book directed to the Arch-bishop of Synnada Patriarch of the Armenians, dated June the 6th in the Year, 1080. Gregory reproves several Errors, or rather several Practices contrary to the Discipline of the Church, wherewith the Armenians were charg'd: Namely, That in their Churches they did not mix Water with the Wine in the Celebration of the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass; that they made the Holy Chrism with Butter, and not with Balsom; and that they had a regard to the memory of Dioscorus. The Deputy of the Arch-bishop of Synnada, who was come to cause an Armenian Heretick, who was fled to Italy, to be driven thence, had assur'd the Pope that all these Things were only groundless Surmises: But for his better Satisfaction Gregory desires that that Arch-bishop would inform him by Writing what were his Thoughts, and send him a profession of Faith. At the same time he advises him to leave out these Words in the TRISAGION, who wast crucified for us, because they were not us'd in any other Church of the East, no more than they were in the Church of the West, and because they might be perverted to an ill Sense. He commends the practice of their Churches in making use of Unleaven'd Bread, and Fortifies them against the Objections of the Greeks.

The Letters of Gregory VII. against the Errors charg'd upon the Armenians.

As to the Churches of the West, we may safely say that Pope Gregory VII. govern'd almost all of them, as if they belong'd to his own Diocess, either by sending to them his Legats a Latere; or by nominating Vicars to them; or by citing the Bishops to Rome, to give an account of their Conduct; or by confirming or approving their Elections; or by receiving the Appeals of their Decisions; or by admitting the Complaints of their Diocesans; or by appointing Judges upon the place; or by deciding several Points of Discipline: In a Word, by having an hand in the particulars of all that happen'd in the Churches of Europe.

In the first place as to Legats, 'tis certain that nothing conduc'd more to establishing the absolute Authority of the Popes, than the sending Legats a Latere to reside upon the spot. At first the Popes were satisfied with nominating the Bishops of the Country for their Vicars, or for their Legats, and granted them a Commission to call Councils, and to act in their Names: But for as much as these Prelates might have particular Interests to carry on, and were not entirely devoted to the Will and Pleasure of the Popes, the Court of Rome thought it more advisable to send upon the places Legats who were Strangers, with full Commission of calling Councils, of making Rules of Discipline, of judging Priests, and even Bishops themselves; of excommunicating those whom they thought fit, upon condition that they would return a faithful Account of all their Proceedings to the Pope; and provided that those who thought themselves injur'd by their Decisions, might come Personally to Rome, to complain to the Pope himself. By this means the Holy See judg'd the same Cause twice over, and kept all the World in Awe. For those who had been Condemn'd by the Legats, hoping to meet with kinder usage from the Pope, went to Rome in the nature of Suppliants and Penitents, and seldom fail'd of clearing themselves, or of receiving their Absolution; which on the one side, advanc'd the Authority of the Holy See, and on the other, made them its Creatures. This Custom of sending Legats a Latere into the Provinces, began to prevail in the foregoing Century, and became very common in this, especially in Italy, and France: However, it met at first with some opposition in Germany, where they maintain'd that no other Legat of the Holy See ought to be acknowledg'd beside the Arch-bishop of Mayence; but Gregory VII. play'd his part so well as to introduce it there. In the Church

Legats sent by Gregory VII. to several Parts.

Legats sent by Gregory VII. to several Parts. of France, the Arch-bishop of Rheims pretended, by virtue of his Privileges, to be exempt from the Jurisdiction of the Legats, at least of those who were not Romans, and were immediately come from Rome; and for this Reason would not appear before Hugh Bishop of Dia and the Abbot of Cluny, whom Gregory had nominated to be his Legats in France. But the Pope sent him word by the Second Letter of the sixth Book, dated August the 22d, 1078. that the Holy See had always a Liberty of sending Legats immediately from Rome, or of nominating those who liv'd upon the place, or of taking them whence it pleas'd. England maintain'd its Right much longer, and rejected Foreign Legats; for we read in the History of Eadmerus, that Pope Urban successor to Gregory VII. having sent in the Year, 1100. Guy Arch-bishop of Vienna as Legat of the Holy See to England, all the Kingdom was startled at this Legation, which was look'd upon as a dangerous Innovation, because it was too well known, that there could be no other Vicar of the Holy See in England, beside the Arch-bishop of Canterbury; that thereupon the Arch-bishop of Vienna return'd just as he came, without having been acknowledg'd by any one as Legat, and without doing any thing in that Quality.

Gregory VII. who himself had been Legat in France, had no mind to abrogate this Custom; on the contrary, the first thing he did after he was Elected Pope, was to continue the Legats sent by his Predecessors, and to send new ones into those parts, where there were none. By the Sixth Letter of the first Book, he confirms the Legation of Gerard Cardinal Bishop of Ostia, and of the Sub-deacon Rainbold Legats in France, orders them to do their utmost in making up the Breach between Hugh Abbot of Cluny and his Monks, and sends them Hugh the White a Cardinal, to go into Spain, if they thought fit.

In the Eighth Letter, he likewise continues the Legation of Hubert and Albert, and exhorts them to execute the Commission which his Predecessor Alexander had given them.

In the Sixteenth, he shews how he would have his Legats demean themselves towards him, by writing to Cardinal Gerard of Ostia, that he was very much surpriz'd at his not sending him word by an Express, what had been done in the Synod which he had held in Spain, because it was customary, and withal necessary that when a Legat of the Holy See held a Council in a remote Country, he should come and give an account of what he had done, or at least send one to do it for him: That tho' that Cardinal had acquainted him with part of the Proceedings, yet since there was no Person, who either saw or heard, how things went in that Synod, to inform him about it, he was very much at a stand what answer to give those, who complain'd of having been excommunicated, depos'd or interdicted unjustly; for fear he should either be deceiv'd by the intricacy of the Causes, or should not fully exercise his Authority: That however, 'tis look'd upon as a piece of Cruelty and Contempt, to defer giving these kind of Answers, because of the dangers they are in, who are under Ecclesiastical Censures: That as to the business of William Arch-bishop of Auche, whose re-establishment he desir'd him to grant; he had himself rais'd perplexities in his mind, by taking notice to him that he had been depos'd only for having voluntarily communicated with an excommunicate Person; and that yet he had not clear'd himself Canonically, but only offer'd to do it before Pope Alexander: That after this Affair had been debated, at last they came to this Resolution, That if the Arch-bishop of Auche were guilty of nothing else, but of having communicated with an excommunicate Person, he ought not to be depos'd; but that if he were charg'd with any other Crimes of which he was not clear'd, the determination thereof ought to be referr'd to the Holy See: That Pontius Bishop of Beziers, who (as he sent word) had been depos'd for the same Offence, was come to Rome to make his complaint; but that he had declin'd giving him any answer out of Respect to him: That however, since the like Sentence ought to be pass'd on Cases that are alike, if he were guilty of no other fault, he ought to re-establish him. The Arch-bishop of Auche was re-establish'd, and the Pope wrote in his behalf to the Bishop of Beziers, and to the other Suffragans, that they should acknowledge him, and shew him the Respect which they ow'd him. This is the Five and fiftieth Letter of the first Book, dated March the 16th, 1074.

The Pope's Legats did not meet with the same Reception in all places. Those whom he sent into Bohemia, were not much regarded, particularly by the Bishop of Prague, whom they had Reprimanded and Condemned as one guilty of Simony. Gregory thereupon wrote to the Duke of Bohemia, and thank'd him for the Respect which he shew'd to his Legats; but withal told him, That he had great Reason to complain of their being slighted in his Country, because formerly Legats were not sent so frequently; which he says happend through the remissness of his Predecessors. In particular, he accuses the Bishop of Prague, and threatens to confirm the Interdiction pronounc'd against him by his Legats, if he did not obey them, by doing what they requir'd of him. This Letter is the Seventeenth of the first Book, dated July the 8th, in the Year, 1073.

In the Fortieth of the second Book, Gregory VII. charges all the Faithful to Respect his Legats: And in the One and fortieth, he sends them to be present at the Election of the Bishop of Eugubio.

He sent his Legats even to the most remote Countries; as for instance to Poland, as ap- Gregory appears by several other Letters.

fairs. The one was Bishop of Dia, and the other Abbot of Cluny. The former had been Elected Bishop of Dia by the Clergy and Laity of that City, with the Approbation of William their Count. After his Election, he had taken an Oath of Fidelity to that Count:
But not being forward to pay him the Sum of Money which was usually exacted for the Right of Investiture, he disoblig'd him so much, that he was no sooner gone to Rome to be Consecrated, but the Count seiz'd of the Revenues of his Church. The Pope having read over the Act of Hugh's Election, Consecrated him, but upon condition that he would not tolerate any Simony in his Diocess, nor Consecrate any Church that had its dependence on any Lay Patrons. This is what he acquaints that Count with, by the Sixty ninth Letter of of the first Book, wherein he upbraids him for having seiz'd on the Revenues of the Church of Dia. This Letter bears date March the 16th, 1074.

By the Three and fortieth Letter of the second Book, dated January the 5th, 1075. he orders that Bishop to accept of the Restitutions which those of his Church should make him, and to absolve them, upon condition that they would come and appear before the Synod of Rome.

Gregory VII. reposing a great deal of Confidence on this Bishop, made him his Legat or Vicar in France; and in that quality refer'd to him a great many Affairs: Among others, that which related to the Bishop of Cambray, who after he had been Elected, had receiv'd the Investiture thereof from King Henry. The Pope orders his Legat by the Two and twentieth Letter of the fourth Book, to examine this Affair in a Council, with Hugh Abbot of Cluny, and several Bishops of France: And that if he who was Elected to the Bishop-rick of Cambray, would swear, that when he receiv'd the Investiture from Henry, he did not know that he was excommunicated, or that the Pope had prohibited such Investitures, he should confirm his Election. By the same Letter he likewise committed to him, the taking cognizance of the Affairs which related to the Bishop of Chalons, the Churches of Chartres, Puy and Clermont, and that of the Monastery of S. Dennis. This Letter is dated May the 2d, in the Year, 1077.

This Legat in pursuance of his Commission, held several Councils in France in the Year, Councils 1077. Among the rest he held one at Clermont, wherein he depos'd the Bishop of that City, held in and the Bishop of Puy in Velay: Another at Dijon against the Simoniacal: A third at Autun, France, to which he cited most of the Arch-bishops of France, and condemn'd all those who by Hugh would not appear; to wit, Manasses Arch-bishop of Rheims, accus'd of Simony by his Bishop of Clergy; the Arch-bishop of Sens, because he would not acknowledge the Legat; the Arch- Dia, in bishop of Bordeaux, because he had not appear'd at the Council of Clermont, and because the Year, after he had been Suspended, he still continu'd to discharge his Functions; the Arch-bishop 1077.
of Bourges, for having relinquish'd his Church; the Arch-bishop of Tours, accus'd of being Vexatious and Simoniacal; the Arch-bishop of Lions, convicted of Simony, in whose place
Gebuin Arch-deacon of Langres, was elected and ordain'd; the Bishops of Senlis, Chartres, Auxerre, for having receiv'd the Investiture from the King; the Bishop of Noyon, who own'd himself Guilty of Simony; and the Bishop of Autun, for not assisting at the Council.

The next year Hugh Bishop of Dia, held another Council at Poitiers, spight of the Pro- The Counhibitions of the King of France, who perceiving how roughly his Bishops were handled, cil of had written to the Count of Poitiers and to the Bishops of his Kingdom, not to suffer the Poitiers, Pope's Legat to hold such Councils, which he Nicknames Conventicles. The Arch-bishop in the Year, of Tours and the Bishop of Rennes came to this Council, but it was to disturb it; for which 1078.
the Legat suspended both of them. However, they still spoke boldly against the Legat's Proceedings, and even offer'd some Violence to him. Afterwards they withdrew with the Suffragan Bishops of the Arch-bishoprick of Tours, and left him with a very small number of Prelates. The next day he held a Council in the Church of S. Hilary: The Arch-bishop of Tours persisted to inveigh hotly against the Legat, who suspended him; and appeal'd to the Holy See. The Legat refer'd him to the Pope. Afterwards he depos'd the Abbot of Bergues, as being Guilty of Simony. The Arch-bishop of Bezançon was suspended for not appearing at the Synod of Autun and Poitiers. The Judgment of the Bishops of Beauvais and Noyon, accus'd of Simony, was refer'd to the Pope. He who had intruded into the Church of Amiens was likewise refer'd to the Pope, together with the Bishops of Laon, Senlis and Soissons, who had ordain'd him. The Absolution of the Count of Angers, was likewise refer'd to the Holy See. Hugh of Dia in this Council, heard the Cause between the Bishops of Terrouane and Poitiers, and after he had discuss'd these Personal Causes, he made ten Canons upon the Discipline of the Church.

Gregory
VII
The Canons of the Council of Poitiers.

In the First, Ecclesiasticks are prohibited from receiving the Investiture or Collation of Benefices, from the King, or any Lay Patron. The Laicks who held any Churches in their Possession, were excommunicated, and these Churches interdicted.

In the Second, It is prohibited, to hold two Benefices in two different Churches.

The Third imports, That no Person shall pretend to hold Ecclesiastical Benefices, by right of Succession.

The Fourth imports, That Bishops shall take nothing for Ordinations, nor for Consecrating Churches.

The Fifth, That neither Abbots nor Monks shall administer the Sacrament of Penance, without the Commission of the Bishop first had.

The Sixth, That neither Abbots, Monks, nor Prebendaries shall purchase Churches, or get the Impropriation of them by any method whatsoever, unless it be with the consent of the Bishop, in whose Diocese these Churches are: That however, they shall still hold, and quietly possess the Benefices which they already have; but that the Priest who serves them, shall be answerable to the Bishop for the Charge of Souls, and for his Ministry.

The Seventh, That the Abbots, Deans, and Arch-priests who are not Priests, shall enter into Priest's Orders, or lose their Benefices: And that the Arch-deacons shall be Deacons, under the same Penalty.

The Eighth, That the Children of Priests, and Bastards, shall not be admitted into Holy Orders, unless they be Monks, or live in a regular Convent: But that they shall not hold any Ecclesiastical Preferments. That Slaves cannot be admitted into Orders, unless their Masters give them their Freedom.

The Ninth, That the Sub-deacons, Deacons, and Priests shall have no Concubines, or any other suspicious Women in their Houses; and that all those, who shall wittingly hear the Mass of a Priest who keeps a Concubine, or is Guilty of Simony, shall be excommunicated.

The Tenth, That Clerks who bear Arms, or are Usurers, shall be depos'd.

Most of the Prelates, who were Condemn'd by Hugh Bishop of Dia, had recourse to the Pope, who releas'd them from their Condemnnations, upon condition (as we said before) that they would clear themselves before his Legat. For this, you may consult the Letters of Hugh of Dia to Gregory VII. those of Manasses to the same; and the Letter of that Pope by which he re-establishes them, which is the Seventeenth of the fifth Book, dated March the 8th, 1078.

Of all these Prelates, Manasses was almost the only Person who persisted in his Resolution of not owning Hugh of Dia as Legat, who continued to prosecute him till he had pronounc'd a definitive Sentence against him, in the Council which he held at Lions in the Year, 1080. wherein he depos'd him; and his Judgment was confirm'd by Gregory VII. as appears by this Seventh Letter of the fifth Book.

The Councils of Avignon and Meaux in the Year,
1080.
The Council of Meaux, in the Year,
1082.

The same year this Legat held two other Councils: The one at Avignon, wherein Achard, who had intruded into the Church of Arles, was turn'd out, and Gibelin put into his place: And the other at Meaux, wherein he depos'd Ursion, Bishop of Soissons, and caus'd Annulphus, Monk of S. Medard, to be elected in his room.

In the Year, 1082. he held another Council at Meaux, wherein he ordain'd Robert Abbot of Rebais, Bishop of that City. But because this Ordination was done without the Approbation of Richerus Arch-bishop of Sens, the Bishops of the Province would not own him; and Richerus ordain'd another Bishop, after he had excommunicated Robert.

The Pope referr'd to Hugh of Dia, the Absolution of Robert Count of Flanders, excommunicated by the Bishop of Langres, with Commission to put other Persons in his place; this appears by the Seventh Letter of the sixth Book, dated November the 25th, 1079.

By the Sixteenth Letter of the seventh Book, dated March the 26th, 1080. he orders Hugh Bishop of Terrouane, whom Hugh of Dia had cited twice before him, to justify himself before that Legat.

Hugh of Dia as a Recompence of the good Services he had done to the Holy See, was translated from the Bishoprick of Dia, to the Arch-bishoprick of Lions, in the Year, 1083. and became so powerful, that after the Death of Gregory VII. he was one of those who pretended to the Popedom; and upon that Subject, had contests with Victor III. who had been prefer'd before him. That Pope excommunicated him: However, in the Popedom of Urban II. Hugh was re-taken again into Favour, and continued to exercise his Legation in France, as we shall shew in its proper place. He dy'd in the Year, 1106. in October, at Susa, in his Journey to the Council which Pope Paschal II. held about the end of that year at Guastilla, in the Dukedom of Mantua.

There are a great many other Affairs relating to France, Normandy, Flanders, England and Brittany, which Hugh and his Colleagues took Cognizance of, and pass'd Sentence upon either Definitively, after it had been referr'd to them by the Pope, or else Provisionally for any to have liberty of appealing to the Holy See. We shall have opportunity of speaking more largely of these things hereafter.

Gregory VII. to add the more Strength to his Authority, thought it expedient to make Gregory choice of one of the most eminent Sees of France, on which he might confer the perpetual Vicarship or Primacy of the Holy See. The Vicarship of the Popes in France, (by virtue of which those, to whom it was granted, pretended to a Jurisdiction above Metropolitans), the Popes and the Quality of Primates, had till then pass'd from Church to Church, according as they had been more or less favour'd by the Holy See. The Church of Arles is the first on whom this Privilege was conferr'd by Pope Zozimus, in consideration of the Merits of Patroclus, who was Arch-bishop of that place. Pope Symmachus confirm'd this Privilege in favour of Cesareus Arch-bishop of Arles, as to that part of Gaul, which was then under the Dominion of the Goths: But at the same time he made S. Remy, Arch-bishop of Rheims, his Vicar in the Kingdom under Clovis. However, afterward the Vicarship of the Arch-bishop of Arles spread it self in the Kingdom under Childebert, and even through all France, by the favour of the Popes Vigilius, Pelagius I. Gregory the Great, and John VIII. But Adrian I. restor'd this Honour to the Arch-bishop of Rheims; and the Popes Benedict III. and Nicholas I. confirm'd it. Pope Sergius granted it to the Bishop of Metz, in consideration of the Person of Dreux, the Emperor's Uncle. But the Bishops of France would not acknowledge him, and we do not find that his Successors have pretended thereto. Ansegisus Arch-bishop of Sens, obtain'd the same Privilege from John VIII. and his Successors retain'd the Quality of Primates of Gaul and Germany, tho' the Bishops of France would not acknowledge it in the Council of Pontyon, and ever since it has been disputed with them.

At last Gregory VII. made choice of the Church of Lions, as the Church of most note, to Honour with this Quality, and granted it the Primacy over four Provinces of France; namely, of Lions, Roan, Tours, and Sens, by the Four and thirtieth Letter of the sixth Book, directed to Gelwin Arch-bishop of Lions; and by the Five and thirtieth Letter of the same Book, directed to the Arch-bishops of Roan, Tours and Sens, which are both dated April the 20th, in the Year, 1079. To establish this, he supposes that the distinction of Diocesses, Provinces, Primacies, and Metropolitanships was made by the Apostles themselves, or by the Holy Apostolick See, and that the Dignity of Primate had been granted by his Predecessors to the Arch-bishop of Lions. However, it would be a hard matter to prove this out of any Authentick Record. Besides, the Arch-bishops of Sens and Roan, would not acknowledge the Arch-bishop of Lions for Primate: Which oblig'd Urban II. in the Council held at Clermont, in the Year, 1095. to suspend Richerus Arch-bishop of Sens from the use of the Pall; to enjoin his Suffragans not to obey him; and to threaten the Arch-bishop of Roan with the same Punishment, if he did not within three Months acknowledge the Primacy of the Arch-bishop of Lions.

The Rights or Privileges annex'd to the Pope's Vicars or Primates in France, have been of a greater or less extent, according to the difference of the Times. Pope Zozimus granted three Things to the Arch-bishop of Arles, viz. (1.) That all the Bishops who were minded to come to Rome, shall be oblig'd to take along with them commendatory Letters from the Arch-bishop of Arles. (2.) That the Ordinations in the Provinces of Vienna and Narbonne shall be his Peculiar. (3.) That he shall have the same Jurisdiction over the Churches, which he has had over them for a long time, tho' they be not in his Territory. Of these three Privileges, the two last belong to the Arch-bishop of Arles as Metropolitan; and the first was granted him as Vicar of the Pope. Symmachus, besides these, granted him a Power of calling Councils of the Bishops of France and Spain: Vigilius added thereto the Honour of wearing the Pall; but he desires that if he should meet with any difficult Point, which could not be determin'd by the Councils, he should make his Report thereof to the Holy See. Pelagius granted him in general, a Power of Acting in France, with respect to every thing which concern'd the Administration of Ecclesiastical Affairs. Lastly, Pope Gregory took notice in particular, wherein this Power consisted, which is, (1.) To cause all the Canons to be Religiously observ'd, and to maintain the Faith. (2.) To call a Synod when 'tis necessary. (3.) To make his Report to the Holy See, of the Controversies of Faith, and of the most momentary and difficult Causes. The Privilege granted by the Popes to the Arch-bishops of Rheims, consists chiefly in being immediately subject to no other than the Holy See, and in having the Right of Ordination and Inspection in the whole compass of his Vicarship. The Bishop of Metz had a Commission to call general Councils; to receive the Judgments pass'd in the Provincial Synods; to hear upon the first instance, the Causes of Appealing to the Holy See; to inform himself of the Lives of the Abbots and Bishops, and to provide for the necessities of the Church. The Privileges granted to the Arch-bishop of Sens, are to call Councils, and to examine into all the Ecclesiastical Affairs of France and Germany; to receive and publish the Decrees of the Holy See, and to make his Report to it, of all the Affairs of Moment and Consequence.

Gregory VII. does not enter into the particulars of the Privileges of the Arch-bishop of Lions; but only says in general, that the Ecclesiastical Affairs of any Consequence ought to be brought before him; and that it belongs to him to confirm and disannul the Judgments of the Ordinaries, and to judge the Causes of Bishops, and the Affairs of Importance, but without prejudice to the Holy See.

Gregory
VII.
The Cause of Ma-nasses
Arch-bishop
of Rheims.

Before Gregory VII. was Pope, Manasses was Arch-bishop of Rheims. That Prelate being very powerful, thought that the Monks of the Abby of S. Remy of that City, ought to pay entire Submission to him. He was for giving them such an Abbot as he thought fit, and took part of their Revenues into his Possession. These Monks having prefer'd their Complaints to Alexander II. that Pope wrote to Manasses, and admonish'd him to put an end to these Complaints, and to give Orders that that Abbey should be provided with a regular Abbot, who should have the Administration both of Spirituals and Temporals in his own hands. Gregory VII. continued the same Remonstrances: But being inform'd that Manasses, notwithstanding all the Promises which he had made by his Deputies, to give him satisfaction, continu'd his Abuses to those Religious, and enjoy'd their Revenues, He wrote a Letter to him full of Invectives, wherein he threatens to shew him the utmost severity, if he did not immediately cause a Regular Abbot to be put into that Abbey, and if he did not give such Orders as that the Religious might have no farther Reason to complain of him: And at the same time he orders Hugh Abbot of Cluny to convey that Letter to him, and to learn his Answer. These are the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Letters of the first Book, dated June the 29th, 1073. and the first which Gregory wrote after his Ordination.

Manasses obey'd the Pope's Orders, and caus'd William, Abbot of S. Arnulphus of Metz, to be elected also Abbot of S. Remy of Rheims. The Pope approv'd of the Choice of the Person; but he thought it hard that one Man should have the Charge of two Abbeys. However, he permitted William to hold, or relinquish that of Remy, as he thought fit. He held it for some time; but not being able to endure the Tyranny and Oppression of Manasses, he resign'd that Abbey. The Pope wrote to Manasses to order another Abbot to be elected, and gave at the same time notice to Herman Bishop of Metz, that Abbot William was willing to reside in the Abbey of his Diocess. This is the Subject matter of the Fifty second and third Letters of the first Book, dated March the 14th, 1074.

The next year the Pope, by the Fifty sixth Letter of the second Book, dated March the 4th, committed to Manasses, the Execution of the Sentence pass'd against the Bishop of Chalons, who had been depos'd for not appearing before the Synod of Rome, to which he had been cited, upon the account of some Differences between Him and his Clergy. And by the Fifty eighth dated the 5th of the same Month, he orders him to cause the Bishop of Noyon to restore to the Bishop of Utrecht, a Church which he had unlawfully seiz'd upon.

Hugh Bishop of Dia, Legat of the Holy See in France, having cited Manasses to a Council, which he had call'd at Autun, that Arch-bishop thought it beneath him to appear there; which caus'd the Legat to Condemn him. Manasses went immediately to Rome to clear himself; and by the Pope's order waited there three Months together for Hugh of Dia. But when that Bishop came not, the Cause of Manasses was argu'd in a Council, between Him and the Deputies of Hugh of Dia. Manasses having no Body to Accuse him, did with ease justify himself; and having affirm'd that it was not in contempt of the Holy See, that he did not appear before the Council of Autun, the Sentence pass'd against him in that Council was declar'd invalid, upon condition that he would appear before the Pope's Legat, whenever he should be Summoned: But he declar'd that he would not admit the Bishop of Dia to be his Judge. The Pope ask'd him whom he was willing should be his Judge; Manasses reply'd, The Abbot of CLUNY: Whereupon the Pope deputed that Abbot to be the Judge in the Cause of Manasses; after he had made him promise, that if he were call'd to any Synod by the Holy See, or to any by that Legat, he would not fail to make his Appearance. Manasses being return'd to France, was Summon'd in the Name of Hugh of Dia and the Abbot of Cluny, to a Council to be held at Troyes; he went thither with part of his Clergy: But the Clerks who accus'd him not daring to come thither, he was countermanded, and the Legats of the Pope were not at that Council. Manasses appear'd there, notwithstanding the Orders to the contrary, and thought he had discharg'd the Promise which he had made to the Pope. He pretended likewise that according to the Promises he made, he was oblig'd to appear before none beside the Pope, or before the Roman Legats sent immediately from the Holy See, and not before the Bishops on the other side the Mountains. He wrote to the Pope about it, and at the same time complain'd of the Arch-bishop of Vienna, who had depos'd and re-establish'd several Priests of the Diocess of Rheims; and of the Bishops of Laon and Soissons his Suffragans, who had ordain'd a Bishop of Amiens without consulting him, and even whilst he was at Rome. Gregory reply'd to him by the Second Letter of the sixth Book, dated August the 22d, 1078. That he ought to acknowledge the Legats nam'd by the Holy See upon the place, as well as those who were sent immediately from Rome; and that he ought forthwith to clear himself of the Things laid to his Charge before Hugh of Dia and the Abbot of Cluny; and that they should do him Justice, with respect to the Complaints which he had made. This is what he acquaints the Bishop of Dia with, by the next Letter dated the same day.

In the mean time Hugh of Dia caus'd Manasses to be Summon'd twice to a Council to be held at Lions, to answer to the Accusations which Count Manasses, and several Clerks of the Church of Rheims prefer'd against him. The Arch-bishop of Rheims refus'd to come to that Council, Council, and publish'd an Apology or Manifesto, wherein he alledges several Reasons for his Gregory not appearing. The first is, Because there is no mention made of the Abbot of Cluny in the Order, by which he was Summon'd to that Council. The Second, Because that Council was held in a City, which was not in that part of France, wherein he ought to be Judg'd. The Third, Because the Province which lay between that of Rheims and that of Lions, and through which he must pass, was engag'd in a War; so that he could not come without danger of being made Prisoner. The Fourth, Because he understood that that Council was to consist of the same Persons, who had already Condemn'd him rashly and unjustly. The Fifth, Because according to the Canons, it was requir'd that such a place should be made choice of to Try any one, as was near to his own Country, where one might produce Witnesses, and pass a definitive Sentence. That besides, he was reconcil'd to Count Manasses, and to all those who were at Difference with him, except Bruno, who was neither his Clerk, nor Born nor Baptiz'd in his Diocese, but a Prebendary of S. Cunibert of Cologne, for whom he was not much concern'd; and who had serv'd him basely, tho' under particular Obligations to him; and except another Clerk, nam'd Pontius, whom he had convicted of Falshood in the Council of Rome. That if he had no Accusers, he was not oblig'd to come and clear himself before the Council, by the Testimony of six Bishops of an unblameable Life: That when he would have done it, he could not, because of the shortness of the time that was allow'd him; and that it would be difficult to find in his Province six Bishops, who were not his Enemies, and without Reproach: That when he had promis'd to the Pope to appear before the Council which should be held by his Legats, he meant only such a Council as should be held in France, and in case he had not lawful Reasons to excuse his Non-appearance: Lastly, That for his part, he did not acknowledge Hugh of Dia to be Legat; since the Pope had granted him the favour of refusing him for his Judge: That however, to shew his Submission to the Holy See, he offer'd him to appear at a Synod which should be held in some City near to Rheims, either in Lent or at Easter; and that he would there receive him with all the Honour that was due to the Legats of the Pope: That he exhorted him to accept of this Offer; because it would be more advantageous to the Holy See, to attract the Respect and Submission of the French by Acts of Moderation, than by Acts of Severity to keep them at a distance: That if notwithstanding this Remonstrance, he still would persist in the same mind, and pronounce a Sentence of Deposition and Excommunication against him, the Popes S. Gregory and S. Leo had instructed him that he ought not to look upon such an Excommunication as issuing from the Holy See. These are the Reasons contain'd in the Apology of Manasses, which is a very fine Piece, and written in a very elegant Style, and publish'd by Father Mabillon in the first Tome of his Treasury of Italy.

Hugh of Dia had no regard to this Manifesto, but in the Council of Lions pronounc'd a Sentence of Deposition against Manasses, and the Pope confirm'd it in the Synod of Rome, held the beginning of the Year, 1080. and gave Manasses notice of it by the Twentieth Letter of the Seventh Book, dated April the 7th of the same Year; allowing him notwithstanding further time till the Feast of S. Michael to justify himself, either at Rome, or before his Legats; by producing as an Evidence of his Innocence some Bishops his Suffragans; by restoring to the two Persons who had accus'd him, the Revenues which he had taken from them; and upon Condition that he would retire to Cluny or some other Monastery till Ascension-day, and forbear till then all Episcopal Functions.

Manasses did not hearken to this Sentence, and continued in Possession of his Archbishoprick without submitting in the least to the Pope; who wrote immediately to the Clergy and Laity of Rheims, to the Suffragans of that Metropolitanship, to King Philip and to Count Ebold, ordering them no longer to acknowledge him for Archbishop of Rheims, to turn him out of that Church, and to Elect or cause to be Elected another in his stead. This is the subject Matter of the Seventeenth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth and Twentieth Letters of the Eighth Book, dated Decemb. 27th in the same Year.

This Manasses is accus'd by the Authors of that time of having attain'd to the Archbishoprick of Rheims by Simony, and of having exercis'd an insupportable Tyanny and Oppression over his Clergy; of having rifled Churches, plunder'd Monasteries, exacted Money from his Clergy, persecuted Men of Estates; of seizing the Revenues of the richest Abbies; of having liv'd more like a Great Lord, than a Bishop; of having greater Care of his Soldiers, than of his Clergy; of having more Concern for the Temporalities, than for the Spiritualities of his Archbishoprick; and of being so impious as to say, That the Archbishoprick of Rheims would be a very pretty Thing, if no singing of Mass were required. 'Tis thus that he is set out by William Abbot of S. Arnulphus of Merz, Guilbert Abbot of Nogent, and Hugh of Flaviay. However, Fulcoius Subdeacon of Meaux, has made his Elogy; and the Clergy of Noyon (in a Letter which they wrote at that very time to the Clergy of Cambray, to prove that the Sons of Clerks and Priests might be admitted into Priests Orders) maintain, That the Excommunication of Manasses had been made by a Motive of Envy; and that it was rash and unjust. This Letter is related by Father Mabillon, after the Apology of Manasses.

Gregory VII. nasses. All this makes it appear, That tho' Manasses had been as guilty as they would have him thought to be, yet he was not condemn'd in due Form.

The Cause of the Arch-bishop of Tours, and the Bishop of Dol. There had been for several Years past a Contest between the Archbishop of Tours and the Bishop of Dol, who pretended likewise to the Dignity of an Archbishop, or the Right of Metropolisian over the Bishops of Bretagne. The Popes always declar'd themselves in favour of the Archbishop of Tours. Gregory VII. seem'd at first to favour the Bishop of Dol; for the Clergy and Laity having sent to the Pope him whom they had elected to be Bishop, he refused to ordain him because he was too young: But having chosen Tves Abbot of S. Melaine, who was come to Rome with the Deputies of Dol, he consecrated him by their Consent, and granted him the Pall, upon Condition that he would come to Rome whenever he should be sent for thither, to regulate the Contest which was between the Church of Dol and that of Tours about the Right of Metropolitanship. The Archbishop of Tours thinking that the Pope had by this prejudiced his Right, complain'd of it; but Gregory sent him word that he had no occasion to complain, since he had taken such Measures that what he had done should be no Prejudice to him, and that he would do him Justice, when that Affair was in a Posture of being try'd. This is the Subject Matter of the Fourth, Fifth, and Thirteenth Letters of the Fourth Book, of which the two first, about the Ordination of Tves, are directed, the one to the People of Dol, and the other to the Bishops of Bretagne, dated September 27, in the Year, 1076. and the last to Radulphus Archbishop of Tours, dated the First of March, 1077.

The Pope was deceived in the Choice of the Man whom he had ordain'd to the Church of Dol. He soon receiv'd Complaints of his bad Conduct: And after he had examin'd the Accusations brought against him, he was just ready to depose him; when he received a Letter from William King of England, who interceded for him. This caus'd the Pope to supersede the Execution of that Sentence, till he should send upon the Place Hugh Bishop of Dia, and two other Legats, to inform themselves more fully about that Affair. This appears by the Seventeenth Letter of the Fourth Book, written to the King of England, and dated March the 2d, in the Year, 1077. He committed the Determination of that Affair to Hugh of Dia, to the Abbot of Cluny, and to two other Clerks, by the Two and three and twentieth Letters of the Fifth Book, dated May 22d, 1078.

At last the Contest between the Churches of Tours and Dol, for the Right of Metropolitanship, having been debated in the Council held at Rome the beginning of the Year, 1080. And the Archbishop of Tours having made it appear, by good Titles, That Bretagne belong'd to his Metropolitanship; whereas the Bishop of Dol not being able to produce such Authentick ones, was pleas'd to say, That he had forgot behind him several of his Titles: The Pope granted him a farther time, and declar'd that he would send Legats upon the Place, to determine that Affair: And that if it appear'd that the Bishop of Dol had sufficient Titles whereon to ground his Exception, he should still remain in Possession of it; if not, that then the Bishop of Dol and the other Bishops of Bretagne shall be subject to the Archbishop of Tours, as to their Metropolitanship; upon Condition however that the Bishop of Dol shall still enjoy the Privilege of wearing the Pall. This is what he intimates to the People of Tours and Bretagne, by the Fifteenth Letter of the Seventh Book, dated March 8th, in the Year, 1080.

The Cause of the Bishop of Toul.

The Bishop of Toul having refus'd to one of his Clerks a Church which he pretended to belong to his Prebendship, and having absolutely suspended him, that Clerk was incens'd against him, and accus'd him of selling Benefices and Sacred things; of holding a shameful and dishonorable Commerce with a certain Woman, and of having bought his Bishoprick. The Bishop's Friends, to avenge his Quarrel, threaten to be even with that Clerk, if ever they could catch him. Whereupon that Clerk not thinking himself secure absconded, and the Bishop immediately caus'd all that he had to be sold. That Clerk having made his Complaints thereof to Rome, Gregory VII. by the Tenth Letter of the second Book, dated October the 14th, 1074. Commission'd the Arch-bishop of Treves, and the Bishop of Metz, to Try this Cause. He enjoyns them in the first place to put that Clerk into the Possession of his Benefice; afterwards to make enquiry into the Life of the Bishop: If he were Innocent, to punish the Clerk who had scandaliz'd him; and if he were Guilty, to depose him.

The Cause of William Duke of Aquitain.

William Duke of Aquitain, and Count of Poitiers, having Marry'd one of his Relations, the Legat of the Holy See, and the Arch-bishop of Bordeaux call'd a Synod, to oblige him to part from her. Issembert Bishop of Poitiers disturb'd that Assembly, and offer'd violence to those who were there. However, the Duke of his own accord parted from his Wife. Gregory no less pleas'd with his Submission, than he was offended at the Action of the Bishop of Poitiers, complimented the Duke upon it by the third Letter of the second Book, and cited the Bishop to the Council of Rome by the second Letter of the same Book, threatening to depose and excommunicate him; and by the Fourth of the same Book advises the Arch-bishop of Bordeaux to come to Rome, or to send some body thither to accuse Issembert. These Three Letters are dated September the 2d, 1074. Issembert not appearing at the Synod, the Pope not only confirm'd the Suspension which his Legat had pronounc'd against him, but likewise excommunicated him, till such time as he should come to the Synod, nod, to be held at Rome the beginning of Lent, as appears by the Three and Four and twentieth Letters of the same Book, dated November the 16th, in the same Year. Gregory VII.

The Letters of Gregory are full of Instances of Bishops whom he cited to Rome, to give an account of their Conduct, or condemn'd for not appearing; or absolv'd when they did appear; or depos'd or enjoy'd to do Penance. We may consult beside those already mention'd, the Fifty sixth Letter of the first Book, by which he Summons the Bishop of Chalons, to come and clear himself at Rome: The Fifty seventh, by which he orders the Bishop of Pavia, to come to him with the Marquis Aso, accus'd of Incest with that Bishop's Sister. This Woman's Name was Matilda, which gave occasion to some Authors, to think her to be the same with the Princess Matilda, the Wife of Godfrey. But she was quite another Woman; for she whom we speak of, was the Sister of William Bishop of Pavia, who had Marry'd her Kinsman Aso, before the Death of Godfrey, the Princess Matilda's Husband. The Pope wrote to her by the Thirty sixth Letter of the second Book to part from Aso, till such time as she should prove in the Synod of Rome, that the Marquis was not her Kinsman. And by the Thirty fifth Letter, he likewise cited William Bishop of Pavia upon the same account. These two Letters are dated December the 16th, 1074. The Causes which Gregory VII. hear'd and try'd at Rome.

Sometimes Gregory VII. Commission'd Bishops upon the places to pass a definitive Sentence upon the Affairs in dispute. Thus he committed to the Arch-bishops of Bourges and Tours, the Determination of the Process between the Monastery of Dol, and the Abbey of S. Sulpicius, by the Ninth Letter of the second Book: To Richerus Arch-bishop of Sens, by the Twentieth Letter of the same Book, the correcting of Lancelin, who had injur'd the Arch-bishop of Tours. Causes referr'd by the Pope to his Legats.

By the Sixteenth Letter of the fourth Book, he referr'd to Hugh Bishop of Dia, the Tryal of the Difference which was between the Clergy of Romagne, and the Arch-bishop of Vienne.

In the Twentieth of the same Book, he referr'd to Josafroy Bishop of Paris, the Absolution of several Persons excommunicated by the Arch-bishop of Rheims, and granted him power to Absolve them, in case he found them innocent, if that Arch-bishop would not do it.

In the One and twentieth, he referr'd to Herman Bishop of Metz, the Tryal of the Process between the Bishop of Liege, and the Abbot of S. Lawrence, who having been turn'd out of his Monastery by the Bishop, had Appeal'd to the Holy See.

In the Fourth Letter of the sixth Book, he referr'd to the Arch-bishop of Treves and the Bishop of Metz, the Cause of one who complain'd that he had been unjustly excommunicated by the Bishop of Liege.

In the Fifth of the same Book, he advises Herman Bishop of Metz, to assist the Bishop of Toul, whom he had order'd to call a Council of six Bishops, to clear himself Canonically of what had been laid to his charge.

By the Thirty ninth of the same Book, he referr'd to the Bishop of Cume, the Tryal of the Election of the Bishop of Pergamo.

By the Eight and twentieth Letter of the seventh Book, he committed to the Bishop of Benevento, and the Abbot of Mount Cassin, the Tryal of an Armenian Heretick.

By the Nineteenth Letter of the ninth Book, he referr'd to the Arch-bishop of Lions, the Tryal of the Cause of an Abbot, who produc'd a Grant of Alexander II. which prov'd that he had been falsely accus'd.

By the Two and twentieth of the same Book, he referr'd to a Council of the Province, to be held in the presence of his Legats, the Tryal of the Count of Angiers, excommunicated by the Arch-bishop of Tours, upon the account of a Concubine which he kept.

He referr'd to the same Arch-bishop, by the Thirty second Letter of the same Book, the Cause of the Bishop of Terrouanne, who being favour'd by the Count of Flanders, had broke open the Church, and offer'd several Violences. You may consult on this Subject the Thirteenth, Two and thirtieth, Three and thirtieth, and Four and thirtieth Letters of the ninth Book, and the First of the eleventh.

By the Thirty first of the same Book, he referr'd to a Bishop the Tryal of the Difference which was between the Clergy of Autun, and the Monks of Fleury, about a Privilege which the latter pretended to.

To conclude, there were scarce any Controversies in the Diocesses between the Bishops and their Clerks, or Monks, and even Laicks themselves, which Gregory VII. was not minded to take Cognizance of, to try at Rome, and to oblige the Bishops to put his Sentence into Execution, as may be seen by a great many Letters, about several Subjects. The Causes cited to, and Judg'd at Rome by Gregory VII.

In the Fifty fourth of the first Book, he orders against the Bishop of Poitiers, that the Canons of that City shall observe their usual Custom concerning their Stations upon the Feasts of S. Hilary, and All-Saints. In the One and twentieth of the second Book, he enjoins the Abbot of Beaulieu, to be obedient to the Arch-bishop of Tours; and that if he thought he had any Reason not to be subject to him, he should come to Rome, and make his Pretensions good. In the Two and twentieth, he enjoins Hugh, Knight of S. Maur, Gregory VII. to restore to the Arch-bishop of Tours the Revenues of his Church, which he had taken away from him: And in case that he thought that they belong'd to him, to come to Rome to demand Justice in the case. In the Five and twentieth, he orders the Bishop of Cologne to Try the Difference which was between the Bishop of Osnabrux and the Abbot of Corbey in Saxony, upon condition that if he could not determine it, he would send them to his Synod of Rome. In the Thirty third, he reproves the Bishop of Turin for not coming to the Synod of Rome, and for having offer'd an Injury to the Monastery of S. Michael.

By the Sixty fourth and Sixty fifth Letters of the second Book, dated March the 25th, in the Year, 1075. he orders that the Accusation which the Monks of S. Dennis in France had brought against their Abbot, shall be Try'd by his Legats, or in a Synod of Rome. He likewise call'd to Rome by the Sixty ninth, the Contest which was between the Bishop of Turin, and the Monks of the Monastery of S. Michael; this Letter is dated April the 9th, in the same year. By the Thirteenth Letter of the third Book, he determines a Difference which was between the Church of Roscelle and the Church of Piombino, in favour of the former.

The Cause of Everard Dean of Orleans There was at that time a great Contest in the Church of Orleans, concerning a Deanery, between the Bishop and his Prebendaries. The Cause having been brought before Pope Alexander, he had determin'd it in favour of Josceline, whom the Prebendaries were for, and excommunicated Everard whom the Bishop had favour'd. Notwithstanding this Sentence, the Bishop of Orleans had still supported Everard, and was likewise accus'd of having receiv'd Money for the Collation of a Prebendship, the Revenue whereof was appropriated to the maintenance of the Poor: Gregory VII. being inform'd of it, in the first place cited Everard to Rome, by the Fifty second Letter of the second Book, dated March the 1st, 1075. and afterwards having confirm'd the Sentence pass'd by his Predecessor against him, he wrote to the Bishop of Orleans to turn him out, to put Josceline into Possession of the Prebendship then in question, and to suffer the Poor to enjoy the Revenue of that Prebendship which belong'd to them; if not, he threatned to excommunicate him; and at the same time he order'd Richerus Arch-bishop of Sens to do it, if he did not submit. These two Letters are the Sixteenth and Seventeenth of the third Book, dated in April 1076. The Bishop of Orleans returning no answer to Gregory, that Pope wrote a second time to the Arch-bishop of Sens, ordering him to thunder out the Excommunication against that Bishop, unless he assur'd him upon Oath, that he had not come to the least knowledge of the Pope's Letter; and he order'd him to come to Rome along with the Parties concern'd in that Affair. He likewise by this Letter Commissions Richerus Arch-bishop of Sens, not only to take Cognizance of this, but also of several other Matters which concern'd the Churches of France. This is the Subject Matter of the Ninth Letter of the fourth Book, dated November the 2d, in the same year.

The Bishop of Orleans did not much regard all these Menaces of the Pope, and caus'd the Person who brought his Letters to be apprehended. Gregory enrag'd at this proceeding, wrote to the Arch bishop of Sens and Bourges, ordering them to cite him before them at a place which they should appoint him; and if he continu'd Refractory, to depose him, and put Sanxon in his place: He likewise advertiz'd the Bishop of Orleans, that he had given this Order. These are the Eighth and Ninth Letters of the fifth Book, dated October the 6th, 1077. This Sanxon was elected in pursuance of this Order, and the Pope by the Fourteenth Letter of the same Book, dated January the 28th, in the Year, 1078. orders the Clergy and Laity of Orleans to acknowledge him: However, by another Letter dated April the 24th, which is the Twentieth of the same Book, he writes to Rainier, who was the depos'd Bishop of Orleans, ordering him to appear at the Synod which should be appointed by Hugh Bishop of Dia, and Hugh Abbot of Cluny, in order to receive a final Sentence. Lastly, By the Three and twentieth of the sixth Book, dated March the 5th, 1079. he acquaints the People of Orleans that he approv'd of the Election of Sanxon, but that he could not confirm him in Form, till such time as he should send Legats upon the place.

The Cause of Robert, nominated to the Bishoprick of Chartres. Robert Abbot of S. Euphemia in Calabria, had been nominated by the King of France to the Bishoprick of Chartres. Gregory VII. who lik'd not such sort of Nominations, and look'd upon them as Simonaical, charg'd him by his Legat to quit his Bishoprick. But Robert was not very forward to obey; whereupon the Pope declar'd him to have forfeited his Title to it, order'd the People of Chartres to elect another Bishop, and enjoyn'd Richerus Arch-bishop of Sens and his Suffragans to see this Order put in Execution. You may consult the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Letters of the Fourth Book, dated March the 4th, 1077. However, by a Letter directed to Hugh of Dia, which is the Eleventh of the Fifth Book, he gave that Bishop orders to examine into that business, and to make his Report thereof to him.

The Cause of the Bishop of Annecy. Stephen Bishop of Annecy had the same fortune. Hugh of Dia the Pope's Legat excommunicated him, and Gregory ratified his Sentence by two Letters; the one written to the Clergy of Annecy, and the other to the Bishops of France, which are the Eighteenth and Nineteenth of the Fourth Book, dated March the 23d, in the Year, 1077.

The

The Arch-bishop of Roan being grown infirm and incapable of governing his Diocese, Gregory VII. sent him one Hubert a Subdeacon, to enquire whether things were so or no, VII. and to perswade him to give his Consent, that another be put in his place, if he were capable of giving such a Consent; and in case he were wholly infirm, to cause another to be elected. This is what he acquaints the King of England with, by the Nineteenth Letter of the fifth Book, dated April the 4th, 1078.

The Canons of the Castle of S. Paul and S. Omer, having sent Deputies to Rome, to complain of the Counts Hubert, Guy and Hugh, who had seiz'd upon some Revenues which belong'd to them; the Pope wrote to these Counts, ordering them to make Retitution, according as it had been enjoyn'd in a Council held at Poitiers by Hugh of Dia, or else to justify their Pretensions to these Revenues before that Legat within the space of forty Days. If they would not obey, he order'd the Defenders of the Church to re-enter upon the Premises, and the Canons of Terrouanne to see that this Sentence be put in Execution. This is the Subject Matter of the Eighth and Ninth Letters of the sixth Book, dated November the 25th, 1079.

The Cause of the Canons of S. Omers.

In the Seventh and Eighth Letters of the sixth Book, he approves of the Election which the Monks of Marzeilles had made of Cardinal Richard for their Abbot: He declares to them that he wish'd that that Monastery were united to the Monastery of S. Paul.

Cardinal Richard elected Abbot of Marzeilles. The Letters of Gregory VII. concerning Discipline.

We will conclude the Account of the Letters of Gregory VII. with several Points of Ecclesiastical and Monastical Discipline, which he decided, and of which we have had no opportunity of speaking.

In the Fifth Letter of the first Book, directed to Rainier Arch-bishop of Florence, he determines that a Woman who had Marry'd one of her Kinsmen, and was become a Widow, ought not to receive her Dowry from any part of her Husband's Revenue, nor to have any advantage of that Marriage, which was in its own nature Null.

In the Four and twentieth Letter of the first Book, he recommends to the Bishop of Verona a constant Submission to the Holy See, and promises him the Pall, provided he would come in his proper Person to Rome: Because his Predecessors had order'd that the Pall should be bestow'd only on Persons who were present. This Letter bears date September the 24th, 1073.

In the Four and thirtieth Letter of the same Book, directed to the Bishop of Lincoln, he determines that according to the Opinions of the Fathers, a Priest who had been guilty of Homicide, ought no longer to attend at the Service of the Altar; but he is willing that in case he be truly Penitent, a Subsistence should be allow'd him out of the Ecclesiastical Contributions. Afterwards he gives that Bishop Absolution of all his Sins.

In the Seven and fortieth of the same Book, he exhorts the Princess Matilda to frequent Communion, and to bear a due Respect and Devotion to the blessed Virgin.

In the Eight and fortieth, he enjoyns that a Woman accus'd by her Husband of Adultery, shall be admitted to justify her Innocence.

In the Sixty fifth, he reproves the People of Ragusa for having first apprehended Vitalius their Bishop, and then elected another in his room. He enjoyns them to set him at Liberty, and to suffer his Cause to be try'd by the Arch-bishop of Siponto, whom he had Commission'd for that very purpose, with a Charge that if it could not be determin'd upon the place, they should send to Rome their old Bishop, and him whom they had newly elected, that so he might decide the Controversy between them.

In the Seven and fortieth of the second Book, he acquaints the Lord Rainier, that he had order'd the Bishop of Chiusi, to turn out of the Provostship of a Church, a Priest who had been Condemn'd by his Predecessor Alexander, and whom that Bishop would re-establish in defiance to the Authority of the Holy See.

In the Eight and fortieth, he orders two of his Legats to prevent a Man who had kill'd his Brother, from Marrying till he had done Penance.

By the Fiftieth, he determines that one who is not Born in lawful Wedlock, cannot be advanc'd to the Episcopacy, because 'tis contrary to the Canons. He likewise therein declares, that he would not accept of the Resignation of the Bishop of Arragon, who had desir'd to relinquish his Bishoprick because of his Infirmities. He says, that he had advis'd him to make use of an Ecclesiastick to take care of the Temporalities of his Diocese, and to apply himself wholly to Spiritual Affairs with the assistance of his Neighbouring Bishops; and that if his Infirmities continu'd upon him longer than an Year, and he were no longer capable of discharging his Episcopal Functions, one might with the Consent of the Clergy of that Church accept of his Resignation, and ordain in his stead the Person who should be elected to assist him in the Government of his Diocese, if he were fit for that Dignity. This Letter is directed to Sancho King of Arragon, and bears date January the 25th, 1073.

In the Seventy seventh Letter of the same Book, directed to Gebehard Arch-bishop of Salzburg, he advertises that Arch-bishop, that he ought not to detain the Tenth of a certain Territory, wherein a Bishoprick had been founded in the time of Alexander II.

Discipline.

In the Sixth Letter of the fourth Book, he determines that one cannot communicate with a dead Bishop who is excommunicate, nor pray for him: And he absolves him in case that he had involuntarily Subscrib'd to what the Emperor had acted against the Church. And in the Eighth Letter of the same Book, he orders Absolution to be given at the point of Death to an excommunicate Bishop, if he requir'd it, even before he had finish'd the Pen-nance assign'd him.

In the Tenth Letter of the same Book, directed to the Countess of Flanders, he declares that the Clerks who kept Concubines, ought not to be tolerated to say Mass, or celebrate any Divine Office. And in the Twentieth and several others he says, That the People ought not to assist them therein.

In the First Letter of the fifth Book, he reproves the Canons of Lucca for having bought their Benefices, and interdicts all those who had given Money for being Instituted and In-ducted into a great Church, and prohibits them from holding such Benefices.

In the Thirteenth, Fifteenth and Sixteenth of the same Book, he determines that the Elections of Bishops ought to be done by the Clergy and Laity, with an unanimous Free-dom and Consent.

In the Eleventh Letter of the sixth Book, he enjoins the Canons of S. Martins of Lucoa to live Regularly and in Common, or at least to allow their Bishop a Prebendship for the Neces-sities of the Church.

In the Six and thirtieth of the same Book, he threatens to excommunicate those who should buy Benefices. In the Thirty fourth, he had reckon'd up three sorts of Simony, viz. a Manu, ab obsequio, a lingua: The first sort is when one gives Money either in ones own Person, or by others, for the obtaining a Benefice. The second is when in hopes of a Be-nefice one does some signal Service to a Patron, who bestows it by way of Recompence for that Service. The third is when one Petitions, or causes another in ones behalf to Petition for a Benefice, and when one obtains it by Recommendation.

In the Second Letter of the seventh Book, he declares the Canons who disobey their Bi-shop, to have for ever forfeited their Benefices, and forbids both Clergy and Laity from communicating with them.

In the Tenth of the same Book, he desires that the Canonical Discipline of Pennance should be re establish'd in England, and sends a Legat thither for that purpose. He therein declares that that Pennance is Hypocritical, which is not attended with an amendment of Life.

In the Eleventh he would not permit Divine Service to be celebrated among the Sclavo-nians in their own Language.

In the Thirteenth, he orders the Bishop of Verdun to enjoy a Count Pennance, who had Robb'd a Bishop of Liege in his Journey to Rome, and to anathematize him, in case he would not submit to the Pennance.

In the Eighth Letter of the eighth Book, he congratulates the Bishop of Salerno, for having found the Relicks of S. Matthew, and exhorts him to shew them the Veneration which they deserve.

In the Tenth of the same Book, it is observ'd that the Legat of the Holy See in Sar-dinia, oblig'd a Grecian Arch-bishop to cut off his Beard; the which Gregory approv'd of.

In the Fifteenth of the same Book, he declares that he had order'd a Bishop of Italy, who had without just cause relinquish'd his Bishoprick, to retire to the Monastery of Mount Cassin, and to stay there till such time as it was determin'd what should be done with him. But that Bishop instead of obeying him, re-enter'd upon his Church without his permission: Wherefore he prohibits his Clergy from acknowledging him for their Bishop, and from obeying him.

In the Second Letter of the fourth Book, and in the One and twentieth of the eighth, he un-dertakes to prove that the Popes might excommunicate Kings and Sovereign Princes, and even absolve their Subjects from the Oath of Allegiance taken to them. But all the Authorities and Arguments which he makes use of to prove the Latter, are such as are either Suppo-sitious, or founded on false Matters of Fact, or such as conclude nothing.

In the First Letter of the ninth Book, he reproves the Arch-bishop of Ream, for not having sent to desire the Pall from the Holy See, and prohibits him from performing any Ordina-tion, or any Consecration of the Church, till such time as he should receive it from thence. This is the first Instance we meet with of the Popes obliging Arch-bishops to take the Pall, under the Penalty of being depos'd till they should receive them.

In the Four and twentieth of the same Book, he refus'd to ordain a Bishop of Malta, be-cause that Ordination belong'd to the Bishop of Reatino.

Monastical
Discipline.

With respect to the Monastical Discipline, Gregory VII. apply'd himself chiefly to preserve or increase the Exemptions and Privileges of Monasteries, or to regulate the Differences which happen'd between the Abbots, the Religious and the Bishops. We have already men-tion'd several of these kind of Causes, which he Try'd himself at Rome, or referr'd to his Le-gats, or to other Commissaries upon the place. We will now relate some others which we have not had occasion to speak of.

By the Two and thirtieth Letter of the first Book, dated November the 27th, 1073. he orders the Bishop of Chartres to re-establiſh Iſimbard Abbot of S. Laumer, who had quitted his Abbey to go to Jerusalem, in caſe he were guilty of no other Fault, and to turn out Guy, who had been put in his place, and who, they ſaid, had not ſo much Piety as Iſimbard, nor was ſo proper to govern that Monastery.

The Letters of Gregory VII. concerning Monastical Discipline.

In the Three and thirtieth, dated the next Day, he writes word to the Religious of the Monastery of Saint Mary, in the Diocess of Tortone, that he was not willing to confirm the Privilege, which being under the Name of Alexander II. had been preſented to him, by Benedict whom they had elected their Abbot in the room of Hubert; ſince he had diſcover'd it to be forg'd upon theſe two Accounts, firſt becauſe it had falſe Latin in it, and ſecondly becauſe it contain'd ſome thing in it contrary to the Intention of the Canons: That he did not think it adviſable to grant them a new one, till the Church of Tortone had a Biſhop elected according to the Canon, by whoſe conſent he might grant them a Privilege conformable to the Eccleſiaſtical Authority. With reſpect to him whom they had elected for their Abbot, he acquaints them, that he did not think him proper for that Place, by reaſon of his great Age, and his Infirmities, and that he had adviſed him to reſign it.

In the One and fiftieth Letter of the firſt Book, he reprimands the Abbot of S. Severus, for not appearing at the Synod of Rome, to anſwer the Complaints preſerr'd againſt him, concerning the Monastery of the Holy Croſs, from which this Abbot was minded to take a Church. He prohibits him from giving that Monastery any diſturbance, and orders him if he thought he had Reaſon for what he did, to come to the Synod held in November with the Abbot of the Holy Croſs. This Letter is dated March the 14th, in the Year, 1074.

By the Sixty ſixth, Sixty ſeventh, Sixty eighth, Seventy ſecond, Eighty firſt, Eighty ſecond Letters of the ſame Book; by the Fifteenth, Seventeenth, Forty ſixth, Fifty ninth, Sixtieth, and Sixty firſt of the ſecond Book; by the Twenty fourth, Twenty fifth, Thirty firſt, and Thirty third of the ſixth Book; by the Seventeenth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth, and Twenty fourth of the ſeventh Book, and by the Sixth, Seventh, and Twenty ninth of the ninth Book, he vindicates the Privilege of ſeveral Monasteries againſt the Biſhops, or any other Perſons who ſeiz'd on their Revenues, and had done any prejudice to their Rights or Immunities.

Thus have we given you a full Account of the Actions, Conduct, Life, Writings, Sentences, and Determinations of Gregory VII. during his Pontificate, extracted out of his Letters, wherein he has deſcrib'd his own Character, and diſcover'd what his Sentiments and Deſigns were. They are in all 359. which Compoſe a Register divided into Nine Books, containing all the Letters which he wrote from April 1073, to the Year, 1082. 'Tis obſerv'd that there was a Tenth Book, but 'tis loſt: That which is call'd the Eleventh, contains only one entire Letter, and the Fragment of another, which may be connected with Seven or Eight other Letters extracted out of Lanſfrank, and S. Anſelm, or other Authors.

The Judgments which have been paſſ'd on the Perſon, Conduct, Manners and Genius of Gregory VII. have been wholly contrary to each other. His Partifans have repreſented him to us as a Man very Religious and Pious, Juſt, Equitable, Humble, Patient, Unblameable both in his Life and Morals; a learned Canonist and a good Divine, Zealous for the Welfare of the Church, a Lover of Diſcipline, an Enemy to Vice, a Protector of the Innocent, an undaunted Defender of the Eccleſiaſtical Rights and Privileges, and a faithful Imitator of Gregory the Great in his Pastoral Care. His Enemies on the contrary have made him paſs for a cruel, ambitious, and perfidious Man, who having ſeiz'd by force on the Papal Chair, had put the whole Church into Confuſion to gratify his Ambition, and to attain to his Deſigns; who without reſpect to the Royal Maſteſty or to the Sacerdotal Dignity, had a Mind to make Kings his Slaves, and Biſhops his Creatures, by depriving the one of their States, and by unjuſtly Condemning the others, that he might afterwards give them Abſolution: Who had utterly overturn'd the Diſcipline of the Church, by being willing to eſtabliſh in his own Perſon a Monarchy, or rather Tyranny over things both Spiritual and Temporal: Who had advanc'd this unheard of Error ſo far as to maintain, that Popes might by Excommunicating Kings and Princes, diſveſt them of their States, and abſolve their Subjects from the Oath of Allegiance taken to them: Who had thunder'd out ſo many Excommunications, and extended them ſo far, that there was ſcarce a Man in his time who was ſure of not being excommunicated. I omit ſpeaking of the other groſs Enormities with which they charg'd him; ſuch as his being guilty of Sorcery, of holding a diſhoneſt Familiarity with the Princeſs Matilda, and of being in the ſame Error as Berenger was about the Eucharist. There is no doubt to be made but that the Zeal of the One, and the Paſſion of the Others, carry'd them both into Extrems. To paſs therefore a right Judgment upon him, it muſt be acknowledg'd that this Pope was a great Genius, capable of great Things, conſtant and undaunted in the execution of his Deſigns, well verſ'd in the Conſtitutions of his Predeceſſors, Zealous for the Interests of the Holy See, an Enemy to Simony and Libertiniſm, Vices which he ſtrongly oppos'd, full of Chriſtian Thoughts and Zeal for the Reformation of the Manners of the Clergy; and there is not the leaſt Colour to think that he was tainted in his own Morals. But it must likewise be confess'd, that he was advanc'd to the Papal Chair a little too Precipitately: That his Zeal to promote the Grandeur of the Holy See carry'd him to undertake such things as were unreasonable and beyond his Power: That he was the Cause of great Disturbances both in the Church and in the Empire: That he assum'd to himself a Power over Kings and their States, which he never had: And that he carry'd the Ecclesiastical Authority of the Holy See beyond its due Bounds. This is the Judgment which we suppose every one will pass upon him, who shall read over his Letters with a disinterested and unprejudic'd Mind. In short, they are penn'd with a great deal of Eloquence, full of good Matter, and embellish'd with noble and pious Thoughts: And we may boldly say, that no Pope since Gregory I. wrote such strong and fine Letters as this last Gregory did.

An Examen of the Decree said to belong to
VII.

We find among his Letters, after the Fifty fifth of the second Book, a piece Intituled, DICTATUS PAPÆ. i.e. An Edit of the Pope, or Papal Decisions; which contains Seven and twenty Propositions, concerning the Rights of the Holy See, some Feign'd and some True. The Summary of them is as follows. (1.) That the Church of Rome owes its Foundation to none but God alone. (2.) That no other Person beside the Pope of Rome has a Right to be call'd UNIVERSAL BISHOP. (3.) That 'tis he alone who can depose Bishops and re-establish them. (4.) That his Legat ought in Council to preside over all Bishops, even tho' he be inferior to them in Dignity; and that he may pronounce a Sentence of Deposition against them. (5.) That the Pope may depose even absent Bishops. (6.) That no Man ought to live in the same House with them whom he has excommunicated. (7.) That 'tis Lawful for him alone to make new Laws, when Times require it, to found new Churches, to turn a Canonship into an Abbey, to divide a Rich Bishoprick into two, and to consolidate Poor ones. (8.) That 'tis he alone, who can wear the imperial Robes. (9.) That all Princes should kiss the Pope's Feet, and that 'tis to him alone they ought to pay this Honor. (10.) That his Name alone is to be repeated in the Churches. (11.) That there is no other Name but his in the World (that is, according to some, that to him alone belongs the Name of Pope; an Explication which seems to be very much strain'd. (12.) That 'tis lawful for him to depose Emperors. (13.) That he has the Power of Translating Bishops from one Bishoprick to another, when there is a necessity for it. (14.) That he can ordain a Clerk in any Church whatsoever. (15.) That a Clerk whom he has ordain'd, may enter into another Church; but that he cannot be oblig'd to serve there; and that he cannot be promoted to a superior Order by any other Bishop. (16.) That no general Council ought to be held without his Order. (17.) That no Book can be Canonical without his Authority. (18.) That his Judgment ought to be corrected by none, and that he can correct the Judgments of all other Persons. (19.) That no Person ought to Judge him. (20.) That no Person whatsoever dare to Condemn him, who appeals to the Holy See. (21.) That the Cognizance of the most material Causes of all Churches belongs to him. (22.) That the Church of Rome has always been, and will always be Infallible, according to the Testimony of the Scriptures. (23.) That the Pope of Rome ordain'd Canonically, becomes unquestionably HOLY by the Merits of S. Peter, according to the Testimony of Ennodius Bishop of Pavia, approv'd of by several Saints, and as it is recorded in the Decretals of Pope Symmachus. (24.) That by his permission 'tis lawful for Inferiours to accuse Superiours. (25.) That he can depose and re-establish Bishops without calling a Synod. (26.) That he who does not agree with the Church of Rome, is no true Catholic. (27.) That he can declare the Subjects of wicked Princes, absolv'd from the Oath of Alliance, which they have taken to them.

This Piece has no relation to the Letter which preceeds it, nor to that which follows it; and we have not the least proof that it was made in the Council of Rome in the Year, 1076. as Baronius pretends. Nor is it probable that it belongs to Gregory VII. For tho' there be in this Collection several Propositions which have relation to what he wrote in his Letters, yet there are a great many which he never advanc'd, nor approv'd of. There are likewise some of them that are equivocal, others express'd in odious Terms, and others Intolerable. They are almost all of them drawn up so ill, that one cannot say Gregory VII. who had a good Genius, was the Author of them. This is what inclines me to believe that 'tis the Work of one who was an Enemy to Gregory, who was minded to render his Doctrin odious, by comprehending it in these Seven and twenty Propositions drawn up at random, which bear some resemblance to the Genius and Manners of that Pope. If this Conjecture be not agreeable to some, we may say that 'tis the Work of some Roman bigotted to the Maxims of the Court of Rome, who suppos'd he might deduce these Propositions from the Letters of Gregory VII. and made this Collection of them, which has been since inserted in the Register of that Pope. Let the Case be how it will, one cannot say without injustice to Gregory, that 'tis his Piece, nor maintain all these Propositions without doing injury to the Holy See.

'Tis to be observ'd, that the Commentary upon the Seven Penitential Psalms, ascrib'd to Gregory the Great, was compos'd in the Time of Gregory VII. because the Author of this Commentary speaks in three places, viz. in Psal. 5. v. 9, 26. and in Psal. 27. against an Emperor

peror of his Days, whom he accuses of renewing Simony in the Church; of having disturb'd it by a dangerous Schism, of having a Mind to make it his Slave; of having seiz'd upon what belong'd to it; of making himself Master of the Church of Rome, and of having begun to exercise his Power against it. This has inclin'd many to believe that 'tis the Work of Gregory VII. which his Name made others think that it belong'd to Gregory the Great: But the Style of this Piece does not seem so elegant as the Style of that Pope: However perhaps he might be more remiss in a Work of this Nature. There is in England a Commentary upon S. Mathew in Manuscript, which is ascribed to Gregory VII. and which they say he compos'd whilst he was only a simple Religious: But it has never yet been Publish'd.

CHAP. VI.

An Account of the Church of Rome, and of the Popes who Succeeded Gregory VII. to the end of this Century.

AFTER the Death of Gregory VII. the Cardinals and the Clergy of Rome had their Eyes upon Didier Abbot of Mount Cassin, to advance him to the Popedom. Some Authors say that Gregory VII. had recommended him to them, before he Died. He was descended from a noble Family of Benevento, and had spent all his Life in the Monastery of Mount Cassin. He at first refus'd the Dignity which was offer'd him; so that the Holy See remain'd Vacant for almost a whole Year. In the mean time Guilbert the Antipope became Master of one part of the Churches of Rome, and would fain have been acknowledg'd for lawful Pope. The Cardinals and Bishops who acknowledg'd Gregory, to prevent Guilbert's design, came to Rome about Easter in the Year, 1086. with the Prince of Salerno, and Duke Roger, to proceed to the Election of a Pope. When they were there, they renew'd their Importunities to Didier, to engage him to accept of the Popedom; but he would never expressly consent to it. However, they Elect'd him, and having taken him by force, carry'd him to the Church of S. Lucia to proclaim him Pope under the Name of VICTOR III. But when they were about to put on him the Pontifical Robes, he made so great a Resistance, that they could not put his Albe on him, but only cast a red Chappe about his Body. Four Days after he left Rome, and when he came to Terracina, threw off all the Ensigns of the Pontificate, and retir'd to Mount Cassin, where he liv'd privately, and could by no means be prevail'd upon to be Ordain'd. But the Year after in a Council held at Capua during Lent, he yielded to the Intreaties of Duke Roger, of the Prince of Capua and of the Bishops, reassum'd the Purple and the Pontifical Cross; and after he had spent the Easter Holidays in his Monastery, was Conducted to Rome by the Princes of Salerno and Capua, who having taken the Church of S. Peter by force from Guilbert, caus'd Victor to be Ordain'd by the Bishops of Ostia, Frescati, Pavia and Albania, and plac'd him on the Papal Chair, May the 9th in the same Year. This Election was not only oppos'd by the Favourers of Guilbert, but also by Hugh, who from the Bishoprick of Dia was translated to the Arch-bishoprick of Lions, and pretended to the Popedom; by the Arch-bishop of Aix and by Cardinal Richard Abbot of Marseilles, who were underhand supported by the Cardinal Bishop of Ostia, who had himself likewise some Votes on his side. The Arch-bishop of Lions was the greatest opposer of Victor's Ordination, and wrote against him two Letters to the Princess Matilda, to hinder her from acknowledging and assisting him: Accusing him of holding correspondence with the Emperor Henry. But these Letters made no impression on the Mind of that Princess; on the contrary she came forthwith to Rome with some Forces, and retook from Guilbert that part of the City of Rome which he was possess'd of, and the Castle of S. Angelo. Within a while after, the Romans who favour'd that Antipope, being got together, assaulted the Church of S. Peter on the Vigil of that Apostle's Festival, and oblig'd those who held out for Victor to throw themselves into the Castle of S. Angelo. The two Parties continued these Acts of Hostility for several Days together. But at last Victor desisted, and retired to his Monastery; from whence he went out in August, to hold a Council at Benevento, compos'd of the Bishops of Apulia and Calabria; wherein he made a Speech against Guilbert, and issu'd out a fresh Anathema against him. He therein likewise excommunicated the Arch-bishop of Lions, and Richard Abbot of Marseilles; renew'd the Prohibitions against receiving Benefices from the Hands of Lay Patrons, and the Penalties inflicted on those who were guilty of Simony; VICTOR III. and nical Persons. Victor fell Sick during this Council, which oblig'd him to return immediately to Mount Cassin, where he died September the 16th 1087. after he had recommended Otto Bishop of Ostia for his Successor.

Urban II. Otto was a French Man of Chatillen upon the Marne in the Diocess of Rheims. He had been taken out of the Monastery of Cluny to be Cardinal, and had done signal Services for Gregory VII. who had sent him Legat into Germany against King Henry. He could not be Elected immediately after the Death of Victor; because the Cardinals and the Bishops were dispers'd. The Countess Matilda conven'd them again at Terracina the beginning of Lent in the Year ensuing, whither John Bishop of Porto, brought the Consent of the absent Cardinals; and Benedict Prefect of Rome, brought a Commission from the People of that City, to acknowledge him who should be elected Pope by the Assembly.
Otto was proclaim'd by the Cardinal Bishops of Porto, Frescati, and Albany, and the Choice confirm'd by the whole Assembly. They gave him the Name of Urban II. and plac'd him on the Papal Chair. Upon his departure from Terracina, he went to Mount Cassin, where they say that he was miraculously Cur'd of a Pain in his Side, by S. Benedict who appear'd to him, and who assur'd him that his Body was reposit'd in that Monastery. Roger and Beaumont the Counts of Apulia and Calabria, waited upon him in that Place, and carry'd him along with them into Apulia. He was almost constantly resident on their Territories or in Campania, and went now and then to Rome, which sometimes favour'd Guilbert, and sometimes Him. For Guilbert was at first turn'd out by the Romans, and oblig'd to renounce the Popedom. Afterwards he was receiv'd there in the Year, 1091. retook the Castle of S. Angelo, and continued Lord of that City. so long as the Emperor Henry had the better of it: But his Son Conrad revolting in the Year, 1093. and in League with Welfo Duke of Italy, whom Urban had got to Marry the Princess Matilda; Guilbert's Faction began to grow weaker, and Conrad whom that Pope favour'd in his Revolt, caus'd Urban to be acknowledg'd in Lombardy, and to be receiv'd in Placenza, where he held a famous Council in the Year, 1095. He went from thence into France, where he call'd a Council at Clermont in Auvergne, wherein he gave in the Project of the grand CROISADE, which was perform'd under his Popedom in the East. When he return'd into Italy, he at last became Master of Rome, tho' Guilbert had a great many Favourers in that City. He dy'd there July the 29th in the Year, 1099.

The Register of this Pope's Letters is lost: Those that are left us are as follow.

The Letters of Urban II. Urban's first Letter, is a Privilege granted to the Monastery of Bantino, which the Pope had founded at the Instance of the Dukes Roger and Beaumont.

The Second and Third are directed to the Arch-bishops of Toledo and Tarragon, about their Primacy.

In the Fourth, he prescribes to the Arch-bishop of Milan the method he ought to use in reconciling those who had been ordain'd during the Schism: Which is to order them to come at the time wherein he gives the Blessing, and the Imposition of Hands, that is, at the time of Ordination, and to perform all the Ceremonies with relation to them, except the Unction.

By the Fifth, he confirms to the Arch-bishop of Bari or Canosa, the dignity of Metropolitan, and grants him the Pall.

In the Sixth, he exhorts the Dukes Roger and Beaumont to protect the Abbot and Monks of Bantino, against the Lords who persecuted them, and seiz'd upon their Estates.

In the Seventh, he grants the Arch-bishoprick of Tarragon to the Bishop of Vich, which Berenger Count of Barcelona had lately re-establish'd and Peopled with Christians.

In the Eighth, he sent word to the Clergy and People of Chartres, that he approv'd of the Choice which they had made of Yves for their Bishop in the place of Geofrey who had been depos'd, and that he would send him to them, after he had Consecrated him. By the following Letter he acquainted Richerus Arch-bishop of Sens with the same thing, who had refus'd to Consecrate him, and enjoyns him to receive him, and to use him kindly. This Letter is follow'd by a Discourse of that Pope, which contains a great many Instructions in a few Words, directed to Yves of Chartres after his Consecration.

The Tenth is a Privilege granted by the Pope and Duke Roger to the Monastery of Cave.

The Eleventh and Twelfth contain the Confirmation of the Privileges granted to the Canons of S. Martin of Tours.

The Thirteenth is a kind of Declaration which the Pope made to Roger Count of Calabria and Sicily, that he would not send any Legat into his Dominions without his Consent:
 That he and the Princes his Successors shall be the innate Legats of the Holy See in their own Territories: And that when the Pope shall send for any Bishops or Abbots of their Country, he gives them leave to send whom they pleas'd, and retain those whom they should think fit.

In the Fourteenth, he advertises the Count Radulphus, that the Clerks ought to be Subject to none beside their Bishops, and that secular Persons have no Jurisdiction over them.

In

In the Fifteenth he interdicts a Priest of Salerno, who held a Church as the Patronage of a Laick, and pronounces the same Penalty against all those who receiv'd the Investiture of Benefices from any beside their Bishops. Urban II.
The Letters of Urban II.

By the Sixteenth he acquaints Alexius the Emperor of Constantinople, of the great number of those engag'd in the CROISADE for the Relief of the Christians of the East, and exhorts him to assist them in their Expedition.

In the Seventeenth, he replies to Lucius Provost of S. Invenius of Pavia upon several Questions which he had propos'd to him. In this Letter he proves that all manner of Selling Ecclesiastical Things is Simony. And as to what that Provost had demanded, whether the Ordinations and Sacraments administred by the Simoniacal, by the Adulterous, or by any other notorious Offenders, were valid: He replies, that in case they be not separated from the Church by Schism or Heresy, their Ordinations are valid, and their Sacraments Holy and Venerable: That however his Predecessors Pope Nicholas II. and Pope Gregory VII. had prohibited the assisting at the Mass of such Priests as were guilty of these Irregularities, in order to bring them to Penance: But as to Schismatics and Hereticks, that they have indeed the Form of the Sacraments, but not the Power and Efficacy of them; and that they do not produce their Effect, till those who have received them are reconcil'd to the Church by the imposition of Hands.

The Eighteenth is a confirmation of the Privileges granted to the Arch-bishop of Salerno.

In the Nineteenth, he acquaints two Abbots of Fossombrona, that he had excommunicated and depos'd Guezilon Arch-bishop of Maience, who was Consecrated by excommunicated Persons.

In the Twentieth, directed to the Arch-bishop of Sens and other Bishops of France, he declares that no Bishop has any power of absolving the King of France, whom he had excommunicated.

In the One and twentieth, he wrote to the Arch-bishop of Lions to use his utmost Endeavours to oblige an Abbot to return to his Abbey, who was withdrawn to lead an heremital Life.

The ancient Collection of Urban's Letters contains only these One and Twenty: There have been several others added since, of which a new Collection is made under other Heads.

The first of these is a Letter directed to Gebehard Bishop of Constance, about the Difficulties he met with in executing the Excommunications thunder'd out by Gregory VII. He therein determines, (1.) That Guilbert and King Henry are Excommunicated. (2.) That all those who assist them are Excommunicated likewise. (3.) That those who Communicate with these Excommunicated Persons to the third Degree, ought not to be admitted into the Communion of the Church till they have been Absolv'd. (4.) That he will make an Order in a general Council concerning the Clerks who have been ordain'd by excommunicated Bishops; but that in the mean time, they ought to hold their Orders, who have been ordain'd without Simony by Catholick, tho' excommunicated Bishops, after they had been enjoyn'd Penance: But yet they should not be permitted to take upon them any higher Order without urgent Necessity. (5.) That he ought to turn out of the clerical Order all those who are guilty of a Crime which deserves to be punish'd according to Law, whether they have committed it before or after their Ordination. Lastly, he makes that Bishop, as well as the Bishop of Passaw, Vicar of the Holy See for the Ecclesiastical Affairs of Germany.

The Second is directed to Robert Count of Flanders, whom he exhorts to suffer the Church to enjoy the Revenues which belong to it. Notwithstanding this Remonstrance, that Prince continu'd to rifle the Revenues of the Church; whereupon the Clergy of Flanders prefer'd their Complaints against him to the Arch-bishop of Rheims, who order'd in a Council held in the Year, 1092. that Robert should restore to the Churches what he had taken away from them, under the pain of Excommunication. That Prince obey'd, and dy'd within a short time after.

The next Fourteen relate to the re-establishment of the Bishoprick of Arras.

In the Seventeenth, directed to Pibo Bishop of Toul, he renews the Decrees of Gregory VII. against the Simoniacal, and those who kept Concubines; and the Decree which prohibits the Children of Priests from entering into Holy Orders. He repeats what he had said in his Letter to Gebehard concerning Ordinations which were perform'd by excommunicated Persons. He excommunicates the Simoniacal, and declares that the Churches which they Consecrate, ought to be Consecrated over again by a Catholick Bishop. He leaves to the pleasure of Bishops, the receiving or rejecting those who are ordain'd without a Title. Lastly, He renews the Law which forbids Holy Orders to those who were guilty of Bigamy.

In the Eighteenth, he permits Richerus Arch-bishop of Sens, to bestow some Livings on some Regular Canons.

Urban II.
The Letters of Urban II.

In the Nineteenth, he answers Hugh Arch-bishop of Liens, that he may, if he thinks fit, admit of the Ordinations of the Clerks of his Diocese, who have receiv'd Orders from the Hands of another Bishop, if there be no other defect in their Ordination.

In the Twentieth, he admonishes the Bishop of Laon, not to take away from the Monks of S. Remy of Rheims, a Church which they had in his Diocese, and determines in the general, that all the Churches which the Monks have been in Possession of for Thirty or Forty years together, shall still be Theirs.

In the One and twentieth, he recommends to Count Raimond and the People of Narbonne, their Arch-bishop Dalmatius, and orders them to cause Restitution to be made to the Church of Narbonne, of all the Revenues which belong to it.

In the Two and twentieth, he orders the Abbot of Tomeri to restore several Revenues which he had taken from the Church of Narbonne, and the Monastery of S. Cucufato of Barcelona. By the next Letter he refers that Affair to Rainier his Legat upon the place.

The Nine next Letters concern the Primacy of the Church of Toledo.

The Thirty third, contains an Agreement between the Monks of S. Aubin of Angers, and the Monks of Trinity of Vendome.

By the Four and thirtieth, he enjoyns the Count of Poitiers to restore several Revenues which he had taken away from the Monastery of Vendome.

In the Five and thirtieth, he upbraids the Arch-bishop of Rheims and the Bishops his Suffragans, for having permitted the King of France to part from his Wife, and to Marry one of his Kindred, and for that the Bishop of Sentis had bless'd him upon the Marriage. He exhorts them to reprove the King, to prevail upon him to turn to his Duty, to set at Liberty Ives of Chartres, and if he did not obey, to excommunicate him, and interdict his Kingdom.

These Letters are follow'd by a Collection of several Letters of Reginald Arch-bishop of Rheims, of Pope Urban, of Lambert Bishop of Arras, and of several others written about the Ordination of that Bishop of Arras, who having been elected by the Clergy and Laity of that City, had been deny'd Ordination by the Arch-bishop of Rheims. Pope Urban being inform'd thereof, enjoyns that Arch-bishop to ordain him. Instead of doing it, he sent him to Rome, where the Pope ordain'd him himself. The Arch-bishop of Rheims was oblig'd to approve of this Ordination, and he wrote to Robert Count of Flanders in his behalf. The Pope when he went into France, sent for Lambert to the Council of Clermont. That Bishop was taken Prisoner as he was going through Provence, and set at Liberty afterwards at the Pope's desire, who gave him a very kind reception, confirm'd the Privileges of the Church of Arras, and depos'd Gaucher Bishop of Cambray. Sometime after the Arch-bishop of Rheims wrote to Lambert against a Lord who had Plunder'd and Burnt a Village belonging to the Church of Cambray. This is the Subject Matter of the Letters we mention'd.

The Council of
1089.

Pope Urban held several Councils; the first at Rome in the Year, 1089. wherein he confirm'd all that Gregory VII. had done against Guilbert. Several Lords propos'd to the Emperor Henry, to abandon Guilbert, for the procuring of Peace to the Empire and the Church. He was well enough inclin'd to it, but was diverted from it by his Bishops, who fear'd being depos'd as well as Guilbert.

The Council of Melphi,
1089.

The same year Urban held a Council at Melphi, wherein he renew'd the Decrees against the Simoniackal, and concerning the Celibacy of those who were in Holy Orders. He therein enjoyns that none should be admitted into Holy Orders but such as had led chaste Lives, and had never been Marry'd to any more than one Woman: That none should be ordain'd Sub-deacon before he was Fourteen years old, nor Deacon before One and twenty, nor Priest before Thirty. He therein prohibits Laicks from granting the Donation of Churches, without the Consent of the Bishop or the Pope: And Abbots from exacting Mony of those who took upon them the Monastical Habit. He therein abolish'd the Custom of Exempt Clerks, who either were in the Service of great Lords or depended on them. He therein declares the Sons of Priests incapable of entering into Holy Orders, unless they have taken upon them the Monastical Habit; and he advises Ecclesiasticks to behave themselves modestly. This is the Subject Matter of the Sixteen Canons made in that Council, which was held in the presence of Count Roger.

The Council of Toulouse,
in the Year
1090.

The Legats of this Pope, held a Council at Toulouse in the Year, 1090. wherein they made several Decrees about Discipline. The Arch-bishop of Toulouse clear'd himself in this Council, and they there resolv'd to send Legats to Toledo for the re-establishing of the Faith.

The Council of Benevento,
in the Year

In the Year 1091. August the 1st, Urban held a Council at Benevento, wherein he renew'd the Condemnations issu'd out against Guilbert, and made Four Canons. By the First, he prohibits the Electing any one for Bishop who is not in Holy Orders, that is, according to his Explication, who is not Deacon or Priest: And with respect to Sub-deacons, he enjoyns, that they cannot be promoted to Episcopacy, unless upon an extraordinary occasion, and with the Permission of the Holy See. In the Second, he suspends ab officio the Chaplains Chaplains who are nominated and paid by Lay-Patrons, without the consent of the Bishop. Urban II. In the Third he prohibits the receiving Clerks, who were Strangers, without Letters Dimissory from their Bishop. In the fourth, Laicks are forbid the eating of Flesh after Ashwednesday, and all the Faithful of both Sexs are enjoynd to put Ashes on their Heads on that Day: It is likewise order'd that no Marriage shall be Solemniz'd from Septuagesima Sunday till after the Octave of Whitsontide, and from the first Sunday in Advent till after the Octave of Epiphany.

In the Year, 1093. he held a Council in a City of Apulia, call'd Troyes, wherein he renew'd the Prohibitions against contracting Marriages between Kindred.

In the Year, 1094. Gebehard Bishop of Constance, his Legat in Germany, held a Council in his City against incontinent and simoniacal Clerks. He likewise order'd that Ember Week in March should be held the first Week in Lent, and that in June the Whitsen Week, and that there should be no more than three Holydays at Easter and Whitsontide; for till then they were us'd to keep Holyday all the Week long. The Prince's Praxedis, Henry the Emperors Wife, appear'd before that Council, and discover'd a great many Enormities, which she said she had been constrain'd by her Husband to commit.

She made the same Declaration before the Pope, in the Council held at Plaisance in the Year, 1095. during Lent, which was so numerous that they were forc'd to hold the Assembly in the open Field. Philip King of France sent his Ambassadors thither to excuse his not appearing. The Pope allow'd him time till Whitsontide. Hugh Arch-bishop of Lions was Suspended in this Council, because he neither appear'd there himself, nor sent any Deputy to excuse him. The Pope gave audience to the Ambassadors of the Emperor of Constantinople, who demanded assistance against the Infidels, and he engag'd the Lords who were there present to promise to go into the East for that purpose: This was the first step towards the CROISADE, which was fully resolv'd upon in the Council of Clermont. There were likewise several Rules of Discipline made in this Council, by which it is order'd that those who will not part with their Concubines, or pardon their Enemies, or were habituated in any mortal Sin, should not be admitted to the Holy Communion. That the Priests shall admit none to Penance but those who shall be refer'd to them by the Bishops. That the Eucharist shall not be deny'd to those, who shall confess themselves as they ought. They renew'd likewise the Decrees against the Simoniacal, and the Incontinent, and the Judgments pass'd against the Heresy of Berenger, against Guilbert, and against those who were ordain'd by Schismatics.

Urban going into France, in November, 1095. held a Council at Clermont in Auvergne, which was compos'd of Thirteen Arch-bishops, and a great many Bishops their Suffragans; wherein he confirms the Decrees of the Council of Plaisance, and made other new ones; publish'd the CROISADE for the East; excommunicated King Philip; confirm'd the Primacy of the Arch-bishop of Lions, and made a great many other Institutions. These are the things we will speak of more particularly, and will begin with the Excommunication of Philip I. King of France. This Prince had put away his Wife Bertha, the Daughter of Florentius the chief Count of Holland, and of Gertrude of Saxony, for being too nigh a Kin to him. This Divorce having been made in form by the Authority of the Church in the Year, 1086. and in pursuance of a juridical Sentence, the King banish'd her to Monfrevil a Sea Port, and look'd after another Wife. At first he courted the Daughter of Roger Count of Sicily, nam'd Emma, who was carry'd to the Borders of Provence; but the Match broke off, perhaps because she did not think it safe to Marry a Prince who had another Wife Living. Bertrade the Daughter of Simon of Montfort, who had Marry'd Fulcus Rechinus Count of Anjou, pleas'd the King, and she made no scruple to part from her Husband and Marry him: She was the Kings Relation in the fifth or sixth Degree, and Rechinus her Husband, in the third or fourth Degree. Besides, if Philip were free as he pretended, Bertrade was not, her first Marriage being still valid. All these considerations were of no weight to King Philip, who surmounted them all, and resolv'd upon solemnizing this Marriage with Bertrade publickly. He fix'd upon a Day to celebrate it at Paris, and sent for Reginald Arch-bishop of Rheims, Tves of Chartres, and several other Prelats to render the Solemnity the more Authentick. Tves of Chartres sent the King word, that he could not be there, nor could he consent to, or approve of that Marriage, because his Divorce from Bertha had not as yet been confirm'd by the Authority of the Holy See, and because Bertrade could not Marry him, being another Man's Wife. He sent likewise word to the Arch-bishop of Rheims; that he ought not to celebrate this Marriage, but rather to dissuade the King from it. Lastly, he wrote to Hugh Arch-bishop of Lions (who because of this business refus'd to take upon him the quality of Legat of the Holy See in France) telling him that he ought to be inspirited with a Holy Zeal in order to oppose this Criminal Proceeding of the King. Notwithstanding this, Philip Marry'd Bertrade, and found out a Bishop who dar'd to Marry them for the Revenue of some Churches which the King gave him. Hugh of Lions at the instance of Tves of Chartres held a Council at Autun October the 16th in the Year, 1094. wherein he excommunicated Philip, because he had Married a second Wife whilst the first was Living. In this Council he likewise renew'd the Excommunications 1094.

Urban II munitions against the Emperor Henry, and against the Antipope Guilbert; and the Decrees against the Simony and Incontinence of the Clergy; and prohibited Monks from usurping the functions and rights of Curats. Pope Urban suspended the execution of this Decree against Philip, and cited him to the Council of Plaisance, whither he sent, as we mention'd before, his Ambassadors, who obtain'd a farther Respite till Whitsontide. Afterwards when Urban was come to France, the King sent his Deputies before him, to endeavour to work the Pope into a good Disposition, and to prevail upon him to cancel the Excommunication, and to confirm his Marriage: But the Pope being prevented by the Letters of Pors of Chartres, refus'd to grant him what he desir'd, and wrote to the Archbishops and Bishops of France ordering them to exhort the King to do Penance for his Fault, and to part from Betrade: Tves of Chartres was the only Person who did it with Resolution, which was the cause of his being persecuted, and taken Prisoner. The Pope perceiving that all his Admonitions provid' ineffectual, in the Council of Clermont thunder'd out a Bull of Excommunication against King Philip, and his Concubine Betrade.

The CROI-SADE under Urban II.

As to the CROISADE set on foot for the relief of the Christians in the East, Gregory VII. was the first promoter of it, but could not put it into practice because of his difference with the Emperor. Victor III. notwithstanding the difficulties he labour'd under, found out a Means of sending an Hundred thousand fighting Men into Africa against the Infidels. Urban in imitation of those great Exemplars, and being importun'd by the Letters of Alexius Emperor of the East, and by the remonstrances of Peter the Hermit, a Gentleman of Fleardy near Amiens, who had brought a Letter from Jerusalem from the Patriarch Simeon, who conjur'd the Christians to free the Holy Land from the Tyranny of the Turks, did so animate the By-standers, by his warm and pathetic Discourses to undertake the Conquering of the Holy Land, and so far prevail'd upon all the Prelats to make use of the same Exhortations in their Diocesses, that within a very short time an infinite number of Men were list'd for that Service, and took a Voyage by Sea under the Conduct of a great many Princes and Persons of Quality. The Badge which the Soldiers wore was a Red Cross sew'd on the left Shoulder, and the Military Word, Deo

The Canons of the Council of Clermont.

We have not all the Canons which were made in this Council of Clermont compleat, but only an Abridgment of them, of which the largest is that which was made by Lambert Bishop of Arras, who was, as we said before, at that Council. They are Two and thirty in all. The First takes notice of the Days wherein the Breach of the Peace or Truce of God was made. The Second imports, that the Voyage of those who went to Jerusalem out of Devotion to deliver the Church of that City, shall serve them instead of all manner of Penances. The Third, that the Deaneries of Churches shall be bestow'd only on Priests; and the Arch-deaconeries only on Deacons. The Fourth, that the Clerks shall not bear Arms. The Fifth, that Laicks cannot be chosen Bishops, and that those who are Elected, shall be Sub-deacons at least. The Sixth, that no Person shall Sell Prebendships or any other Benefices, and that those who shall give any Money for them, shall resign them into the Hands of the Bishop. The Seventh, that the Altars bestow'd on the Congregations of Monks or Canons, after the Death of those who gave them shall be at the Disposal of the Bishops, if they have not been confirm'd to them by their Letters. The Eighth, that no Person shall exact any Duty for Burial. The Ninth and Tenth are against those Clerks who keep Concubines. The Eleventh prohibits the promoting to Holy Orders and to Ecclesiastical Dignities the Sons of Concubines; or the bestowing any Benefices upon them unless they have embrac'd the monastical or canonical Life. The Twelfth, Thirteenth and Fourteenth prohibit one and the same Person from holding two Prebendships, or two Livings in the same, or in several Churches, and from altering the Title. The Fifteenth prohibits the receiving the investiture of Livings from Lay Patrons. The Sixteenth prohibits Kings and Princes from granting the investiture of Livings. The Seventeenth prohibits Bishops and Priests from taking an Oath of Allegiance to Kings or any other Laick. The Eighteenth prohibits Laicks from having Chaplains Independent on the Bishop. The Nineteenth and Twentieth prohibit them from detaining the Tents or Churches. The One and Two and twentieth prohibit the granting Absolution to those who are in possession of another's Right, unless they make Restitution; and to those who live in the habitual Commission of any mortal Sin. The Three and twentieth prohibits Christians from Eating Flesh from Ashtwednesday till Easter. The Four and twentieth fixes the times of Ordination, viz. the four Ember Weeks, and the Saturday of the third Week in Lent: And declares that if it were possible, they should continue their Fast till Sunday Morning, that so the Celebration of Holy Orders might be on that Day. The Five and twentieth imports, that the Children of Priests, Deacons, and Sub-deacons shall not be promoted to Holy Orders, if they be not either Monks or regular Canons. The Six and twentieth, that on Holy Saturday the Fast shall last till Night. The Seven and twentieth, that the Ember Week in Spring shall be always the first Week of Lent, and that in Summer in the Whitsun Week. The Eight and twentieth, that all those who shall communicate at the Altar shall receive the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST under both Kinds, if there be no necessity or provision sion made for the Contrary. The Nine and twentieth and Thirtieth, that those who fly to a Cross, when pursued by their Enemies, shall be as secure as those who fly into a Church: And that they shall not be deliver'd up to Justice, till they are assur'd that no Violence shall be offer'd to their Lives or Members. The One and thirtieth anathematizes those who shall seize on the Revenues of the Church. And the Two and thirtieth declares that those who shall apprehend or imprison a Bishop, shall be in perpetual Disgrace, and never capable of bearing Arms.

In this very Council Pope Urban confirm'd the Primacy of the Arch-bishop of Lions, in opposition to the Arch bishop of Sens, as 'tis intimated in the Bull of Confirmation, dated the first of December in the Year, 1095. publish'd by Monsieur de Marca, with an ingenious Discourse of his own about Primacies. Richerus Arch-bishop of Sens would not submit to this Constitution; but Hugh Arch-bishop of Lions, got it ratified in the two succeeding Councils held at Tours and at Nismes: and Urban oblig'd Danibert, who succeeded Richerus, to promise that he would acknowledge the Arch-bishop of Lions for his Primar. Urban likewise in this Council adjust'd the Difference which was between the Arch-bishop of Tours and the Monks of the Monastery of S. Martins, upon condition that that Arch-bishop should not have any Station, nor perform any Office in their Church, nor be capable of Excommunicating them: Only they should receive Holy Orders and the other Sacraments from the Hands of the Arch-bishop of Tours.

The Confirmation of the Primacy of Lions.

Before the Council of Clermont broke up, the Pope appointed another Council at Tours, to be held in Lent the Year ensuing; and in his Journey thither he held a Council at Limoges in December, 1095. wherein 'tis said that he depos'd Humboldus Bishop of that City. When he arriv'd at Tours he held a Council there according to Appointment, wherein he renew'd his Exhortations to engage all manner of Persons to undertake the Expedition to the Holy-Land, and adjust'd the Differences of several Monasteries. From thence he went to Nismes, where he held another Council, wherein he gave Absolution to King Philip, who promis'd to part from Bertrade; and made Sixteen Canons.

The Council of Limoges in the Year, 1095. The Councils of Tours and Nismes in the Year, 1096.

By the First all Bishops are prohibited from bestowing Altars, Churches or Prebendships for Money: And a reservation is made to the Monks of the Altars and Tenths which they have been in possession of for Thirty Years past, upon condition that they pay the yearly Quit-rent. It is therein likewise order'd that the Monks shall not institute and induct Priests into the Churches which they possess, without the Consent of the Bishop: That they shall be instituted and inducted into them by the Bishop with the Approbation of the Abbot, and that they shall be accountable to the Bishop for the Spiritualities, and to the Abbot for the Temporalities.

The Canons of the Council of Nismes.

By the Second and Third it is prov'd by several Authorities, that the Monks may administer the Sacraments, and take upon them the Care of Souls.

The Fourth sets a Brand of Infamy upon, and Excommunicates those who dare to make the Ecclesiasticks Prisoners.

The Fifth enjoyns that after the Death of the Bishop, two Persons of Probity shall be made choice of to take care of the Revenues of his Church, and to preserve them for the use of his Successor: And excommunicates all that shall seize on them; and interdicts the Cathedral Church and the Churches that depend upon it.

The Sixth and Seventh excommunicate the Laicks who possess or detain the Revenues of the Church.

The Eighth enjoyns that those who shall receive Benefices from the Hands of Laicks shall be Suspended ab officio.

The Ninth, That those who leave a small Church to go to a great one, shall lose both of them.

The Tenth, that those who Marry their Relations shall be Excommunicated.

The Eleventh, that Ravishers who are Kill'd in the very Rape, without having done Penance, shall be depriv'd of Christian Burial, and of the Prayers of the Church.

The Twelfth, that the Priests who are guilty of Fornication shall be Depos'd.

The Thirteenth, that young Women shall not be Marry'd before they are twelve Years old.

The Fourteenth, that it is not Lawful to alien the Revenues given to the Church, nor to cite Clerks before secular Judges.

The Fifteenth, that Bishops shall not entertain those who have been Excommunicated by other Bishops.

The Sixteenth, that Monks shall not grant Burial to, nor admit to Divine Service Persons who are Excommunicated, Suspended, or are guilty of Rape.

When the Pope was return'd to Italy, he held a Council at Bari in the Year, 1098. wherein S. Anselm disputed against the Greeks about the Procession of the HOLY GHOST. He held likewise another Council about the end of the same Year at Rome, of which we have no Monument, except his granting a farther time to the King of England.

Lastly, in the Year, 1099. he call'd a grand Council at Rome the last of March, wherein he Published Eighteen Canons, which are only a Repetition of the Canons of the Council of Placentia, 1099.

The Councils of Bari and Rome in the Year, 1098. The Council of Rome in the Year, 1099.

Urban II. cenza, and of the other last Councils, against the Simoniack, and the Usurpators of the Revenues of the Church.

The Council of Roan in the Year, 1096. The Canons of the Council of Clermont were publish'd and confirm'd in a Council held at Roan in the Year, 1096. under William Arch-bishop of that City, wherein Eight Canons were made, of which the first four are about that which they call the Truce of God: That is to say, the Days wherein it is prohibited to make War, and the Persons whom 'tis not Lawful to Assault. The Fifth reserves to the Churches all the Revenues of which they were in Possession of, and prohibits Laicks from exacting any thing from them. The Sixth prohibits likewise Laicks from giving Churches to, or taking them from Priests without the Consent of the Bishop; and prohibits in general all the Faithful from wearing long Hair. The Seventh imports that Laicks shall have no Ecclesiastical Courts of Judicature. And the Eighth, that the Priests shall not be Vassals to Laicks.

CHAP. VII.

An Account of the Controversies on foot between the LATIN and the GREEK Churches in the Eleventh Century.

The Letter of Michael Cerularius and Leo of Acridia against the Church of Rome. TH^O The Latin and Greek Churches were not in a close Communion with each other ever since the Affair of Photius, yet they did not proceed to an open Rupture till the time of Pope Leo IX. and of Michael Cerularius Patriarch of Constantinople. This Breach began by a Letter which the Latter wrote in the Year, 1053. in his own Name and in the Name of Leo Arch-bishop of Acridia and of all Bulgaria, to John Bishop of Trani in Apulia, that he might communicate it to the Pope and to all the Western Church. In this Letter they reprov'd the Latins. (1.) Because they made use of unleaven'd Bread in the celebration of the Eucharist. (2.) Because they Fasted on the Saturdays in Lent. (3.) Because they Eat the Blood of Beasts, and things Strangled. (4.) Because they did not Sing ALLELUIAH in Lent. At the same time Michael Cerularius order'd the Churches of the Latins who were at Constantinople to be shut up, and to deprive the Abbots and Latin Religious, who would not renounce the Ceremonies of the Roman Church, of the Monasteries which they held in that City.

The Letter of Leo IX. to Cerularius. This Letter of Michael being brought into Italy by an Officer of the Emperor Constantine Monomachus, who went thither to carry on a Treaty with the Pope against the Normans, was communicated to Cardinal Humbert, who was at Trani; he turn'd it into Latin, and sent a Copy of it to Pope Leo. This Pope wrote upon that Subject a Letter to Cerularius and to Leo of Acridia, wherein he extols the Dignity of the Church of Rome, and complains of the unkind usage which the Greeks had shewn to the Latins at Constantinople without discanting on any of the particular Points. He only observ'd in general, that the Diversity of Ceremonies is no lawful Foundation for the breach of the unity of the Church. This is the first Letter of Leo, of which we have made mention in another place.

The Letter of the Greek Emperor to the Pope. The Greek Emperor, whose interest it was to hold it fair with the Pope, that he might still be Master of that little which he had in the West, wrote him a Letter, whereby he declares that he was willing to procure the Union of both Churches: And the Patriarch of Constantinople took notice to him likewise that he desir'd the same. The Pope who as much desired this reunion as the Greeks, as well for the Welfare of the Church, as because he was willing to be secur'd against the Normans in Apulia, the next Year sent three Legats to Constantinople, viz. Cardinal Humbert Bishop of Blanchefolva, Cardinal Frederick Arch-deacon and Chancellor of the Church of Rome; and Peter Arch-bishop of Melphi. He sent them with Letters to the Emperor and to the Patriarch, wherein he commends the Zeal which the Emperor express'd for the Peace of the Church, and complain'd of the Patriarch's Proceedings against the Church of Rome, even at a time when he pretended to be desirous of Peace. These are the sixth and seventh Letters of Leo. In that which is directed to the Patriarch he upbraids him with four Things of which mention is made * before, and which 'tis not thought fit to repeat. This Letter is dated in January, 1054.

* P. 25, 26. Humbert presents the Writings and Letters to the Emperor of Greece. The Legats being arriv'd at Constantinople on the Feast of S. John Baptist, were kindly receiv'd by the Emperor Humbert, who was the Spokesman who presented to that Prince the Pope's Letters, and gave Michael that which was directed to him. He likewise presented to the Emperor a Writing which he had Compos'd in answer to the Letter of Cerularius, with with a Refutation of the Treatise compos'd by Nicetas Pectoratus Monk of Studia, against the Practices of the Latins. The Emperor having caus'd them to be turn'd into Greek, made them to be Publish'd in Constantinople, concealing the Names of Humbert and Michael under those of Romanus and Constantinopolitanus.

In the Reply to the Letter of Cerularius, Humbert accuses the Greeks of tolerating Hereticks among them, and surpassing all of them in their Rashness; because they had the Confidence to confront the Church of Rome, and to Anathematize it openly; which never any Heretick dar'd to do. He afterwards demonstrates that 'tis a piece of Malice to accuse the Latins of imitating the Jews in Unleaven'd Bread, and in the Sabbath: Since they observe not the Ceremonies of their Passovers; and are so far from Feasting on their Sabbath, that they Fast on that Day. That this reflected rather on the Greeks, who spent the Saturday in Mirth, as if it were a festival Day. He proves that the Unleaven'd is the true Bread, and enlarges himself on the Advantages and mystical Significations, which it may have. He observes that the Bread which is offer'd in the Church of Rome is a great deal more proper and convenient than that which the Greeks make use of; because 'tis made in the Vestry with fine Wheat, and clear Water by the Ministers of the Altar, and they offer a whole Loaf: Whereas the Greeks make use of all manner of Bread, of which they cut a round Piece to put upon the Altar, and return or interr the Remainder, a Practice which Humbert Condemns as contrary to the Respect due to those Holy Mysteries. As to the second Charge, relating to the Saturday's Fast, Humbert only replies in one Word, that the Latins do not Feast on the Sabbath or Saturday, as do the Jews, neither in Lent nor out of Lent. As to the third Point relating to things Strangled, he says that the Latins make use of that Liberty which the Apostle has given them, of eating all manner of Meats; but withal observing the Custom of the Churches wherein they Live, that they might give no occasion of Offence. He adds, that they likewise abhor Eating of Blood, or the Flesh of such Animals as are Drown'd or Stifled, and that they enjoy Pennance to those who do it: But as to Beasts kill'd or taken in Hunting, 'tis their Custom to eat thereof without any Scruple. In short, as to the last Head, which relates to the omission of singing ALLELUIAH in Lent, He makes it appear that the Latins do not omit it out of any Aversion thereto; but that they look upon it as an Hymn of Thanksgiving, which is not so suitable to that holy time of Pennance and Humiliation. In this Treatise he speaks very sharply against the Greeks, whom by way of Induction he accuses of being Marcionites, Manichees, Theopaschites, &c. He upbraids them with Re-baptizing the Latins; with suffering Children to Dye without Baptism, if they be not eight Days old; with interrering the remainder of the Holy Eucharist; with permitting marry'd Men to wait at the Altars, even at a time when they have had to do with their Wives, when at the same time they refus'd to give the Communion to Women newly brought to Bed, or who have their usual Infirmities upon them; with tolerating Sarabait Monks guilty of Fornication, whereas they blam'd the Rule of S. Benedict, which allows the Monks of that Order to wear Breeches in a Journey, and to eat of Flesh when they have occasion for it; and lastly because they represent in their Crucifixes the figure of a dying Man, so that upon the Cross of JESUS CHRIST a sort of Anti-Christ is exhibited to be ador'd as a God.

Is it not a great Sign that Cardinal Humbert and the other great Men of these Times had little to do, when they thus left the Substance to hunt after the mere Shadow of Religion?

The writing of Nicetas Pectoratus, a Studite Monk, against the Latin Church is a great deal more fierce than the Letter of Michael Cerularius. He begins with an Admonition to the Latins, to hearken with Humility and Charity to the Remonstrances which he would offer to them, concerning Unleavened Bread, the Fast on Saturday, and the Marriage of Priests. Upon the first Point he says, That those who make use of Unleavened Bread are still under the shadow of the Law: That they assist at the Table of the Jews, and do not eat that Bread which is Super substantial, or Consubstantial to us; because Unleavened Bread is Dead Bread which has no Virtue or Efficacy in it: That 'tis not such Bread as is perfect, compleat, or compos'd of three Things which figure out to us the Body of JESUS CHRIST, which are the Leaven, the Meal, and the Water; representations of the Spirit, the Water, and the Blood of our Saviour. He pretends that JESUS CHRIST made use of Leaven'd Bread in the Institution of the Holy Eucharist; because he instituted it on the Thirteenth, and not on the Fourteenth Day of the Moon of March before the Feast of Unleavened Bread; and that the Apostles forbad the making use of Unleavened Bread. As to the second Point, he asks the Latins upon what they ground the Fast on Saturday, since S. Clement has instituted the Fasts on Wednesday and Friday, because JESUS CHRIST was betray'd on Wednesday, and fasten'd to the Cross on Friday: But that he prohibited the Fast on Saturday, since there was not the least colour for it. He moreover Cites the Canons of the Apostles, the Constitutions of S. Clement, and a Canon which is attributed to the sixth Council. He likewise found fault that the Latins did celebrate the whole Mass on Fast Days; and to refute this Custom he produc'd a Canon of the Apostles, several Canons of the Councils of Gangres and Laodicea, and of the Council of Trullo, which he again Cites under the name of the sixth Council, which he makes use of to Authorise the Usage

The Writing of Nicetas against the Latin Church.

Usage of the Mass of Preconsecrated Bread every Fast Day, which he sets forth in these Terms.

* The Roman Vespers.

"On Saturday and Sunday (says he) about nine a Clock we offer the Sacrifice, and Consecrate as much Bread as will serve the rest of the Week: On other Days about three a Clock in the Afternoon, when the Service is ended by the * Complines, the Priests and Deacons come in carrying a Censer; and after they have read the Prophecies, and said the Prayers prescrib'd by S. Basil, before the Altar where the Sacred Mysteries lye, we repeat the Lord's Prayer; and afterwards we elevate the Preconsecrated Bread, and say, "SANCTA SANCTIS: After which we receive the Communion of the Bread and Cup, and having return'd thanks to God, we send away the People, and those, who please, take their repast of Pulse and Water. And there are some who go the whole Week without any other Nourishment than that of the Communion. Lastly upon the last Head, which is concerning the Marriage of Priests, he ask'd the Latins who taught them to hinder marry'd Persons from being ordain'd Priests, or to force them to part from their Wives? He confuted this Custom by the Constitutions of S. Clement, and by the Council of Trullo. He concludes this Treatise with an Exhortation to the Latins to submit to his Admonitions, or to produce manifest Authorities from the Holy Scriptures to justify their Customs.

Humbert's Reply to Nicetas.

Humbert in his Reply begins with casting Reflections and Reproaches on this Monk, and took it very ill that he (contrary to the Duties of his Profession) should concern himself in writing against the Roman Church. He rejects his Thought concerning the Consubstantiality of the Leaven'd Bread, as a Chimera bred only in his own Brain; and his Application of the Passage out of S. John concerning the Spirit, the Water, and the Blood, as wresting the true Sense of the Scripture: And he takes an occasion to charge him with Heresie, because he had said that the Quickning Spirit remain'd in the Body of JESUS CHRIST after his Death. He does not enlarge himself much about the use of Unleavened Bread, supposing that he had said enough in his Reply to Michal Cerularius; he only observes that it cannot be said that JESUS CHRIST celebrated the Passover the thirteenth of the Moon of Miroh, and with Leaven'd Bread, because if it had been so, he would have been guilty of a double Breach of the Law, which he had observ'd in all its parts with the greatest strictness imaginable. He rejects the Constitutions and Canons of the Apostles, except the first Fifty, as Apocryphal Pieces. He pretends, that after the Sixth Council, the Emperor Constantine Heraclius having ask'd the Pope's Legats after what manner they celebrated the Eucharist, they return'd this Answer, viz. That they made use of Wine mingled with Water, and of Unleavened Bread; and that the Emperor approv'd of the Tradition of the Holy Apostolical See. This is a Matter of Fact of Humbert's advancing that cannot be met with in any Record: As to what concerns the Saturday's Fast, he says that since the Greeks think it requisite to Fast every Wednesday and Friday in the Year, because our Saviour was betray'd and Crucified on those Days, and since they were likewise willing to Fast on Holy Saturday, because of his remaining in the Sepulchre on that Day, they ought for the same Reason either to Fast every Saturday in the Year, or else to Fast only on the Wednesday and Friday of the Holy Week, and to celebrate Easter Sunday only in Honour of the Resurrection of our Saviour. He rejects the Canons of the Council of Trullo, as supposititious or corrupted; he disapproves of the making use of preconsecrated Bread on Fast-days, as being contrary to the Practice of the Apostles, and the example of JESUS CHRIST, who consecrated the Bread just before they distributed it. He calls Nicetas a perfidious Sterconanist, because he seems to suppose that the Eucharist broke the Fast, from whence he concludes that he believ'd that the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST were of the same nature with other Aliments, and were turn'd into Excrements. He says that in the Latin Church they usually celebrated Mass on Sundays and Holydays at the * Tierce Hour, and on Fast-days at Noon, or about Night; but that when necessity required, it might be celebrated at any Hour without breaking one's Fast. He reproves the Greeks, because in breaking the Consecrated Bread they took no Care to gather up the Crumbs which fell; because they rub'd their Patines with Leaves, or a Brush; because they croud the Consecrated Bread into their Boxes, by thrusting it down with their Hands; because in elevating the Consecrated Bread, at the Mass of the Preconsecrated Bread, they seem'd to offer one and the same Oblation twice; because they did not observe the Decretal of Pope Clement, who requir'd that no more Hosts should be Consecrated than what were sufficient for the Communicants, and that if any were left, they should not be kept till the Morrow, but be consum'd; because immediately after they had communicated they fell to Eating; because that a great many of them did not observe Lent, and because several others fasted only a Week, the which they stil'd the Lent of Theodorus. Lastly, he charges Nicetas with being a Nicolaitan, because he oppos'd the Celibacy of Priests and Deacons. He explains the Canons which prohibit Priests from parting with their Wives; of the Care which they ought to take of them, in looking upon them still as their Wives, tho' they have no Carnal Knowledge of them. He produces the Canon of the Council of Nice, concerning Women who live with Clerks, and several Authorities of the Popes, to prove that Priests ought to live chastly.

* A Popish Canonical Hour.

In short; he charges the Greeks for not ordaining Ministers till after they had oblig'd them to Marry, and concludes all by anathematizing Nicetas.

Cardinal Humbert was not satisfied with having refuted this Monk in so blunt a way, he was willing likewise to make him recant; and when he went with the Emperor and the other Legats to the Monastery of Studios, he oblig'd him to Condemn and Burn his own Writing, and to anathematize all those who deny'd that the Church of Rome was the chief Church of the World, and who dar'd to call its Doctrin into Question. The next Day Nicetas went himself to wait upon the Legats at the Palace of Pigi, without the City, where they resided; and after he had a second time Condemn'd what he had writ en or done against the Holy See, he was admitted into their Communion, and became one of their Friends. But as for Michael Cerularius he was not so forward to revoke what he had written; on the contrary he avoided meeting with the Legats, and holding any Conference with them. When the Legats perceiv'd that he continu'd Obstinate, they went July the Sixteenth, which happen'd to be a Saturday, to the Church of St. Sophia about Nine a Clock, when they were jult upon celebrating Mass; and after they had complain'd of the Obstinacy of Michael Cerularius, they lay'd on the high Altar in the presence both of Clergy and Laity, a Sentence of Excommunication against that Patriarch, drawn up in these Terms.

The Excommunication of Michael Cerularius by the Legats.

HUMBERT, by the Grace of God, Cardinal Bishop of the Holy Church of Rome, PETER Arch-bishop of Melphi, FREDERICK Deacon and Chancellor, to all the Sons of the Catholick Church Greeting.

The Holy Apostolick See of Rome, which is the Chief of the whole World, to which as to the Head belongs in a more especial manner the Care of all the Churches; has sent us to this Royal City in the quality of its Legats for the Welfare and Peace of the Church, that as it is Written, we should go down and see whether the Cries which pierce its Ears from this great City be true or no. Let therefore the Emperors, Clergy, Senate and People of this City of Constantinople know, That we have here found more Good to excite our Joy, than Evil to raise our Sorrow. For as to the supporters of the Empire, and the principal Citizens, the City is wholly Christian and Orthodox: But as for Michael, who took upon him the false title of Patriarch, and his Adherents, we have found that they have sown Disoord and Heresie in the midst of this City, because they sell the Gifts of God like the Simoniacal; because they imitate the Valesians, in causing Eunuchs to take upon them Holy Orders, and in advancing them to the Episcopacy it self; because they Re-baptiz'd, as did the Arians, these who had been Baptiz'd in the Name of the Blessed Trinity, and particularly the Latins; because with the Donatists they maintain that the Greek Church is the only true Church, and that the Sacrifices and Baptism of none else are Val'id; because with the Nicolaitans they allow of Priests cohabiting with their Wives; because with the Severians they enjoy'd the Observation of the Law of Moses; because they have struck out of the Creed the Proceßion of the Holy Ghost from the Person of the Son, as the Pneumatomachi (that is the Macedons, who deny'd the Divinity of the Holy Ghost;) because with the Manichees they ascrib'd a Soul to the Leaven'd Bread; because with the Nazarens they were such strict observers of the Legal Purity, that they would not Baptize Infants, who dy'd within eight Days after they were Born, nor admit Women in Travail, or who had the usual Infirmities of Nature upon them, to Baptism or the Communion; and lastly, because they Condemn'd and Excommunicated those who shav'd their Beards, according to the Custom of the Roman Church. Michael having been advertis'd of these Errors, and reprov'd for several other proceedings by the Letter of Pope Leo, has still persisted in them, and when that we would have apply'd a Remedy to these Evils, he refus'd to appear before, or to have any Conference with us, and has likewise forbad our entrance into the Churches to perform Divine Service therein, forasmuch as he had formerly sent up the Churches of the Latins, calling them Azymitæ, Persecuting and Excommunicating them, all which reflected on the Holy See, in contempt whereof he stil'd himself OECUMENICAL or UNIVERSAL PATRIARCH. Wherefore not being able any longer to tolerate such an unheard of Abuse as was offer'd to the Holy Apostolical See; and looking upon it as a Violation of the Catholick Faith in several Instances: By the Authority of the Holy Trinity, by the Authority of the Holy Apostolical See, whereof We are Legats, by the Authority of all the Orthodox Fathers, the Seven Councils, and the whole Catholick Church, WE do Subscribe to the Anathema which our most Holy Father the Pope has denounc'd against Michael and his Adherents, if they do not retract their Errors; and in pursuance hereof we declare that Michael, stiling himself Patriarch, a Novice, who was made Monk only by the fear of Men, one of a dissolute and Vicious Life; Leo of Acridia, stiling himself Bishop; Constantine, Michael's Chaplain, who had trodden under Foot the Sacrifices of the Latins; and all the followers of their Errors, and the abettors of their Proceedings are Anathematiz'd, with the Simonists, Valesians, Arrians, Donatists, Nicolaitans, Severians, Pneumatomachi, Manichees, Nazarens, and all the other Hereticks, or rather with the Devil and his Angels, if they do not Repent. At the same time in the presence of the Emperor and his Court they pronounc'd viva voce, an Excommunication against all those, who should contradict the Faith of the Church of Rome, or condemn it's Sacrifice ; and declar'd that such Persons ought not to be look'd upon as Christians, but as Hereticks.

The Departure of the Pope's Legats.

After they had publish'd these Excommunications, they set in order the Latin Churches; prohibited under pain of Excommunication, the receiving the Communion from the Hand of any Greek Priest, who should Condemn the Sacrifice of the Latin Church. And when they had taken leave of the Emperor, they went out of Constantinople, July the 17th, and set forward on their Journey homeward. But the Emperor caus'd them to return again on the 19th of the same Month, at the instance of Michael Cerularius, who promis'd him to enter into a Conference with them. The design of this Patriarch was to draw them into the Church of St. Sophia, under colour of holding a Council there, and to cause them to be ston'd by the People, by reading to them the Legats's Decree of Excommunication, which he had corrupted in Translating it, in order to render it the more odious. The Emperor foreseeing what would happen, would not permit the Legats to appear in any Assembly out of his Presence. Michael having refus'd this Offer, the Emperor sent the Legats away ; which incens'd that Patriarch so far, that after he had excommunicated them by a Publick Writing, he rais'd an Insurrection against the Emperor himself, who was forc'd to deliver up the Legats Interpreters, who were abus'd and cast into Prison. The Legats sent the Emperor, by his Courriers, a true Copy of the Excommunication which they had denounc'd against Cerularius, by which that Patriarch was convicted of being an Impostor. This occasion'd an entire Rupture between the Patriarch and the Emperor, who drove out of his Court all the Relations and Friends whom Michael had there, and would never have pardon'd him, if he had liv'd longer. But he dy'd the same Year, leaving the Empire to Theodora Porphyrogenita, Daughter to Constantine, and Sister to Zoe, under whom as well as under Michael Straticonus, to whom she left the Empire, dying within two Years after. Cerularius continu'd in quiet Possession of the Patriarchship, and grew so great, that he oblig'd the latter to resign the Empire in the Year 1057. to Isaac Comnenius. By this means, the Church of Constantinople was wholly separated from the Church of Rome; and these two Churches, which till then, were in a manner tolerated and treated with Respect, were look'd upon as Enemies, Schismatics and Hereticks, and became almost irreconcilable through the fault of the Greeks.

The Letter of Dominick Patriarch of Grado to Peter of Antioch.

Within a while after the Latins endeavour'd to withdraw Peter Patriarch of Antioch from Communion with the Patriarch of Constantinople. They thought this the more feasible because that Patriarch immediately after his Advancement, had writ to Pope Leo, who had return'd him an Answer, whereby he approv'd of the Profession of Faith which he had sent him, and took notice to him, of his being very well inclin'd to carry on the Union of both Churches. The Patriarch of Grado nam'd Dominick, who held the greatest Correspondence with the Greeks, because the Provinces of Venice and Istria belong'd to his Patriarchship, was order'd to write to Peter of Antioch about it. He did it in such a manner as might have engag'd that Patriarch to enter into the Interests of the Church of Rome. For in the beginning of his Letter he declares, that without mentioning the Submission, the Deference, and the Amity which ought to be had for the Church of Antioch, which is the Sister of the Church of Rome, and the second Church of the World : The Reputation of his Piety and the particular Esteem which he had for his Person, inclin'd him to desire an Interest in his Respects, and to wish to be in an entire Friendship with him. He tells him that he thought himself oblig'd to let him know that his Church had been Founded by St. Mark, that St. Peter conferr'd upon it the Dignity of a Patriarchal See, and that he had the Right of Pope in the Councils which were held in Italy : That he would inform him upon what these Privileges were Founded, when they could come to have a Correspondence with each other by Letters, but that at present he only wrote to him to have the happiness of being acquainted with him, and to begin a Friendship which might be hereafter Corroborated : That however he could not forbear acquainting him, that he understood that the Clergy of Constantinople blam'd the Church of Rome, because it celebrated the Holy Mysteries with Unleaven'd Bread, and believ'd by reason of that, that the Latins were separated from the Unity of the Church ; that tho' the Latins make use of Unleaven'd Bread, according to the Tradition of JESUS CHRIST and the Apostles, yet they Condemn'd not the Custom of the Greek Church, because as the mixture of Leaven with the Meal may be the Figure of the Incarnation of JESUS CHRIST, so the Unleaven'd Bread may likewise represent the Purity of the Flesh of JESUS CHRIST. That therefore he thought it expedient that he should advertise the Greeks not to Condemn the Custom of the Latins, nor to maintain that all their Sacrifices were null, and that they were out of the Road to Eternal Salvation.

The Answer of Peter of Antioch, to the Patriarch of Grado.

Peter Patriarch of Antioch, answer'd him with a great deal of Integrity, without approving of his Opinion concerning the use of Unleaven'd Bread, or his Pretensions concerning the Patriarchship. For he makes it appear to him by his Letter, that there were never acknowledg'd in the Church any more than Five Patriarchs, and that the Bishops of the Capital Cities of Provinces, greater than His, never assum'd this Quality. And with respect to the use of Unleaven'd Bread, he at first excuses the Patriarch of Constantinople, by saying, that he does not absolutely Condemn the Latins as Hereticks ; but was only sorry that they swerv'd from the ancient Tradition of the Church, and did not make use of Perfect, but of Unleaven'd Bread, in Imitation of the Jews. He afterwards opposes this Usage by several Arguments, but particularly by the Passages of the Gospel, which seem to prove that JESUS CHRIST instituted the Eucharist before the Feast of the Passover, and at a time when they did not as yet make use of Unleaven'd Bread. At the Close of his Letter he takes notice that two Years ago he had wrote to Pope Leo in the beginning of his Popedom, to which he had not as yet received any Answer, and that he desir'd he might have a Sight of this.

Michael Cerularius on the contrary wrote to Peter of Antioch, to engage him to declare openly against the Church of Rome. After he had thank'd him in the beginning of his Letter, for having at his Recommendation granted to a Deacon a Place which he had demanded of him, he gives him to understand, that having some time since heard that the late deceased Pope was a Virtuous, Honest and Learned Man, he had writ to him with a great deal of Humility about the Re-union of the two Churches, in order to procure his Favour, that he might give some Assistance to the Greeks against the Normans: That having committed this Letter to an Officer of the Emperors, who carry'd likewise another from that Prince, they were put into the Hands of Duke Argyrus, who detain'd them, as well as the Money which the Emperor had sent by that Officer: That Argyrus thought fit to send three Persons to Constantinople in the quality of Legats of the Holy See, whereof one had formerly been Arch-bishop of Melphi, who he understood had been turn'd out of his Church five Years ago: Another had only the Title of Arch-bishop, but where his Diocess lay none could tell; and to the Third he had given the Title of Chancellor: That these Three Men having accosted the Emperor with a fierce and arrogant Air, caused the Crois and the Pastoral Rod to be carry'd before them: That afterwards they gave him a Visit, but in a way of Insolence and Contempt: And that without saluting him, or paying him the Respects which were due to him, they clasp'd into his Hands a Letter sealed up, which contain'd the same things concerning Unleaven'd Bread, as Argyrus had formerly advanc'd whilst he stay'd at Constantinople, for the which he had been Excommunicated: But that having examin'd the Seal he found it was false, and that it was nothing but a piece of Forgery of this Argyrus, as he had afterwards been assur'd by the Arch-bishop of Trani, and by his Chancellor, who had unravel'd the whole Mystery to him. After he had given this Account of that Transaction, he says, That it was Reported of him that he inserted the Names of the Popes in the Church Registers, and that the Patriarchs of Alexandria and Jerusalem did the same: That however he did not suppose them so Ignorant, but that they knew that since the time of Pope Vigilius, who would not pronounce an Anathema against the Writings of Theodoret, and the Letter of Ibas, there was no notice taken of the Bishops of Rome, in the Churches of the East: That he likewise heard, that these two Patriarchs admitted to their Communion those who celebrated with Unleaven'd Bread, and that they made use of the same sometimes themselves: That not being fully satisfied of this matter of Fact, he left him to the Liberty of inquiring into it, and desired he would send him Word how the Case was: That moreover he had read the Letter which he had written to the Patriarch of Grado, wherein he oppos'd the making use of Unleaven'd Bread: But that the Latins hold a great many other Errors, which ought to be rejected; such as believing that one might Eat Things Strangled, that Men ought to be Shaven, to observe the Sabbath, to Eat unclean Things, that Monks might be permitted to Eat Flesh and Bacon: That one might Eat Flesh in the first Week of Lent, and in the Weeks wherein one ought to abstain from Flesh and Milk, as well as on every Wednesday in the Year: That they were guilty of Eating Cheese and Eggs in the Holy Week; of Fasting on Saturdays, all of them being Customs belonging to the Jews; of having added to the Creed, that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and the Son; of not permitting Priests to be Married; of allowing two Brothers to Marry two Sisters; of observing that one of the Ministers of the Altar who has Eaten Unleaven'd Bread, shall embrace the rest in the Sacrifice, by giving Pax Vobis to them; of giving to the Bishops a Ring which they wear on their Thumb; of Baptizing only with one Immersion; of not honouring the Relicks of the Saints, and several of them not so much as Images; of not reckoning among the Saints the Doctors of the Greek Church, such as St. Gregory the Theologian, St. Basil the Great and St. Chrysostom the Divine, and of not observing their Doctrin: But what is more strange is, that when they were at Constantinople they declar'd that they were not come to enter into a Dispute, nor to be inform'd of the Differences that might be between them, but to teach and perswade others to hold their Tenets.

There is likewise another Letter of Cerularius to the same Patriarch of Antioch, wherein he gave him a particular Account of what the Pope's Legats, (whom he still imagins to be Impostors sent by Argyrus, who had trump'd up these false Letters) had done against him at Constantinople, by excommunicating him, and exhorts that Patriarch to joyn with him in revenging the Affront.

The Answer of Peter of Antioch to Michael Cerularius.

Peter of Antioch reply'd to Michael Cerularius, That he wonder'd that Argyus, who was a Laick, should concern himself in the disposal of the Affairs of the Church, and make use of such Artifices as he had acquainted him with: That the Name of the Pope was not in the Registers of the Church of Antioch; but that it could not be truly said that even since the Time of Pope Vigilius, the Name of the Bishop of Rome had been left out of the Registers of the Greek Church: That it was a gross Omission in his Secretary; since in the Sixth Council, held One hundred and twenty nine Years after Vigilius, Pope Agatho was recogniz'd: That when he himself was at Constantinople, about Five and forty Years ago, in the Time of Damianus the Patriarch, he found the Name of Pope Sergius in the Registers among the rest of the other Patriarchs; and that he could not tell upon what Grounds it had since been left out: That of the Errors and Faults which in his Letter he attributed to the Latins, there were some which ought to be avoided and abhor'd, several others which it were easie to remedy; and lastly, others at which it would be proper to connive. "For (says he) what is it to Us, if their Bishops do shave their Beards, and wear Rings on their Fingers? Do not we make a Crown upon our Heads, and do not we wear Gloves, Maniples and Stoles embroyder'd with Gold? Will not you likewise find some of our Monks who eat Flesh and Bacon? Do not the Monks of Bethinia, Thrace and Lydia, eat Magpies, Jays and Turtle-Doves? Do not the Holy Fathers leave us at liberty to eat indifferently of all manner of Things which God has Created? In particular he demonstrates, that St. Basil and St. Pacomius allow'd their Religious to eat Bacon. But he does not pass the same Judgment on what was added to the Creed, and he pretends that 'tis a very great abuse, as well as to Baptize with only one Immersion: However, he thinks it requisite to be of a Temper inclinable to Peace, because the Latins are their Brethren, altho' through Rusticity or Ignorance, they might be in some Errors: That so punctual an exactness could not be expected from Barbarians; that it was very well that they held the true Doctrin about the Trinity and the Incarnation: That he blam'd them for their Custom relating to the Celibacy of Priests, and for their eating Flesh and Cheese the first Week in Lent. That as to the Question about Unleavened Bread, he had handled that in the Letter which he wrote to the Patriarch of Venice; and that he was of Opinion, that every Church ought therein to observe its ancient Customs; that as to that part of their Charge, of eating Things strangled, and of allowing one and the same Person to Marry two Sisters; it was to be believ'd, that this was not among them by the approbation of the Pope and the Bishops, but by the abuse of some particular Persons, as there are a great many of the same Nature in the East, which 'tis very difficult to abolish. That moreover, he ought to insist particularly on the Addition to the Creed, and on the Marriage of Priests: That with Respect to the other Articles, it was not requisite to stand much upon them, because they are such as do not concern the Faith, and because most of them are false. That therefore he thought it proper, that being thus inclin'd, he should write to the Pope who was to be elected, who perhaps would disown what is impos'd on the Latins, or else alter his Mind: That no Person can imagine that the Romans do not honour Relicks and Images, since they set so high a Value on the Relicks of St. Peter and St. Paul; since Pope Adrian by his Legats was President of the Seventh Council, and Condemn'd the Iconoclasts; and since it was observable that several Images were brought from Rome, and that the Latins honour'd them. He therefore conjur'd the Patriarch of Constantinople to think upon an Accommodation, and to require nothing of the Latins beside the striking out the Addition which they had made to the Creed. Lastly, He acquaints him that he sends him Indors'd, the Letter which Pope Leo had written to him; and that the Letters which he had directed to the Patriarchs of Alexandria and Jerusalem, he had convey'd to them. These Four Letters have been Publish'd in Greek and Latin by Monsieur Cotelier, in the second Tome of his Monuments of the Greek Church.

A New Attempt made for the Re-uniting the Greek and the Latin Churches. The Banishment of Cerularius.

Tho' this Action of Cardinal Humbert seem'd to put a stop to the Re-union of the two Churches, yet the Popes were not quite out of hopes of bringing it about. For this purpose, Stephen IX. resolv'd upon sending Didier Abbot of Mount Cassin, and two other Legats to Constantinople, who set forward upon that design in the beginning of the Year 1058. but being detain'd at Bari by the badness of the Season, they there heard the News of that Pope's Death, and return'd home again. That same Year Michael Cerularius building too much upon the Obligation under which the Emperor Isaac Comnenus lay to him, was for assuming to himself too great an Authority, threatening the Emperor himself, That if he did not follow his Councils, he would be an Instrument of making him lose that Crown which he had procur'd for him. This impudent Boldness, and his Pride in wearing Purple colour'd Shoes and Stockings, and in saying, That there was no difference between the Sacerdotal Office and the Empire, made Isaac resolve to Out him. But so far as Michael was belov'd by the People of Constantinople, he took an opportunity to cause him to be apprehended, when he went on the Feast of All-Saints to perform his Office in a Church of the Suburbs of that City. He sent thither several of his Soldiers, who pull'd the Patriarch out of his Episcopal Chair, and carry'd him immediately to the next Sea-Port, where they embark'd him and his Relations, to be convey'd into Exile to Proconessus. The Emperor had a great mind to cause him to be depos'd in a Council; but he durst not attempt it, because Michael was a Man of great Parts, and had great Friends. The death of that Patriarch put an end to his Troubles, but made no alteration in the Affairs of the Church; nor did it procure the Re-union of the two Churches, which ever after remain'd divided, tho' frequent attempts have been made to reunite them, and tho' there have been several Treaties between them, which never lasted long, by reason of the Inconstancy of the Greeks.

and

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Life and Writings of PETER DAMIEN, Cardinal Bishop of OSTIA.

PETER surnam'd Damien from the Name of his Brother, was born at Ravenna the beginning of the Eleventh Century. He was descended from an honourable Family, and his Parents took care to bestow upon him good Education; and in his very Youth he was noted for his singular Piety. After he had went through the whole course of his Studies, he retir'd into the Monastery of the Holy Cross of Avellane near Engulio, the Monks of which place are call'd Hermits, because they spent their Lives in great Retirement, tho' in Common and under an Abbot. He was call'd by Guy Abbot of Pomposio to reform his Monastery. At two Years end he return'd to Avellane, where he was made Prior, and afterwards Abbot of that Monastery, which in a short time he augmented, and Founded several others, where the same Rule was observ'd. He was in so great a Repute and Esteem, that he was nominated Cardinal, and made Bishop of Ostia by Pope Stephen IX. He likewise held by way of Commendam the Bishoprick of Engulio, and began to have a great share in the Affairs of the Church of Rome. In the Year 1059. under the Pontificat of Nicholas II. he was sent Legat to Milan, to reform the Clergy of that Church, where Simony was publickly practis'd. He acquitted himself in this Legation with a great deal of Authority and Prudence, and return'd after he had caus'd an Order to be made, to prevent this and such like disorders for the time to come. Some time after, he resolv'd upon quitting his Bishopricks, and the Employments which he had at large in the World, and to retire into Solitude; he thereupon resign'd them into the Hands of Pope Alexander II. and return'd back to his own Monastery. However, this did not prevent him from having great concerns with the Popes, Bishops and Noblemen, who ask'd his Advice, and made use of him in Matters of the highest Importance. Alexander II. sent him as his Legat into France, to put an end to the Difference there on Foot between the Bishop of Mascon and the Abbot of Cluny, concerning the Privileges of that Abbey. He held a Council at Challons, wherein he made several Orders; confirm'd the Privileges granted by the Popes to the Abbey of Cluny, and made the Bishop of Mascon to consent thereto. He was likewise sent by the same Pope to Florence, to put a stop to the Schism which was between Peter, Bishop of that City, and his Clergy. Afterwards in the Year 1068. he went as Legat into Germany, to hinder the Emperor Henry from being divorc'd from his Wife Bertha. Some time after he took a Journey to the Monastery of Mount Cassin, to console the Religious of that place. Lastly, In the Year 1072. he was sent by the same Pope to Ravenna, to take off the Excommunication issu'd, a long time since, against that City, because of the Differences which Henry Bishop of Ravenna, lately deceas'd, had with the Holy See. After he had discharg'd the Commission, he dy'd the 23d of February the Year ensuing at Fayance, being Sixty six Years Old.

The Works of this Author, in the last Edition, are divided into Four Tomes.

The First contains the Letters, rang'd in Eight Books, according to the Quality of the Persons to whom they were written; of which the First is compos'd of the Letters which are directed to the Popes.

The First is to Gregory VI. whom he congratulates upon his advancement to the Poppedom, exhorts to root out Simony, and admonishes to depose the Bishop of Pesaro. His Letters to the Popes.

The Second is directed to the same Pope; he gives him to understand, That the Man who was elected Bishop of Fossombrona, was not altogether worthy of the Episcopacy, because of his Ambition; but that yet he was to be preferr'd to a great many others, and that in other Respects he had the Qualifications necessary to a Bishop.

The Third is to Clement II. to whom he writes word, That the Emperor had order'd him to wait upon him, to inform him of the Abuses of several Churches, and of what he thought necessary to put a stop to them; that being upon his Journey, he had receiv'd a Letter from that Prince which was directed to him; that being return'd to his Solitude he sent it to him, where he waits for his Orders to depart. He declares on the one Hand, That he would be very well satisfied to be excus'd from the Journey, that so he might not lose his Time in going and coming; but that on the other hand, he could not but be mov'd with the mis-able Condition of the Churches of his Country, which were in a strange Confusion, by reason of the Irregularity of the Bishops and Abbots. He remonstrates to him, That it signified nothing that the Holy See was pass'd from Darknes to Light, if the rest of the Churches were still in Darknes, and exhorts him to apply some speedy Remedy to these Evils, and to punish the Bishop of Fano.

The Fourth is to Leo IX. He therein complains for that this Pope had given too lightly Credit to the Calumnies rais'd against him, and he calls God to witness how Innocent he was.

The Fifth is to Victor II. He remonstrates to this Pope, That he ought to protect a Lord who had devoted himself to the Service of God, and whom they would dispossess of his Estate.

The Sixth, directed to Nicholas II. is amongst the Opuscula of this Author, of which it makes the Seventeenth.

The Seventh is to the same Pope. He congratulates him for that the Church was in Peace under his Pontificate; and Petitions him in behalf of the Inhabitants of Ancona, who had been excommunicated.

In the Eighth, directed to Pope Nicholas and the Arch-deacon Hildebrand, he desires to quit his Bishoprick, since they had divested him both of his Sacerdotal Habits, and of his Reverence.

The Ninth and Tenth are among the Opuscula, and they make the Nineteenth and Twentieth of them.

The Eleventh is directed to Alexander II. He recommends to him the Church of Orleans which was then in Trouble.

The Twelfth, directed to the same Pope, is very considerable. He therein reproves two Abuses, which he says were too frequently practis'd by the Court of Rome in his Time, and he intreats the Pope to redress them. The First is, That in almost all the Decretals, the Penalty of Excommunication was inserted. The Second is, That the Clerks and Laicks were hinder'd from reproving the Vices of their Bishops. "The First (says he) makes the Salvation of Men very dangerous; because Persons are often excommunicated without knowing any thing of it, and that for Things of little or no Consequence; the most trivial Faults being punish'd with the same Penalty as the more heinous ones: They punish a Man more rigorously for having violated an humane Law, than ever God does for the breaking of his Commands. He says, That St. Gregory and the other Popes had no such Custom, and that they seldom pronounc'd an Anathema in their Decretals, except when the Faith was in dispute. He therefore conjures this Pope to abolish this Custom, and for the future to strike this Clause out of their Decretals, by assigning some other Penalty in its stead. As to the other Abuse, which supposes that it is not lawful for Inferiours to accuse their Bishops in a Superior Court, or to alledge against them what ought to be Corrected. "This (says he) is a very unreasonable Thing, and contrary to the Discipline of the Church. For to whom can one better address ones self to discover the Faults, which a Bishop commits, than to him who has the Office of a Master, and who has the Pre-eminence among his Brethren, to correct the Faults of the Bishops, according to the Privilege of his See? And is it not a piece of insupportable Arrogance, Pride and Vanity, that a Bishop shall live as he pleases, and not condescend to harken to the Complaints of those who are under him, in things wherein he may be deceiv'd; especially when they do not apply themselves to secular Judges, but to Bishops, that they may honourably and gravely redress those Grievances which might attract the Smiles of the Laity? Is it not reasonable, that he who is accus'd should justify and Clear himself, or else acknowledge his Faults? To this he subjoins the Example of St. Peter, who did not make use of his Authority to reject the Complaints of the Faithful, who took it ill that he should Preach the Gospel to the Gentiles, but gave them a reason for this his Proceeding. To this Instance he adds that of David, who acknowledged his Offence when he was reprov'd for it by Nathan; the Example of Mary, who suffer'd the Reproof of her Sister Martha; and another Instance of St. Peter, who did not take it ill that St. Paul rebuk'd him. Afterwards he starts this Objection: "But I am Bishop; I am the Pastor of the Flock, I am not to be accus'd by those who ought to be subject to me, and whom I ought to lead; they ought patiently to suffer my Failings. And to this he answers, that in the Gospel it is said, That we ought to declare to the Church the Faults of our Brethren, when they do not amend after they had been privately reprov'd; the which being express'd in general Terms, ought to be understood as well of the Faults of Bishops, as of the Faults of the rest of the Faithful; that if the Bishop would not submit to the Laws of the Church, who would? Lastly, He concludes, That nothing would more conduce to the abating the Pride of Bishops, who valued themselves too much upon the account of their Divinity, to the maintaining of Peace, and to prevent Tyranny, than to suffer Inferiours to have recourse to a Superior Authority, and to Synods, there to prefer their Complaints against their Bishops.

In the Thirteenth, directed to the same Pope, he opposes an Error which grew very prevalent in his Time; to wit, That it was not Simony to buy a Bishoprick of a King, or any other other Prince; provided nothing was given for Consecration. Two Chaplains of Prince Godfrey Marquis of Tuscany, had broach'd this Doctrin, and maintain'd it by saying, That in this Case, they do not buy either the Sacerdotal Office or the Church, but only the Temporalities and the enjoyment of the Revenues. Peter Damien makes it appear that this is a Fallacy; because since a Man cannot be divided into two distinct Persons, whereof one shall enjoy the Temporalities, and the other perform the Spiritual Functions, when he buys the Temporalities, which he cannot enjoy till he be advanc'd to the Ecclesiastical Dignity, and perform the Functions thereof; it may be truly said, That he buys the Ecclesiastical Dignity and the Sacrament too. This he proves, because the Prince in granting the Investiture of a Bishoprick does not give a meer Rod only, but the Pastoral Rod, and the Title of Priesthood, the Sacrament whereof is receiv'd by the Ordination. He adds, That 'tis only in pursuance of this nomination of the Prince that the Man is ordain'd, and therefore tho' he does not directly give Money for his Ordination, yet it cannot be said to be gratuitous, since Money made the way for him. Afterwards carrying this Thought a little farther, he says, "When the Prince has put the Pastoral Rod into your Hands, did he say, 'Receive the Lands and Revenues of such or such a Church?' No. Did he not say to you, 'Receive this Church?' If you pretend to have receiv'd the Revenues of the Church without the Church, you are a Schismatick, and guilty of Sacrilege; and if you receiv'd the Church by this Investiture, as you must needs own, then you are guilty of Simony. Lastly, He says, That the possession of the Ecclesiastical Revenues, and the Consecration are so closely connected together, that he who receives the Right of possessing the Revenues of the Church, cannot enjoy them till he be consecrated, and that he who is consecrated, ought necessarily to have the management of the Revenues of the Church. To conclude, He confirms these Maxims by several Passages taken out of the Decretals; and shews that it is not only Simony to buy and sell Bishopricks and great Benefices, but also to buy and sell small Benefices, such as Curacies and Prebendships. In the close, he exhorts the Pope to Condemn the Error, which he had refuted in this Letter, and not to permit any Persons to be promoted to the Priesthood, who have acquir'd it by Money, or (which he pretends to be more blameable) by any Services which they have done for their Princes.

In the Fourteenth, he makes his Complaints to Alexander II. for that he had abus'd and rais'd a Disturbance in the Church of Engubio, which had been committed to his Care, by the Predecessors of that Pope. He puts him in mind of the Obligations which he lay under to him, which deserv'd quite another sort of usage, and takes notice that if satisfaction were not done him, he would make his just Grief to break out the more. He likewise intreated him to take off the Excommunication which he had issu'd out against the Arch-bishop of Ravenna, whom he look'd upon to be very unfortunate; because it was an unworthy thing that so great a multitude of Men should be in danger of perishing for the fault of one single Man.

The Fifteenth is an Answer to a Letter of that Pope, who complain'd that he had not wrote to him, being too much taken up with Contemplation. He gives him to understand, That indeed he did enjoy a little more Repose, since he had quitted the Episcopacy; but that still he was taken up with a great many Visits, and a multiplicity of Business, and was so highly concern'd at the disorders of the World, that he had neither Time nor Courage to write. This gave him an occasion to describe the corrupted Manners of his Time. Afterwards he conjures the Pope, who had taken from him the Earldom of Ostia, to discharge him likewise from his Bishoprick. Lastly, He exhorts him to use his utmost endeavours to reform the Church, and concludes his Letter with Eight Verses, which puts him in mind of his Duty.

In the Sixteenth, directed to the same Pope and to Hildebrand, he excuses himself for having wrote to the Arch-bishop of Cologne, by sending to them the Copy of his Letter, thereby to let them know that they had no reason to be offended at it. He excus'd himself likewise from taking a Journey to Rome, to which they had summon'd him; but does not refuse to go to Mantua, because he thought that Journey would turn to greater Account.

The Three next Letters are among his Opuscula; the two first are the Three and Four and twentieth of these Opuscula, and the last is the Life of St. Radulphus.

The Twentieth is directed to Cadalous Bishop of Parma, the Antipope, whom he extremely upbraided, for having caus'd himself to be elected Bishop of Rome; or at least, for having permitted it: He made it appear that his Election is Adulterate, Schismatical, Heretical and Vicious. (1.) Because he had been elected, whilst the Holy See was fill'd with a Lawful Pope. (2.) Because he had not been elected by the Cardinals, who have the greatest share in the Election of a Pope, nor by the Clergy and Laity of Rome; but by two Bishops of a bad Life, and who had no Right in this Election. (3.) Because the Church of Rome would not acknowledge him. Afterwards he threatens him with the judgments of God, and with a speedy Correction.

This Letter made no Impression on Cadalous; on the contrary, that Bishop came to Rome with an Army; and became Master of it by Force. Upon this Peter Damien wrote him a second Letter more vehement than the former, wherein he compares him to the most cruel Tyrants, Peter Damien, Cardinal Bishop of Ostia. His Letters to the Cardinals.

Tyrants, and puts him in mind of the Punishment inflicted on the Bishop of Placenza, who had usurp'd the Holy See by such like Methods, in turning out Gregory IV.

The Second Book contains the Letters which Peter Damien wrote to the Cardinals.

The First is directed to the Cardinals of the Church of Lateran; he exhorts them to bear a strict Watch over themselves and others, that they may be Exemplary in so corrupted an Age. He therein shews how the Lives of Bishops ought to be Holy and Unblameable. He declaims against Bishops who are Ambitious, against those who follow the Court, and who enter into the Service of Grandees, in order to obtain Ecclesiastical Preferments by way of recompence. He says, That there are three sorts of Presents, which are alike prohibited for the gaining of Benefices: Munus a Manu, Munus ab obsequio, Munus a lingua; that is, Money, Presents, and Flatteries. After he had inveig'd sufficiently against this Abuse, he exhorts the Cardinals to lead such exemplary Lives, as might serve as a Pattern to the Bishops and all the Clergy.

The Two next Letters are in the Opuscula, the one is the Two and twentieth, and the other the One and thirtieth.

The Fourth is directed to Boniface Cardinal of Albania, and to Stephen the Priest: He recommends to them an Abbot of the Monastery of St. Apollinaris.

The Fifth directed to Cardinal Hildebrand Arch-deacon of Rome, and to Peter the Priest; contains a great many Mystical Reflections about the Sabbath, and the Six days of the Creation.

In the Sixth, directed to the same Persons, he ingenuously complains of Alexander II. his taking away from him a Book which he had compos'd; he commends this Pope, declaims against Cadalous, and makes mention of what he had suffer'd in the Service of the Holy See.

The Seventh is likewise amongst the Opuscula, of which it makes the Two and thirtieth.

In the Eighth, he complains that Hildebrand, to whom he had written, not only took no notice of him, and return'd him no Answer, but likewise spoke very much to his disadvantage. He puts him in mind what Services he had done to the Holy See, and to him in particular. Lastly, He declares to him, That he surrender'd up to him the Bishoprick which had been bestow'd on him.

In the Ninth, he makes his complaint to the same Person, for having too lightly given Credit to his Enemies, who had told him, That he had founded a Monastery in a place where he had no Right to do it. He made it appear that it had been granted to him by the Uncle of Guy, who was the Person who complain'd that the Monastery had been built on his Demeans.

The Tenth is amongst the Opuscula, and makes the Eighteenth.

The Three next Letters are directed to Didier Abbot of Mount Cassin and Cardinal of St. Cecilia, to whom he gives a great many wholesome Advices about his Conduct; as for Instance, To have always an Eye upon his Faults, and not to regard his Virtues; to be glad when he was reprov'd by others; not to slight, but to correct, as his Duty requir'd him, the Faults of those who were committed to his Charge; to say no ill of the Absent, but to reprove those who were Faulty face to face; to have a due Veneration for Fast-days, and often to celebrate the Holy Sacrifice, that so, says he, the old Serpent seeing your Lips tinctur'd with the Blood of JESUS CHRIST, may tremble for fear, retire in Confusion, and not approach to the Sacrament, which has made him a Captive.

The Five others, directed to the same Person, are among the Opuscula, of which they make the Thirty third, the Thirty fourth, the Thirty fifth, the Thirty sixth and the Thirty seventh.

The Nineteenth is a Letter of Compliment and Friendship, to Peter a Cardinal and Chancellor.

The Two last make the Thirty seventh of the Opuscula.

The Third Book is compos'd of the Letters directed to Arch-bishops; the Number of those is but small.

The First is the Eight and thirtieth of the Opuscula.

The Second is directed to Gebhard Arch-bishop of Ravenna, who had desir'd him to come to him. He excus'd himself for not obeying him, because he had not wherewithal to undertake this Journey; being Poor himself, and having the Government of a very poor Monastery in his Hands. He commends this Arch-bishop, gives him a great deal of Good Council, and conjures him to give him no further Trouble.

In the Third, he declares to that Prelate what a great Affection he bore to him, and exhorts him to turn out the Bishops of Fano and Pesaro, who were Men of an infamous Life, and guilty of several Crimes.

The Fourth is directed to Henry Arch-bishop of Ravenna, who had sent to know what his Opinion was concerning the Elections of Cadalous and Alexander. He returns him this Answer, That the Latter is the lawful Pope, and the other is a Simonist and an Intruder: And after-afterwards making a Comparison between the Manners and the Genius of both; he says that Alexander II. is a Man of Parts, Learning and Piety, and that he is Chast and Charitable: Whereas Cadalous is not able to explain one Line. Lastly, he declares to him that he cannot conceal his own particular Sentiment, and that he thinks himself oblig'd to avow freely what he thinks, and stiffly to maintain the Truth and Honour of the Holy See.

Peter Damien, Cardinal Bishop of Ostia.

The Fifth is directed to a third Arch-bishop of Ravenna nam'd Wigbert. He complains of the severity which that Arch-bishop shew'd to him and his Monastery. He intreats him to forbear oppressing him by exacting Money still from him, even after he had been divested of part of his Demeans.

The Sixth is to Anno Arch-bishop of Cologne: He commends him for the Care he had taken of Henry the Emperor's Son, who had been committed to his Trust by that Prince; and for having declar'd himself against Cadalous; and exhorts him to continue and use his utmost endeavours, that a general Council might be held to put an End to the Schism.

The Seventh is a Letter of Compliment to the Arch-bishop of Milan, whom he thanks with a great deal of Address and Neatness, for the Sacerdotal Habits which he had bestow'd upon him.

The Three next are among the Opuscula, of which they make the Twenty fifth, the Thirty fourth and the Thirty ninth.

The Fourth Book contains the Letters of Peter Damien directed to Bishops.

His Letters

The First is written to Bishop Albert: He exhorts him to do his Duty, and to lead an unblameable Life. In a more especial manner he advises him to be Charitable, and to be ware of Avarice and Simony.

to the Bishop.

In the Second he thanks a Bishop for the Alms which he had bestow'd on his Monastery, and exhorts him to add the other Virtues to his Liberality. Lastly, he intreats him to confer the Order of Deacon on Two Clerks, which he sent him, and who had obtain'd a Dispensation from their Bishop for it.

The Third is among the Opuscula, and is compris'd in the Eighteenth.

In the Fourth to the Bishop of Osimo, he makes use of the great number of Dead Persons which he found in his Return, as a Motive to persuade that Bishop not to put off his Conversion.

In the Fifth he gives us a lively and frightful Description of the last Judgment, to persuade him to whom he wrote to lead a Life becoming a Christian.

In the Sixth he exhorts another Bishop to a Contempt of this World.

In the Seventh he advises the Bishop to whom he wrote, to receive no Presents; and upon that Account he relates a Vision that had happen'd to a Priest, who had seen the Confessor of Count Hildebrand punish'd in the other World, for having receiv'd Presents from him; And that Count himself in Torments for not having Repented of his Cruelties, so as he ought to have done, by the over Indulgence of his Confessor. The same Priest said, that he likewise saw Count Lotharius in a Fire of Brimstone, who intreated him to admonish his Family to reftore to the Church a Territory which belong'd to it, that so by this means he might be thoroughly deliver'd from his Torments, and that he understood that Count Guy was suddenly expected in that very Place, where several Torments were preparing for him. After the Relation of this Vision, Peter Damien says, That it was not requisite to receive Presents indifferently from all sorts of Persons; but only from such as were wellpleasing to God, because the Gifts of the Wicked are dangerous.

In the Eighth he exhorts the Bishop of Engubio to redeem the Revenues and the Ornaments of his Churches which were given or Mortgag'd to Laicks. He likewise gives him several good instructions about the Virtues which he ought to put in Practice, and relates the untimely End of Pope John XII. which happen'd that very Day, wherein his Guards pull'd out the Eyes of an Holy Abbot.

In the Ninth directed to the Bishop of Fermo, after he had with a great deal of Modesty rejected the Title of Holiness, which that Bishop had bestow'd upon him, He bewails the Misfortunes and Irregularities of his Age, which inclin'd him to think that the End of the World was at Hand. More particularly he declaims against the Schism of Cadalous, and against the Liberty which at that time was granted to the Bishops and other Ecclesiasticks, of maintaining their Rights and Properties with a Sword in their Hand. He makes it appear that War and Revenge is downright contrary to the Genius and Spirit of the true Church, which breaths forth nothing but Peace, and is for Pardoning all Mankind, that nothing than them can be more dissonant to the Life which JESUS CHRIST himself led upon Earth, and which he propos'd as an Example to his Followers, when he Taught to Suffer with Patience, and not to Revenge by Force the Injuries offer'd them: That Lastly, the Difference between the Regal and Sacerdotal Power lay in this, that the King makes use of Material Arms, but the Priest of the Sword of the Spirit, viz. the Word of God: That since it had never been allow'd to take up Arms for the Defence of the Faith, much less was it Lawful to take them up for the maintenance of temporal and transitory litary Goods: And that if the Saints of old never put any Heretick or Idolater to Death, but rather suffer'd Death themselves; With what face could any of the Faithful

[This is sound and orthodox Doctrin which Peter Damien here Preaches, and such as is consonant to the Doctrin and Practice of the primitive Christians: But how dissimant to the Spirit and Genius and Practice of the present Church of Rome, let their Fire and Faggot, their Inquisitions and Dragooning, and the Doctrin of your new Doctors the Jesuites Speak.]

Kill his Brother, who was purchas'd and redeem'd by the precious Blood of JESUS CHRIST, only for the loss of mere perishable and contemptible Things? Afterwards he relates an Instance of an Abbot of France, who wou'd not by Force and Violence oppose a certain Great Lord, who was marching towards him with arm'd Souldiers to fall upon him; but went to meet him with his Monks unarm'd, with only the Cross carry'd before them. This Action so much surpriz'd that Lord and all his Men, that instead of offering them any harm, they begg'd them Pardon, and threw themselves at their Feet. Lastly he says, that if any one should object that St. Leo ('tis Leo IX. he here means and not Leo I.) did engage himself in a War, he would answer him thus, that as St. Peter had not the Primacy for having deny'd his Master, nor David the Gift of Prophecy, for the sake of his Adultery: So an Estimate of the Good or Evil of any Person ought not to be drawn from the merit of that Person, but all Actions ought to be consider'd nakedly in themselves. That St. Gregory who suffer'd so many Plunderings and Injuries from the Lombards, never made War against them. That St. Ambrose never sat upon the Arians, tho' they Persecuted him very Cruelly. That not one Instance could be given of any of the Holy Bishops rising up in Arms. That Lastly, all Causes relating to Ecclesiasticks ought to be try'd, either by secular Judges according to the Laws, or by the Decisions of Bishops; and that they ought not to the Shame and Disgrace of Ecclesiasticks to determine that by Force, which ought to be decided by the Courts of Justice, or by the Decrees of Bishops.

In the Tenth he excuses himself to the Bishop of Engubio for having permitted his Church to be Consecrated by the Bishop of Fossombrona, who pretended that he had a Right of Consecrating the Churches of that Place, tho' it were under the Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Engubio. He says, That he durst not oppose his proceeding, and the rather because he was already his Enemy: But that he did not pretend to exempt himself from the Jurisdiction of the Church of Engubio, which he promises to Re-cognize very chearfully. Wherefore he intreats the Bishop of Engubio to take off the Interdiction he had issu'd out against that Church; and to be perswaded that not only that Place, but also that whatsoever his Monastery could enjoy were intirely at his Service, and he begs him to grant him his Protection.

The Eleventh is a Letter whereby he Dedicates several of his Works to the Bishops of Sinagaglia and Engubio.

In the Twelfth he reproves a certain Bishop, who alienated the Revenues of his Church. He asks him whether he had forgot that Pope Victor in a Council held at Florence, had prohibited it under the Pain of Excommunication? Whether he did not know that the Revenues of the Church were appropriated to the Maintenance of the Poor, and to the Relief of Widows and Orphans? This gave him an occasion of treating concerning the Original of Church Revenues; upon which he observes that in the Primitive Church the Faithful brought the Price of their Lands, and laid them at the Apostles Feet, that so they might distribute them to the Poor: And that afterwards it was thought more proper to settle Estates on Churches, not only for the maintenance of the Clergy, but likewise for the Relief of the Poor. That therefore those who rob the Church of the Revenues which belong to it, were guilty of a World of Homicides in depriving the Poor of their necessary Subsistence. He adds, That as Sinners by giving their Estates to the Church, obtain'd by this means an Absolution of their Sins: So those on the contrary who take them do bind and engage themselves to suffer that Pennance from which the others are exempted by their Charity.

The Thirteenth contains nothing very remarkable: He thanks the Bishop of Cesena for the kind Reception he gave to a young Man whom he had recommended to him: And exhorts him to a Christian watchfulness by setting before him the Hour of Death and the Day of Judgment.

The Fourteenth is referr'd to the Twenty sixth of his Opuscula.

In the Fifteenth he shews what a Guard Ecclesiasticks ought to put over their Senses, which are the source and fountain of a great many Disorders.

In the Sixteenth he maintains that the Octave of the Festival of St. John Baptist ought to be solemniz'd in the same manner as the Festival it self, and afterwards explains the Eight solemn Festivals of the Jews, which by way of Allegory he applies to Christianity.

The Fifth Book contains the Letters directed to several of the Clergy.

In the First directed to the Arch-priests, he maintains what he had advanc'd in one of his Sermons, that every Mans Soul shall appear at the Day of Judgment in the same State wherein it left the Body. Several Persons were offended at this Position, believing that from thence it follows, that the Prayers, Oblations and Sacrifices which were offer'd for the Dead, signified nothing to them. Peter Damien denies this Inference, and makes it appear that he asserted no more than what St. Gregory had asserted before him. Peter Damien Cardinal Bishop of Ostia.

The Second Letter is directed to his Brother Damien. He therein makes an ingenuous Confession of the Faults to which he was addicted, and especially of his Propensity to rail at others. He entreats his Brother to pray to God to give him Grace to redress his fault.

In the Third, he gives a lively Description of the Soul just upon its departure out of the Body.

In the Fourth, he makes use of a Passage out of Jeremy, to demonstrate how far the Intemperance of Clerks is an offence to God.

The Fifth is a Letter of Compliment directed to an Arch-deacon.

The Sixth is written in the name of Leo IX. to the People of Osno, against a Custom which prevail'd in that Church of rifling the Goods of the Bishop after his Death: This Custom is therein prohibited under the penalty of Excommunication.

The Seventh is writ in the name of Alexander II. to the Clergy and Laity of Milan, whom that Pope acquaints of his Exaltation to the Popedom, and exhorts them to Labour earnestly for the carrying on of their own Salvation.

The Eighth directed to the Clergy of Florence, concerning the use of Disciplines, is one of the most Curious of his Pieces. He had writ about this Practice to a certain Monk: His Letter falling into the Hands of some secular Persons, and of some Monks of a less strict Life, they were very much offended at this new Kind of Pennance, unknown to all former Ages, and which seem'd to overthrow the Order of the Canons and the ancient Custom. Peter Damien in this Letter, undertakes to maintain it. First, from the Example of our Saviour, of the Apostles and Martyrs, who have been Scourg'd for the sake of JESUS CHRIST: From whence he infers, That God may very well be pleas'd with the voluntary Offering to him such a Pennance as he caus'd his Servants to endure against their Will. As to what might be objected, that indeed we do Read, that the Saints were Scourged by others, but that we never find they did it themselves: He replies, That as we ought voluntarily to imitate the Mortification of the Cross, so likewise one may imitate the other Sufferings of JESUS CHRIST; and that as no body can blame him who of his own accord Falls at other times than those enjoyn'd by the Church: So one ought not to imagine, that he who Chastises himself with his own Hand, does a Deed less acceptable to God. That on the contrary, he undergoes a real Pennance, by mortifying his Flesh, and making it suffer for the Pleasures which it has enjoy'd; that it signifies nothing to what sort of Punishment it is Condemn'd, provided that the preceeding Pleasures be punish'd by a subsequent Punishment. He asks those who pretended that this new Custom subverted the Canons; whether the Reverend Bede did ill in enjoining several Penitents to wear Iron Girdles? Whether the Holy Fathers did ill in putting such Austerities and Pennances into Practice, of which no mention is made in the Canons? He adds, That since the Laicks might redeem themselves from a long Pennance by bestowing a certain Sum to Charitable Uses, tho' no mention be made of these Redemptions in the Canons; the Monks who may have deserv'd a long Pennance, and cannot make compensation for it by their Alms, ought not to be hindred from doing it by this Mortification of their Flesh.

The Ninth is among the Opuscula, of which it makes the Twenty sixth.

In the Tenth he excuses himself to the Clergy and Laity of Fayence, for his not being able to come to them after the Death of their Bishop, and he advises them to put off the Election of another Bishop, till the arrival of the Emperor.

The Eleventh is refer'd to the Forty first of the Opuscula.

In the Twelfth he asks the Advice of the Treasurer of the Church of Ravenna, whether he ought to remain in that City, or return to his Solitude. He relates the Reasons that might be alledg'd on both sides: On the one side, he might be serviceable to the saving of Souls at Ravenna, but there he was had in Contempt: On the other side, he was had in esteem in his own Monastery, but he was afraid this esteem would puff him up with Pride. He refers himself wholly to the counsel of him to whom he wrote, what he ought to do in the Case.

The Thirteenth is directed to the Chaplains of Duke Godfrey who charg'd him with Avarice. The occasion of which Charge was this; one of the Chaplains had a difference with him about a Piece of Gold which the Dutchess had presented at the Offering of the Mass, which Peter Damien Celebrated: The Monk who had receiv'd it, left it upon the Altar, together with another Piece of Gold presented by a Marchioness. One of these Chaplains took away one of the Pieces which the Dutchess had order'd to be given him: But afterwards Peter Damien using his utmost endeavours to make him restore it to him again he would not, but left it with one of the Monks. This Conduct of Peter Damien's being perfectly free from any partiality, sufficiently clear'd him from the Accusation of these Chaplains; but in his turn he reprov'd them for two Errors, First because they taught, that Priests might Marry; and then because they maintain'd, that it was no Simony to give Money for the Presentation of a Living, provided nothing was given for Ordination.

Peter Damien, Cardinal Bishop of Ostia.

The Fourteenth and Fifteenth are directed to the Clergy of the Church of Milan, who maintain'd the Truth and Purity of Discipline; he exhorted them to persevere with Constancy and Steadfastness.

The Two next are part, one of the Forty second, and the other of the Eighth of his Opuscula.

In the Eighteenth, he returns an Answer to a Priest who had ask'd his Advice about two Ceremonies relating to Baptism and the Celebration of the Mass: And after he had intimated that no new Customs ought to be introduc'd, he determines, That only the Holy Chrism ought to be put into the Water of Baptism, and not any Oyl or Wine; and that in the Celebration of the Mass the Ablution of the Chalice ought not to be omitted, but when it was to be celebrated twice in a Day.

The Nineteenth is among the Opuscula of which it makes the Twenty eighth.

The Sixth Book contains such Letters as are written to Abbots and Monks.

The First is refer'd to the Forty third of his Opuscula.

The Second is directed to Hugh Abbot of Cluny; the Monks of that Abby as an acknowledgment of the Love which Peter Damien had for them, and of the Services which he had done them, had promis'd him, that they would say an Office for him every Year on the Day of his Death. He prays the Abbot of Cluny that this might be perform'd not only in that Abby, but likewise in others which were of the same Order.

The Third directed to the same Abbot, is only a Letter of Compliment for the kind Entertainment he had given to one of Peter Damien's Nephews.

In the Fourth, he recommends to him again the Prayers which he had promis'd to offer up for him after his Death.

In the Fifth, directed to the Monks of that Abbey, he commends the Discipline and the good Order which was observ'd in their Monastery; thanks them for the acknowledgment they made of the good Services he had done them, and conjures them to pray to God for him after his Death.

The Two next contain nothing in them very remarkable.

The Eighth is among the Opuscula, of which it makes the Twenty first.

In the Ninth, he reproves a Monk whom he had made Superior of an Hermitage, for having quitted it, to be an Abbot of another Monastery; and orders him either to return to the Charge committed to him, or else to live only as a Monk in that Monastery.

In the Tenth, he retracts what he had said of St. John the Baptist's being conceiv'd during the Feast of Tabernacles.

The Eleventh is among the Opuscula, of which it makes the Forty fourth.

In the Twelfth, he answers to the Reproaches cast upon him by an Abbot, for having entertain'd a Monk who came out of another Monastery, which seem'd contrary to the Rule of St. Benedict. He makes it appear, that this Rule ought only to be understood of the Monasteries of the Canobites, and not of the Hermits, whose Life is most perfect. He pretends that St. Benedict was at first an Hermit, and that he always prefer'd the Life of the Hermits, before that of the Canobites.

The Thirteenth is directed to the Monks of a Monastery of Constantinople; but contains nothing in it remarkable.

The Fourteenth is among the Opuscula, of which it makes the Twenty ninth.

In the Fifteenth, he admonishes an Abbot not to detain one of his Monks, who had deserted him and was excommunicated, promising withal, That if that Monk would return, he would use him kindly.

The Three next make the Forty fifth, Forty sixth, and Fifty ninth of his Opuscula.

In the Nineteenth, he gives a description of the Distempers, under which he labour'd; of the Patience wherewith he endur'd them; and of the extremity to which he was brought; which was such; That they administred the extreme Unction to him, and laid him upon Ashes and Hair-cloth, as the Custom then was. He takes notice that his Remedy was communicated to one of his Monks in a Vision, and procur'd by Alms, and that he had much ado to perswade himself to eat Flesh.

In the Twentieth, he advises a Monk not to engage himself upon every turn to expiate the Faults of others, and readily to perform those Pennances with which he was engag'd. He moreover relates an Instance of another Monk, who had suffer'd great Punishments in the other World, for having nor done Penance for another, according as he undertook.

The Twenty first is among his Opuscula, of which it makes the Forty seventh.

The Twenty second is to his Nephew Damien, whom he exhorts to be zealous in the Exercises of the Monastical Life, and reproves for having gon from an Hermitage to a Monastery, and exhorts to return thither again.

In the Twenty third, he reproves a Monk, who delay'd turning Hermit, upon the account that he had much ado to perswade himself not to drink Wine.

The Twenty fourth and Twenty sixth, are refer'd to the Forty eighth and ninth of his Opuscula.

In the Twenty fifth, he makes it appear, That it was upon some Grounds that he had a design of quitting his Church; he thereupon relates two extraordinary Events.

The Twenty seventh is directed to the Monk Cerebrosus, who had with some sharpness blam'd the practice of Discipline. Peter Damien maintain'd it by the same Arguments which he had already allodg'd. He pretended that it was a sort of Martyrdom; that it was what was very well known to the Ancients; that it is founded upon the Canons; and that it was in use before his Time in the Religious Monasteries, wherein it was Customary to buy off a whole Year's Penance, by a Thousand Stripes of a Rod. That Monk did not find fault with the Discipline, which was us'd during the reading of a Chapter for light Faults; but he blam'd those severe and long Disciplines of so many Hundred Stripes. Peter Damien says, That if one approves the lesser Discipline, one ought not to Condemn that which was more severe and mortifying.

Peter Damien, Cardinal Bishop of Ostia.

In the Twenty eighth, he illustrates two Passages out of St. Gregory.

In the Twenty ninth, he advises a Monk, every day, to say the Rosary, and to read the Holy Scriptures.

The Two next make the Fifty first and the Fifty third of his Opuscula.

In the Thirty second, he reproves the Hermits of a Monastery near his, for having neglected the Rule which he had given them, for being too much in love with Money, and too much given to Ease and Luxury. For their Instruction, he relates the Punishments of several Monks, who had not liv'd up to that strictness which they ought, and the Penance inflicted upon them for their Faults.

The Thirty third is amongst his Opuscula, of which it makes the Fifty fourth.

The Thirty fourth is likewise directed to several Hermits of his Congregation, whom he reprov'd for being too severe and too long in the exercise of their Discipline. He would not have any one, every day, be disciplin'd any longer than during the reading of Forty Psalms, and in Advent and Lent, only whilst Sixty Psalms were reading.

The Thirty fifth is amongst his Opuscula, of which it makes the Twenty fifth.

In the last, he exhorts his Monks to live peaceably after his Death, and requires that all the Possessions belonging to another Monastery, which he permitted them to enjoy during his Life-time, should be restored after his Decease.

The seventh Book contains the Letters written to Princes and Princesses, the Two first of which are directed to the Emperor Henry III. In one of them he desires that Count Gisler may be set at liberty, and in the other, he commends that Prince for having dispossest Wiquier of the Arch-bishoprick of Ravenna, who had obtain'd it by sinister practices.

The Third is directed to the young Prince Henry, the Son of the former, whom he earnestly exhorts to defend the Church, and to oppose Cadalous's Schism.

The next are directed to the Empress Agnes, the Wife of Henry III. and writte nabout different Affairs. In one of them, he gives that Princess to understand, that the Pope could not send the Pall to the Arch-bishop of Mentz, till he himself came to desire it, or till he were examin'd by his Legates. In the two others, he comforts and exhorts the same Princess to beg assistance of Jesus Christ, and in the last, he invites her to Italy.

The Ninth is written in the Name of Pope Nicolas II. to the Queen of France, whom he exhorts to continue her Bounty and pious Actions; advising her at the same time, to inspire the King her Husband with the same Principles, and to cause her Children to be educated in the same manner.

In the Tenth, directed to Godfrey Duke of Tuscany, he expresses himself how much he was concern'd, that that Prince, had given entertainment to Cadalous, and admonishes him to make amends for that Fault.

The Two next directed to the same Duke, are compris'd in the Fifty seventh Opusculum.

In the Thirteenth, he entreats that Prince to remit a certain Sum of Money to the Abby of St. John Baptist, to pay for a Library which he had bought.

In the Fourteenth, directed to Beatrice Dutcheß of Tuscany, he approves of the Resolution that she and her Husband had taken to live in perpetual Continency, and proposes many Examples of Vertue, for her imitation.

In the Fifteenth, he exhorts a certain Prince, to condemn all Worldly Possessions, and to seek after the Heavenly.

The Sixteenth, is comprehended in the eighteenth Opusculum.

In the Seventeenth, he exhorts the Marquess Renier, who had been enjoin'd, by way of Penance for his Offences, to go in pilgrimage to Rome; to set forward on his Journey, as soon as possible, and produces divers Examples, of the Protection that God has afforded to Pilgrims.

In the Eighteenth, he admonishes the Countess Gille, newly marry'd, to the Marquess Renier, not to retain the Spoils of the Widows and Orphans, but to restore every thing that her Husband had got by rapine, and advises her in order to prevent him from committing Peter Damien, Cardinal Bishop of Ostia: mitting those outrages for the future, to cause the Lands to be well cultivated, and to give Alms to the Poor.

The Nineteenth, is among the Opuscula, of which it makes the Fiftieth.

The last Book of Peter Damien's Letters, contains those that were written by him to divers particular Persons.

In the First, directed to Cinthius Prefect of Rome, he commends him for the Exhortation that he made to the People on Twelfth-day, and advises him to persevere in administering Justice in the City, and in maintaining the Rights of the Church.

In the Second, he admonishes the same Cinthius, that he should not so much give himself up to praying as to neglect doing Justice.

In the Third, he exhorts the Person to whom he writes, to shew due Respect to his Mother, and enlarges on the Duties of Children to their Parents.

The Fourth, is a Consolatory Letter to a Father, upon the Death of his Son. He maintains that the Death of Children is a peculiar Favour of God, and that we ought to rejoice rather than to be troubled at it.

In the Fifth, he exhorts a Senator of the City of Rome, to compleat the building of a Church that he had begun, shewing by many Examples, that it is an Action, which deserves Reward.

In the Sixth, he comforts a sick Person, giving him to understand, that Sufferings are a mark of Predestination, and that a Christian ought to bear them with Patience and Cheerfulness.

The Seventh, is compris'd in the Forty second Opusculum.

In the Eighth, he exhorts a Judge to meditate on the future State, and on the Day of Judgment, and produces a great number of Sentences of Scripture on that Subject, to the end that he might take the matter into serious Consideration.

The Ninth, is amongst the Opuscula, of which it makes the Fifty eighth.

In the Tenth, he exhorts a certain Person, who was apt to forswear himself to abstain altogether from Swearing, and advises him to give Alms.

The Eleventh, makes the Thirtieth Opusculum.

The Twelfth, is an Invektive against Pride.

The Thirteenth, is contain'd in the Fifty ninth Opusculum.

The Fourteenth, is directed to his two Sisters, to whom he gives a great deal of Advice about the Religious Life.

The Fifteenth, is a Prayer made by Peter Damien, on behalf of a Man, who was at the point of Death, and it is one of those that are now us'd in the Church (i. e. of Rome) for Persons in such a Condition.

From the Letters pass we to the Opuscula or small Tracts, which constitute the third Volume of Peter Damien's Works; reserving the Account of the Second, which contains his Sermons, till we have made the Extract of his Opuscula.

The First bears this Title, Of the Catholick Faith, and is dedicated to Ambrose. He explains therein, the Mysteries of the Trinity and Incarnation, and more especially establishes the Procession of the Holy Ghost from the Persons of the Father and of the Son.

In the Second, call'd Antilogus against the Jews, he makes it appear by several Proofs taken out of the Old Testament, That JESUS CHRIST is the true Messiah the Son of God.

The Third is on the same Subject, in which he answers divers Questions proposed in the name of the Jews, concerning JESUS CHRIST.

The Fourth, is a Dialogue between the Emperor Henry's Attorney General, and an Advocate of the Church of Rome, concerning the Right that the Emperors of Germany have to the Election of a Pope. After the Death of Nicolas II. the Romans chose Alexander II. without the Emperor Henry's Knowledge; whereupon that Prince being highly displeased that the Election was carried on without his Authority, nominated Cadalous Bishop of Parma to the Papal Dignity. Peter Damien supposes the Question about the validity of both those Elections to be debated in a Council, between the Advocate of the Church of Rome, and the Emperor's Attorney General. The latter maintains, That the Election of a Pope cannot be duly manag'd without the Prince's Consent, and that they had apparently done him an injury in ordaining Alexander without his Knowledge. On the other side, the Advocate of the Church of Rome asserts, that the Right of choosing a Pope, or of confirming his Election, does not belong to his Imperial Majesty; since not only the Pagan Emperors, but also all the Christian Princes to the last Greek Emperors, never laid claim to that Right, nor had any share in the Election of a Pope, which was always perform'd by the Church of Rome. The Attorney General replies, That Henry the Father and Predecessor of the Prince, whose Right he mainrain'd, enjoy'd such a Privilege and that it was confirm'd by Pope Nicolas II. to the Emperor his Master. The Advocate of the Church of Rome acknowledges that Concession, and willingly agrees, that the Emperor should enjoy the same Privilege; but he insists that as to the matter in debate, the Emperor Henry being under Age, the Church of Rome, acted Peter Damien as his Tutor in that Election, and perform'd the Office that belong'd to him, by reason that mien, Cardinal a Child is incapable of making such a choice : That therefore what was done at Rome, was not prejudicial to the Emperor's Right, but only made it appear, that there might be some occasions, in which it cannot take place. The Attorney General averr'd, That at least it could not be deny'd, that they had done that Prince Wrong, in not making application to him : That three Months had pass'd from Pope Nicolas's Death to the Day of Alexander's Ordination, and that there was more time than was requisite for the obtaining of a Pragmatical Sanction from the Imperial Court. The Advocate of the Church of Rome replies, That the German Noble-men and some of the Bishops of the Empire, who were disaffected to the Church of Rome, call'd a kind of Council, in which, by an unheard of boldness, they disannull'd every thing that was ordain'd by Pope Nicolas : That they refus'd to hearken to Stephen Cardinal Priest and Legate of the Holy See, and that at the solicitation of Count Gerard, whom Pope Nicolas had excommunicated in a full Synod, they proceeded to the Election of a Person, who was altogether unworthy. Thereupon he demands, which of the two Competitors ought to be acknowledg'd as lawful Pope ; either he who was unanimously chosen by the Cardinals, who was nominated by the Clergy and People of Rome, and who was fairly elected in that City, and in the Bosom of the Holy Apostolick See ; or he who had no other suffrage in his favour, but that of an excommunicated Person. The Attorney General acquiesces to these Arguments, being well satisfied, that his Sovereign's Right was sufficiently secur'd, and that the Person, who was chosen, could not be unacceptable to him, because he belong'd to his Court. Then the Advocate of the Church of Rome concludes, wishing, That the Sacerdotal and Imperial Powers were inseparably united, and that they might always concur in the same end.

The Fifth Opusculum or small Tract, is a Relation directed to Hildebrand the Arch-Deacon, of what befel Peter Damien, during his Journey to Milan, where he was sent in quality of Legate of the Holy See, to suppress the Disorders committed by the unchaste and simoniacal Clergy of that Church. 'Tis related by him, that upon his arrival at Milan, he had no sooner given notice of the purport of his Commission, but the Clergy under colour that their Church ought not to be govern'd by the Laws, nor to submit to the Yoke of Rome, rais'd a Sedition. That the People ran in Crowds to the Episcopal Palace, threatening to cause him to be put to Death : And that afterwards appearing between the Arch-bishop of Milan, and Anselm Bishop of Lucca, he allay'd their fury by a Discourse, which he produces. In that Speech Peter Damien remonstrates to them, that he was not come to enhance the Grandeur and Authority of the Holy See ; but to promote their Salvation : That that Church derives its Dignity and Primacy from the Institution of JESUS CHRIST, and that no attempt can be made on its Rights without violating the Faith : That St. Nizarius, St. Gervase and St. Protasius, the first Planters of the Church of Milan, receiv'd their Mission from the Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul : That St. Ambrose had recourse to Pope Siricius, to put a stop to the irregularities of some of his Clergy-men, and that he declar'd, that he was ready in all Points to obey the Church of Rome as his Patroness. The Cardinal of Ostia having by this means pacified the People, call'd an Assembly of the Clergy, and after having made enquiry into the manner of their Ordination, scarce found one Man, among so great a number, who was admitted into Orders without disbursing Money, because every one upon that occasion, was oblig'd to pay a certain set rate.

This general Disorder extremely perplexed Peter Damien, in regard that it would be unjust to punish some, and to pardon others, who were no less culpable. Therefore he took a Resolution, to grant an Amnesty for pass'd Transgressions, and to make a Constitution to prevent such Enormities for the future. It was drawn up in the Name of Guy Arch-bishop of Milan, who declar'd, That he condemn'd the Custom or rather Abuse, which prevail'd in his Diocese, and that he oblig'd himself and his Successors to exact nothing for Ordinations : That he likewise condemn'd the Marriage of Priests, Deacons and Sub-deacons, and that he promis'd to use his utmost endeavours, to hinder them from keeping Wives or Concubines : That he further engag'd both for himself and his Officers, not to take any thing, for the Benediction of Abbies and Chappels ; for the Investiture and Collation of Benefices ; for the Ordination of Bishops ; for the Administration of the Holy Chrism, or for the Consecration of Churches. This Decree was signed by the Arch-bishop of Milan, and by the principal Clergy, who took an Oath to observe it, and did Penance for their pass'd Offences : The former impos'd on himself a Penance of a hundred Years, and nominated how much he determin'd to give for the Redemption of it. The other Clergy-men were in like manner enjoind Fasting, which nevertheless they might redeem by reciting the Psalter, or by giving Alms. Furthermore the Arch-bishop made a Vow to go in pilgrimage to the Sepulchre of St. James in Gallicia, and to send his Clerks to Rome or Tours, or to some other Place usually frequented by Pilgrims.

Peter Damien Cardinal Bishop of Ostia.

In the sixth Tract, directed to Henry Arch-bishop of Ravenna, Peter Damien debates this Question, viz. Whether those who were ordain'd by Priests Simoniacally promoted, ought to be re-ordain'd or not? This Question was propos'd in a Council, where it was not judg'd expedient to resolve it, till it were farther discuss'd. Peter Damien maintains the Negative, by reason that 'tis not the Bishop, who is only the Minister, but God, that Consecrates: That the same thing may be said of Ordination, as of Baptism, viz. That it ought not to be reiterated, altho' it were administer'd by an unworthy Minister: That provided the Orders be conferr'd in the Catholick Church, and that both he who confers them, and he who takes them have Faith, the vicious Clerk is as effectually ordain'd by an unworthy Minister, as the virtuous Clerk by a worthy Minister: That there are three principal Sacraments in the Church, viz. Baptism, the Eucharist and Orders: That St. Augustin proves as to the First, and Paschasius with respect to the Second, that those Sacraments are not made more or less efficacious by worthy or unworthy Ministers; and altho' the Question was never as yet stat'd in reference to Ordinations; nevertheless the Case ought to be argu'd after the same manner, according to St. Augustin's Principles, on which Peter Damien enlarges in this Book, and adds many Examples to shew, that Ordinations conferred by unworthy Ministers are valid, and that those Persons who were once admitted into Orders, ought not to be re-ordain'd, which he applies in particular to Simonists, and commends the Conduct of Pope Leo IX. who only imposes a Penance of forty Daies on those that were ordain'd by Priests guilty of Simony, but did not lay out any Money upon that account. He likewise commends the Emperor Henry, for opposing that Irregularity, and concludes with a Declaration against Simonists.

The seventh Treatise, call'd the Gomorrhean is dedicated to Pope Leo IX. who approv'd of it in a Letter, which is prefix'd at the beginning. In this Tract, Peter Damien proves, that Clergy-men who have committed Sins of Uncleanness, which Modesty does not permit to be named, ought to be depriv'd of the Functions of their Order for ever: He rejects the Canons of the Penitential Books, which impose too light Penances for those sorts of Crimes, of which he shews the Enormity: He inveighs against those Persons who are guilty of such notorious Offences, and exhorts them to a speedy Repentance, and to do severe Penance.

The eighth Tract dedicated to John Bishop of Cesena and to the Arch-deacon of Ravenna, relates to the Degrees of Consanguinity in which it is forbidden to contract Marriage. He confutes the Opinion of the Lawyers who restrain'd them to the Fourth, and imagin'd that Grand-Nephews and Grand Nieces might inter-marry. He reckons up the Degrees by Generations, and maintains, That as far as any Consanguinity or Affinity can be discern'd, Matrimony ought not to be contracted, which takes place at least to the seventh Degree. He asserts in this Treatise, that in computing the Degrees, of Consanguinity, the number of Persons ought always to exceed that of the Generations by one; so that there are but five Generations, where there are six Persons: But he retracts this Opinion in a Dissertation made by him on purpose to be annex'd to the same Treatise.

In the Ninth, he treats at large of Alms-giving, and shews the Usefulness of it, both for the Living and the Dead, in this World and in the future State.

The Tenth, is about the Divine Service, in which he gives an account of the number of the Canonical Hours; of the Prayers which make the Office, and of the difference between the Office of Clergy-men and that of the Monks: He shews how beneficial 'tis to recite it, and even recommends it to Laicks, as well as the small Office of the Virgin Mary. In this Tract he likewise discourses of the seven Mortal Sins, amongst which he does not reckon Gluttony, but distinguishes vain Glory from Pride.

In the Eleventh he states this Question, viz. Whether those who recite their Office alone in private ought to say, Dominus vobiscum, Iube Domine, &c. He concludes in the Affirmative, because, since the Church is one in many; it may be said, that divers Persons are comprehended in one single Member of it, and by reason of that Unity, one single Person may speak for all, and as if he join'd in Prayer with many: That one single Person often speaks in the name of many, and many in that of a single Person: That if it were requisite to retrench these Prayers, because they seem to suppose the presence of many Persons; other parts of the Divine Office, which are of the same nature, ought likewise to be omitted: That the Sacrifice of the Mass is offer'd up for all the Faithful, tho' in a special manner by the Priest, in regard that he holds in his Hands, every Thing that the Faithful offer in their Mind: That altho' only one single Person assists at the celebration of Mass; yet he does not forbear to say Dominus vobiscum, and not Dominus tecum: That the Church has no regard to Numbers, Cases or Terms, but adheres only to that which tends to Edification: That that which one omits, may be supply'd by another; and lastly, that these Words may be refer'd as well to the Absent as to the Present. He concludes with a Commendation of the solitary Life, in favour of the Hermit, to whom he wrote, and leaves the Resolution of this Question sion to his Judgment. It may also be observ'd in this Treatise, That at that time, the Bishops were wont to say, Pax Vobis, whereas the Priests only said Dominus vobiscum.

Peter Damien, Cardinal Bishop of Ostia.

The Twelfth, is written against the disorderly Lives of the Monks of his Time, and he rebukes them chiefly for four irregular Practices, viz. 1. That they enjoy'd Estates and hoarded up Money, contrary to the Vow of Poverty. 2. That they ran about continually, and kept Company with Lay-men, even with excommunicated Persons, or such as deserv'd to be so punish'd, according to the tenour of the ancient Canons. 3. That they kept rich Apparel and other Garments so sorry, that they wore them only to shew their affectation of Vain Glory. 4. That they were too much immers'd in Worldly Affairs, and that they did not lead a Life sufficiently retired. This Treatise is written with a great deal of Energy; so that the Author gives a very lively description of the Enormities of the Monks of those times, and endeavours to reform their Manners by Precepts and contrary Examples.

In the next Treatise that bears this Title, Of the Perfection of Monks, he instructs them in their Duty and in the Virtues they ought to practise.

The Fourteenth dedicated to his Hermits, contains an Abridgment of the Rule, and of the manner of living that they ought to observe.

He enlarges farther on the same Subject, in the Fifteenth Tract, which may be look'd upon as an entire System of the Rules of his Order.

The Sixteenth, is an Invective against a certain Bishop, who asserted, That a Person who had assum'd the Monastick Habit by reason of the Indisposition of his Body, or upon some other Motive without serving as a Novice for a considerable time, according to the Rule, might return to a secular course of Life. Peter Damien maintains the contrary Opinion, and establishes it on the Tenour of the Canons, which absolutely forbids all those, who have voluntarily embrac'd the Monastick Life, and even Children, whom their Parents have engag'd in that Station, to quit their Profession. He says, that the compleat Probation specified in St. Benedict's Rule, does not prove that those who get admission without undergoing a Trial, may disengage themselves at pleasure: That it is a precaution requisite for the satisfaction of those who have a right to admit, rather than for the benefit of the Persons to be admitted; and that it is not so absolutely necessary, that it cannot be dispensed with, when there is assurance, that they who present themselves for that purpose, are endow'd with proper Qualities, and are really in a State of Grace.

The Seventeenth, is dedicated to Pope Nicolas II. whom he earnestly exhorts to put a stop to the enormities committed by unchaste and dissolute Clergy-men and to make use of the severity of the Canons against them, in imitation of Phineas's Zeal.

The Eighteenth, is compos'd of three Letters against the incontinency of Clergy-men, in which Peter Damien shews, that they are oblig'd to lead a single Life; inveighs against those who are marry'd or keep Concubines; vigorously opposes these Disorders and powerfully exhorts the Persons, to whom he writes, who are Peter Cardinal of Rome, the Bishop of Turin and the Dutchesse Adelaide, to interpose their Authority in order to prevent them for the future.

In the Nineteenth, he resigns his Bishoprick and two Abbies into the Hands of Pope Nicolas, and to induce him to approve of that Resignation, he represents the Examples of divers Prelates, who have in like manner quitted their Bishopricks, and gives an Account of certain Apparitions of Bishops or other Persons, condemned to endure the Torments of Hell, or of Purgatory, for neglecting to perform their Duty. Indeed one cannot but admire at the great number of Examples of that nature produced by him; but if any be desirous to be inform'd of the particulars, they need only peruse this Treatise; in which the Author, for his own part, alledges, as a motive to his Resignation, that at the time of his promotion to the Episcopal Dignity, he was not worthy of it; and that his Life and Conversation were culpable, which induc'd him to believe, that it was much safer to depose himself, than to have a Sentence of Deposition pass'd upon him at the Day of Judgment, accompanied with everlasting Damnation.

The next Tract dedicated to the same Pope Nicolas; is written on the same Subject, and full of Examples of the like Nature: He enlarges farther on the Reasons that oblig'd him to quit his Bishoprick, and more particularly on this, viz. that he was no longer in a condition to take care of the two Bishopricks, which the Holy See thought fit to commit to his Charge.

In the Twenty first, he commends an Abbot, for resigning his Office, to be discharg'd of the Cares, Troubles and multiplicity of Business that unavoidably attended that Dignity, and exhorts him to withstand, for the future, the Temptations, with which the Devil usually assaults those, who have quitted Ecclesiastical Preferments, by inspiring them with a desire to resume them.

The Twenty second, is written against Clergy-men who reside at Court, and put themselves into the Service of Princes or Potentates, to obtain Bishopricks or Abbies. He shews that they are not free from the imputation of Simony, although they disburse no

Money

Peter Damien Cardinal Bishop of Ostia.

Money, but that on the contrary, they are blame-worthy; because they sell themselves as it were for Slaves, and part with their Liberty to get Ecclesiastical Livings: Besides, that their Services are of greater Value, than the Money that is paid by others: "For suppose (says he) that two Clergy-men are possess'd of an equal Hereditary Estate; that they both sell it, and that one of them resorts to Court, where he spends his Stock by degrees in the Prince's Service, whilst the other, on the contrary, keeps his entire. Afterwards a Benefice is bestow'd on each of them, that is to say, on the former, as a recompence for his Service, and on the other, for his Money; now the Question is, Which of the two bought the Benefice at the dearest Rate? The Value of the Money is equal, since it was the Product of both their Estates; but one obtain'd with a great deal of Pains and Fatigues, that which the other got without any Trouble or Difficulty; and therefore the Purchase made by the former, cost much more than that by the latter.

The Twenty third, is dedicated to Pope Alexander II. upon his return from the Council of Mantua, and contains an Answer to a Question which he had formerly propos'd, to Peter Damien, viz. Upon what account it happens that the Lives of the Popes are generally so short? The latter resolves it by a Moral Reflection, That God permits it so to fall out, to the end that the Frailty of Humane Life, may be most conspicuous in those, who are promoted to the Supreme Dignity; and that all Men who have regard to the Popes, may be struck with terror at their Death. This gives him an occasion to enlarge upon Providence and the Goodness of the Divine Majesty.

In the Twenty fourth, he writes against those Canons, who being maintain'd in common, by the Church-Revenues, affect to enjoy private Possessions. He exhorts Pope Alexander, to whom his Letter is directed, to make use of his Authority, to oblige them to quit that Claim.

In the Twenty fifth, he extols the Sacerdotal Dignity, and discourses on the Obligations that accompany it.

In the Twenty sixth, he declaims against the Ignorance, supine Negligence and Slothfulness of Clergy-men. He makes it appear to be the source of the principal Disorders in the Church, and exhorts the Bishops to inspect the Lives and Conversation of the inferior Clergy, and to take care that none be admitted into the Ecclesiastical State, but such as are capable of performing those Functions.

The Twenty seventh is directed to the Canons of the Church of Fano, who were at variance one with another, by reason that some of them were desirous to live separately, and the others in common. Peter Damien takes part with the latter, and maintains, that the Canons ought to live in Common, and to have no private Property, following the Examples of the Apostles and of the Christians of the primitive Church.

The Twenty eighth is compos'd in favour of the Monks, against the Secular Clerks and Canons. The latter insisted, that the Monks ought not to administer the Eucharist or other Sacraments. Peter Damien maintains on the contrary, that the Monks ought not to be excluded from those Functions; and to prove his Assertion, brings several Examples of Monks, who being made Bishops or Priests, have actually administer'd them. He extols the Monastic Order, deriving its original from the Prophets and Apostles; and in the close, cites a Decretal made by Pope Boniface IV. in which Monks are authorized to administer the Sacrament of Penance.

The Twenty ninth is directed to a certain Abbot, whom he reproves for wearing too sumptuous Apparel.

The Thirtieth is written to the Inhabitants of Florence, and more especially to the Monks of that City, who refus'd to communicate with their Bishop, and to receive the Sacraments from his Hands, because they suspected him to be guilty of Simony. Peter Damien makes it appear, that although the Information they brought against him were true, yet they ought not to withdraw themselves from his Communion, till he were legally convicted, nor to refuse to receive the Sacraments administer'd by him; by reason that unworthy Ministers are capable of administering them as well as the worthy.

In the Thirty first, he exhorts the Cardinals to oppose the Covetousness and Concupiscence of the Clergy, which was the source of the greatest part of the Disorders and Calamities that beset the Church.

The Thirty second, is a Moral and Mystical Treatise on Lent or the Forty days Fast, and on the Forty Stations of the Israelites in the Wilderness.

The Thirty third, is a letter directed to the Abbot of Mount Cassin, who had threaten'd that if he did not come to him, he should no longer partake of the Benefit of the Prayers put up in his Monastery. Peter Damien excuses himself, upon account that he was sensible that the time of his Dissolution drew near, and that he was afraid of going in quest after a Monastery, lest he should die without the precincts of a Monastery. He entreats that Abbot not to deprive him of the Advantages that might arise from the Supplications of those of his Order: He enlarges on the Devotions to be perform'd to the Virgin Mary, and produces a great number of Miracles wrought by her Intercession, in favour of those who had a para particular Respect for her; and amongst others, he says, that she appear'd to his Brother Peter Damien a little before his Death. Afterwards he shews, that Alms distributed for the Dead, procure them Consolation, as well as Prayers and Sacrifices.

The Thirty fourth, is a Collection of a great number of Miracles, Visions, Apparitions and Historical Passages, relating to the Punishment of evil Actions, and the reward of good, the Torments of Hell, and the deliverance of Souls out of Purgatory.

In the Thirty fifth, after having alledged for a Reason, why the Image of St. Paul is usually plac'd on the right Hand and St. Peter's on the left; that the former was of the Tribe of Benjamin, which signifies the Son of the right Hand; he enlarges on the Commendation of that Apostle.

In the Thirty sixth, he treats of the Eternity, Immensity, Purity, and more especially of the Omnipotence of God.

In the Thirty seventh, he explains several Difficulties relating to the Holy Scripture, that were propos'd to him.

In the Thirty eighth, he confutes the Opinion of the Greeks, concerning the Proceſſion of the Holy Ghost.

In the Thirty ninth, after having commended the Arch-bishop of Besaison, for the good Order he had established in his Church, and for having caus'd a Tomb to be prepar'd for himself, he finds fault with the Custom of his Church and of some other Churches of France, in which the Clerks and even the Monks, in some places, were permitted to sit, during the Celebration of Divine Service. He is of Opinion, that all those who assist at it, ought to continue standing, till it be perform'd.

In the Fortieth, after having congratulated a certain Bishop, upon the recovery of his Health, he exhorts him not to give way to Passion for the future, and to forgive his Enemies.

In the Forty first, he maintains, That those Persons who make Matrimonial Contracts within the time prohibited by the Church, that is to say, in Lent; three Weeks before the Festival of St. John Baptist; and from Advent to Epiphany; ought to be divorc'd; and their Marriage declar'd null: But forasmuch as some, made no scruple to marry at those times, and imagin'd that it was sufficient to abstain from the use of Marriage, to avoid the Ecclesiastical Censures, he confutes that Opinion, by shewing, that it is not carnal Copulation, but the mutual Consent of the Parties that makes the Marriage.

The Forty second contains two Letters, in which he admonishes two several Persons, to perform the Vow that they had made, to enter into a Religious Order; shewing by divers Authorities and Examples, the Obligation they lie under, to fulfill their Vows, who have once made them.

In the Forty third, he exhorts the Monks of Mount Cassin, to discipline themselves every Friday.

In the Forty fourth, he gives Moral Explications of the ten Plagues of Egypt.

In the Forty fifth, to comfort a tender-conscienced Monk, who was troubled for his Ignorance; he shews that Learning often occasions many Vices, more especially when it is not accompanied with other Vertues, but that downright Integrity is always profitable to Salvation.

In the Forty sixth, he exhorts that Monk, patiently and cheerfully to bear Reprimands and Corrections.

In the Forty seventh, he recommends Chastity to his Nephew Damien, and perswades him to receive the Communion every day, to be in a condition to preserve that Vertue. Afterwards he gives him wholesome Instructions to withstand the Temptations of the Devil.

In the Forty eighth, he reproves a Monk, who had still some inclination for delicious Fare and costly Apparel, and admonishes him to fix all his Delight and Repose in God.

In the Forty ninth, he gives a great deal of wholesome Advice, concerning the Spiritual Life to a young Monk his Nephew.

The Fiftieth, is a Moral Instruction, dedicated to the Countess Blanche, who had taken a Nun's Habit.

The Fifty first, is directed to a Monk nam'd Teuzo, who having left his Monastery, retir'd to a Cell in the middle of the City, and refus'd to entertain Peter Damien as well as his Abbot, when they came to Visit him. He exhorts him with a great deal of Charity and Gentleness, to quit that particular way of living and to return to his Duty.

In the Fifty second, he makes divers Moral Reflections, on the Qualities of several sorts of Animals.

In the Fifty third, he shews the Advantages that arise from Afflictions and Adversity.

In the Fifty fourth, he exhorts certain Monks to fast on Saturdays in honour of our Saviour's Burial, and makes use of an Apparition to confirm that Custom.

Peter Damien Cardinal Bishop of Ostia. In the Fifty fifth, he admonishes the Monks of his Order, to fast on the Vigils of the Festivals of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, of Christmas, of the Epiphany, of Holy Thursday, of Whitsunday, of the Nativity of St. John Baptist, and of those of all the Festivals of the Apostles, as also to observe a Fast on all Saturdays throughout the Year.

In the Fifty sixth, he commends the Empress Agnes, upon account of the singular Modesty and Humility she had shewn in going to Visit the Sepulchre of St. Peter and St. Paul, and makes it appear, that Potentates ought not to take a pride in their Grandeur, nor in the Riches of this World.

In the Fifty seventh, he admonishes Prince Godfrey, that he did not use sufficient severity in the punishing of Criminals, and shews how necessary it is, that Princes should be very punctual in the Administration of Justice.

In the Fifty eighth, he demonstrates, That there is no perfect Felicity in this World, and that all profane Sciences are not capable of making us truly Wise or Happy. Therefore he warns Boniface, to whom he writes, that if he has not taken a resolution entirely to renounce worldly Wealth and Knowledge; at least, he ought to make use of them only as means for the attaining of the real Possessions and of the true Wisdom.

In the Fifty ninth, he treats of the last Judgment and Antichrist; and shews that it is difficult to discourse appositely on that Subject, but very profitable to meditate seriously upon it. He says, that Antichrist shall reign three Years and a half; that he shall be kill'd on the Mount of Olives; and that forty days shall pass from his Death, to the coming of JESUS CHRIST, during which the Persecution shall cease, and the Just, whose Faith has been shaken, shall perform Acts of Repentance: That afterwards the Earth and Air shall be involv'd in universal Flames, which shall purifie the Elect. Then he produces ten Signs that ought to precede the Day of Judgment, according to St. Jerom.

The Sixtieth and last Tract, contains Allegorical Explications on divers Passages of the Book of Genesis.

We have given an account of the Opuscula after the Letters, because the greatest part of those Tracts, are in effect only of that nature, and it were more expedient to leave them among the Letters, (as in the first Edition) and to dispose them all according to the Order of time or the Subjects they treat of, than to distribute them in such a manner, as they appear at present. Let us now return to the second Tome that contains Peter Damien's Sermons, which are Seventy five in number, disposed according to the Order of the Festivals of the Year, but some of them do not belong to this Cardinal, particularly that of St. Martin. The second Sermon of St. Andrew; that of St. Nicolas; that on Christmas-Eve; and that of St. Stephen the Protomartyr; which are inserted among St. Bernard's Sermons, and which were publish'd by Father Mabillon in the Edition of the Works of that Saint, under the Name of Nicolas Abbot of Clairvaux; as also, those on the Festivals of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, and of All-Saints, the first on Christmas-Day, and that on the Dedication of a certain Church, appear to have been compos'd by the same Author.

The Sermons are follow'd by the Lives of St. Odilo, St. Maurus Bishop of Cesena, St. Romualdus, St. Rodolphus Bishop of Eugubio, and the History of the Passions of St. Flora and St. Lucilia. As for the other Lives of the Saints, taken out of Surius by Peter Damien, they constitute part of the Sermons.

† A part of the Mss. of Petrus de Honestis. In the last Tome, are contain'd divers Prayers, Hymns and † Profes attributed to Peter Damien, to which are annexed certain Extracts taken out of the Works of that Father, by a nameless Writer who was one of his Pupils, and out of the Rule of the Canons, compos'd by PETRUS de HONESTIS, a Clerk of Ravenna, whom some have unadvisedly confounded with Peter Damien; since that Rule was dedicated to Pope Paschal II. who was not promoted to the Papal Dignity till A. D. 1099. after the death of the latter.

The Treatise of the Reformation of the Bishops and Popes, extant in Goldastus, is not a Work falsely ascribed to Peter Damien, Possevinus imagin'd, but a Fragment of the twelfth Letter of the first Book.

The five Sermons, that Father Luke Dashery set forth under the Name of Peter Damien, in the seventh Tome of the Spicilegium, do not belong to this Author, but rather to St. Petrus Chrysologus, as it is own'd by that Father himself, in the end of his Preface to the eighth Tome.

Peter Damien's Character. Peter Damien wrote with a great deal of facility and clearness. His Style is Polite and Elegant, full of Figures and agreeable Varieties: He produces divers fine Notions, and gives an admirable turn to his Writings, insomuch that some of his Letters are compos'd with all possible Art and Accuracy. He had a Genius proper for Negotiations; and was so dextrous in the Management of Affairs, that even those whom he condemn'd or reprov'd, were constrain'd to acknowledge, that he had reason to do it. He deliver'd his Mind with a great deal of freedom, to the Popes and other Persons of Eminency; nevertheless, without failing to shew all the Respect that was due to their Quality. He us'd his utmost endeavours to revive, at least a shadow of the ancient Discipline in that corrupted Age, and to pur put a stop to the Career of the Enormities committed by the Clergy and Monks of his Time. He attain'd to a profound skill in Ecclesiastical Affairs, and more especially in those that relate to the Constitutions and Discipline of the Church. He was also well vers'd in the Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, but insist'd on the Allegorical rather than the Literal Sense of them. He had perus'd the Works of the Latin Fathers, and chiefly those of St. Augustin and St. Gregory, whose Doctrine and Maxims he thoroughly imbib'd: He argues subtilly about Theological Questions, and Controversial Matters. He shew'd a great deal of Devotion to the Virgin Mary, and was a punctual Observer of the Rites of the Church, and of Monastical Customs: But he produces a great number of Visions and Apparitions, which he very easily gives Credit to.

The Works of this Author were published by Father Constantin Caietan, a Monk of the Order of Mount Cassin, and printed at Rome, in three Volumes in the Years, 1606, 1608, and 1615. These three Tomes were re-printed with a fourth at Lyons, A. D. 1623. in one single Volume in Folio, and afterwards at Paris in 1663. not to mention an Edition of his Letters in Quarto, set forth by Nivelle at Paris in 1610.

CHAP. IX.

An Account of the Churches of England from King William the Conqueror, to Henry I. with the Life of St. Anselm Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and an Abridgment of his Works.

THE Churches and Kingdom of England, which were in a flourishing condition, and enjoy'd a profound Peace and Tranquility, in St. Dunstan's time, were miserably distress'd after his Death, (according to his Prediction) with innumerable Troubles and Calamities. The Countries over-run by the Barbarians; the Churches were Pillag'd and set on Fire; the Monasteries were ruin'd; the City of Canterbury was burnt; and Alphegus the Arch-bishop was carry'd away Prisoner with the Clergy of that Province. These Calamities were follow'd by the Dissensions and Civil Wars, between King Edward the Son of Ethelred, and Godwin Earl of Kent with his Son Harold, as well as by a general Barbarity and Corruption of Manners; till at last the Death of Edward the Confessor, who left no Issue, completed the ruin of the Kingdom. Affairs being in this posture, William Duke of Normandy passing over the Sea, subdu'd it in the Year, 1066. having kill'd Harold in Battle, who had taken possession of the Throne after the decease of King Edward; and caus'd new Laws, as well Ecclesiastical as Civil, to be establish'd throughout his Dominions: He prohibited his Subjects to acknowledge any Pope without his leave, and to receive any Bulls from Rome till they were shewn to him: Neither would he suffer the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, tho' styl'd Primate of all England, to make any Constitutions in his Councils, which were not conformable to his Inclination; and that were not before concerted with him: Lastly, he forbid that any of his Barons, Lords, Ministers of State, or Officers should be excommunicated without his Order. In the fifth Year of his Reign, Lanfranc, Abbot of St. Stephen at Caen, was ordain'd Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and went a little while after to Lanfranc Rome, with Thomas Arch-bishop of York, and Remigius Bishop of Lincoln, to obtain the Pall of Pope Alexander II. who receiv'd them with particular marks of his Esteem and Friend-ship. The next Day, Lanfranc accus'd both these Bishops, who accompany'd him, upon bury- account of their illegitimate Ordination; by reason that one was the Son of a Priest, and the other had given a certain Sum of Money to King William for his Bishoprick. The effect of this Accusation was, that the two Prelats resign'd their Pastoral Staves and Rings into the Hands of the Pope, who gave these Ornaments back again to them, upon Lanfranc's request. This Arch-bishop upon his return from Rome with the Pall, took much pains in re-establishing the Churches of England, and maintain'd their Rights and Revenues against the Secular Powers with so great efficacy, that neither King William I. nor his Son William II. thought fit to make any attempt upon them, as long as he liv'd; but after his Death, the latter caus'd all the Ecclesiastical Revenues belonging to his Dominions to be register'd, and having computed what was requisite for the maintenance of the Monks; re-united the rest to the Demesnes of the Crown, letting them out to Farm every Year, to those who offer'd most; but in order to get an absolute Power over the Churches, when the Bishops dy'd, he left their Sees vacant, and enjoy'd their Revenues. That of Canterbury was vacant above five Years, till King William falling dangerously Sick, sent for the Abbot Anselm, and invested him with that Arch-bishop against his Will.

St. An-

Bishop of

This Saint was the Son of Gondulphus and Ermemberga, and was born at Aosta on the Alps, A. D. 1033. After having compleated his Studies, and having travell'd for some time in Burgundy and France, he embrac'd the Monastick Life (at the Age of 27 Years) in the Abbey of Bee, and put himself under the Tuition of Lanfranc Prior of that Monastery: when the latter was made Abbot of St. Stephen at Caen, about three Years after, he was subjoined in his room, and in like manner succeeded Herluin Abbot of Bee, who died in 1078. St. Anselm took some Journeys into England whilst he had the Government of that Abbey; by which means having given special Proofs of his extraordinary Abilities in this Kingdom, he was chosen Arch-bishop of Canterbury, March 6. A. D. 1093. and was consecrated on the fourth Day of December following. Then he went to salute the King, and offer'd him the Sum of Five hundred Pounds towards carrying on the War which that Prince undertook against his Brother Richard, to recover the Dukedom of Normandy. The King at first seem'd to be well satisfy'd with this Present, but some of his Courtiers insinuated that it was not sufficient, and that if his Majesty would signify his dissatisfaction never so little to the Arch-bishop, as much more might be got from him: Therefore the King sent him word, That he was unwilling to receive the Money which was proffered by him, as being too small a Sum: The Arch-bishop after having entreated him to accept of it, refus'd to give any more, and withdrew from the Court. However, some time after, he went to meet the King at Hastings just before his departure for Normandy, and deliver'd his mind freely to him, concerning the Reformation of the Churches of England, and the necessity of calling a Council for that purpose. The King was not well pleas'd with what he said, and made another demand of Money: but the Arch-bishop refusing even to disburse what he had proffer'd at first, incur'd his high displeasure, and was oblig'd to retire with Precipitation. Upon the return of this Prince, he begg'd leave to go to Rome, to receive the Pall from the Hands of Pope Urban II. but the King denying his Request, told him, that 'twas not customary in his Kingdom, to acknowledge any other Person as Pope, than him whom he and his Prelates should think fit to approve, and having afterwards held an Assembly of Bishops and Lords for that purpose, it was declar'd therein, that Urban II. should not be acknowledged. Whereupon St. Anselm having undertaken to vindicate that Pope, all the Prelates except the Bishop of Rocheſter resolv'd, as well as the King, no longer to own him as Primate or Arch-bishop: He prefer'd a Petition that he might have leave to depart out of England, but it was rejected; nevertheless a delay was propos'd till Whitsontide, which being accepted of by him, he was left at liberty to return to Canterbury; yet he was no sooner arriv'd there, but his most faithful Friends and Servants were made Prisoners or Banished.

In the mean while, the King sent two Clergy-men to Rome, to endeavour to bring over Pope Urban to his Party, and to make himself Master of the Pall: The Pope sent back the Bishop of Albano with the two Clerks, who manag'd the business so well, that he persuaded the King to cause Urban to be own'd; nevertheless this Legate could not be induc'd to consent to the deposing of Anselm. At last the King perceiving himself not to be able to accomplish his design, either to cause him to be depos'd, or to oblige him to do what he requir'd, was reconcil'd with him, by giving him the Pall which Urban's Legate had brought for his use. St. Anselm liv'd in quiet for some time, whilst the King pass'd over into Normandy, which Duchy was resign'd to him by his Brother Richard; but at his return, a resolution was taken to exact a great Sum of Money of the Arch-bishop, who to avoid the Storm, sued for a permission to go to Rome; but not being able to obtain it, notwithstanding his reiterated solicitations at three several times, he departed without leave, and embark'd at Dover; from whence he pass'd into France, and afterwards taking a Journey to Italy, went directly to Rome in the Year, 1098. where he was joyfully entertain'd by Pope Urban, but his Residence in that City being inconvenient by reason of the excessive Heats, he retir'd to a Village near Capua, where the Pope soon gave him a Visit, upon his arrival at the Siege of Capua, which Place was invested by Roger Duke of Apulia. After the raising of the Siege, the Pope held a Council at Bari, in which St. Anselm assisting, disputed earnestly against the Greeks, about the Precession of the Holy Ghost, and entreated the Pope and the Bishops, not to excommunicate the King of England. When the Council was concluded, he accompany'd the Pope to Rome, and some Days after, the King of England, to whom Urban had had written that he ought to re-establish St. Anselm in his Metropolitan See, sent thither an Arch-bishop Ambassador, who obtain'd a Demurrer till the Festival of St. Michael. St. Anselm being inform'd of the matter, determin'd to go to Lyons; but the Pope oblig'd him to stay, in order to be present in a Council, which was to be held at Easter in the Year, 1099. Thus he resided during six Months at Rome, and was very highly esteem'd in that City. The Writer of his Life observes, that certain English Men, who came to visit him, being desirous to Kiss his Feet as it was usually done to the Pope's, he would not suffer them to do it, and that the Pope admir'd his Humility in that particular: Lastly, St. Anselm having assisted in the Council of Rome, A. D. 1099. in which Laicks who took upon them to give Investitures, and those Clergy-men who receiv'd them from their Hands, were excommunicated, he took leave of the Pope, and retir'd to Lyons; where within a little while after, he was inform'd of the Death of Urban II. and afterward of that of William II. King of England, which happen'd in the Month of August A. D. 1100.

Henry I. his Successor immediately recall'd St. Anselm to England, where he was no sooner arriv'd, but he had new contests with that Prince about the Investitures and the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, which he refus'd to take. Forasmuch as this Affair was regulated at Rome, it was requisite that the King should make application to that Court, to endeavour to cause the Resolution which had been taken there, to be chang'd: However, St. Anselm refus'd to ordain the Bishops, who had receiv'd Investiture from the King, and nothing could be obtain'd from Rome. Afterward this Arch-bishop being perswaded by the King to take a Journey to Rome to find out some Expedients for the adjusting of that Affair, went thither accompany'd with an Ambassador: Upon their Arrival the Matter was debated A. D. 1105. in the presence of Pope Paschal II. to whom the Ambassador peremptorily declar'd, That the King his Master would sooner be prevail'd upon to part with his Kingdom, than with his right to the Investitures; The Pope reply'd, That he would sooner lose his Life than suffer him to retain it. However, at last it was agreed upon, That the King of England should enjoy certain Privileges which were in his possession, but that he should lay no manner of claim to the Investitures: Therefore the Excommunication which he was suppos'd to have incurr'd, by granting the Investiture of Benefices, was taken off; but it was ordain'd, That those Persons who had receiv'd them from his Hands, should remain excommunicated for some time, and that the giving them Absolution for that Offence should be reserv'd to St. Anselm. The Affair being thus determin'd, the Ambassador and St. Anselm set forward in their Journey, but when they were arriv'd near Lyons, the Ambassador declar'd to him in his Master's name, that he was forbidden to return to England, unless he would promise him to submit to the Custom which prevail'd in that Kingdom, without having any regard to what had been ordain'd to the contrary by the Pope. St. Anselm refusing to enter into such an Engagement, stay'd some time at Lyons, and having pass'd from thence into Normandy, at last came to an Accommodation with the King of England, on condition that the Churches which King William II. had first made subject to the Payment of a certain Tax, should be exempted from it, and that his Majesty should restore what he had exacted of the Clergy, and every thing that was taken from the Church of Canterbury, during the exile of the Arch-bishop. After this Agreement, which was concluded, A. D. 1106. between the King and the Arch-bishop at Bec Abbey, St. Anselm return'd to England, was re-establish'd in his Arch-bishoprick, and enjoy'd it peaceably till his Death, which happen'd three Years after, in the 16th since his advancement to that Dignity, and the 76th of his Age, A. D. 1109.

St. Anselm is no less famous for his Learning, and the great number of his Writings, than for his Conduct and the Zeal he shew'd in maintaining the Rights of the Church. The largest Edition of his Works is the last, published by Father Gerberon, and it is that which we shall follow, being divided into three Parts: The First of these containing Dogmatical Treatises, bears the Title of Monologia; that is to say, a Treatise of the Existence of God, of his Attributes, and of the Holy Trinity: It is so call'd, by reason that it is compos'd in form of the Meditations of a Man, who reasons with himself to find out Divine Truths, and who explains them accordingly as they are discover'd by him. It is a very subtil Work, and contains a great Number of Metaphysical Arguments,

He continues to Treat of the same Subject, and observes the same method of Writing in the Prologia, where the Person who reason'd with himself in the first Work, making his Addresses to God, Discourses of his Existence, Justice, Wisdom, Immenity, Eternity, and of his being the Summum Bonum or Sovereign Good. A certain Monk nam'd Gaunilon, having perus'd this Treatise, could not approve the Argument which St. Anselm makes use of therein, to prove the Existence of God, taken from the Idea of a most perfect Being: We have (says he) at least the Idea of a most perfect Being; therefore this Being of necessity Exists. Gaunilon not being able to comprehend this Argument (which seems to be a Sophism or meer Fallacy to those who are not endu'd with a sound and penetrating Judgment to discern the force of it) wrote a small Tract on purpose to refute it, in which he objects every thing that is most subtil and plausible, to overthrow this Ratiocination. St. Anselm return'd a very solid Answer, in which he enervates his Adversary's Objections, and makes it appear, that his Argument is Rational and Convincing.

St. Anselm The Treatise of Faith, of the Holy Trinity, and of the Incarnation Dedicated to Pope Arch-bishop Urban II. was written against a French Clergy-man nam'd Roscelin Tutor to Abaelard, who undertook to prove, That the three Persons of the Trinity are three different Things; because otherwise it might be said, That the Father and the Holy Ghost were Incarnate. St. Anselm being as yet Abbot of Bee, began a Treatise to confute this Error; but the Maintainer thereof having abjur'd it in a Council held by the Arch-bishop of Rheims in his Province, he left the Work imperfect; yet compleated it afterward in England, being there inform'd, that he who broach'd this Error, persisted therein, and declar'd that he abjur'd it, only for fear of being Assassinated by the People. St. Anselm at first lays down for a Maxim, That we ought not to argue against that which the Church believes, nor against that which Faith Teaches us, and that we ought not to Reject that which we cannot Comprehend; but that we ought to acknowledge, that there are many things which are above our Understanding. Afterward he relates Roscelin's Proposition expressed in these Terms: If the three Divine Persons be one and the same Thing and not three Things consider'd every one apart, as three Angels or three Souls, nevertheless in such a manner, that they are the same Thing in Will and Power; it follows, That the Father and the Holy Ghost were Incarnate with the Son. St. Anselm declares that this Man admits three Gods, or else that he does not know what he says: He asks him what he means by three Things, and acknowledges, that in one sense it may be said, That the three Persons of the Trinity are three Things, if their Relation one to another be understood by that Term; but that it cannot be so said, if their Substance be understood, which seems to be Roscelin's meaning, since he says, That they are Three distinct Things, as three Souls and three Angels: He confutes this Opinion, and shews, that the distinction of the Persons is sufficient to the end that it may be said, That the Son is Incarnate, without inferring, That the Father and the Holy Ghost are so. Afterward he resolves this Question, Why the Son was Incarnate rather than the Father or the Holy Ghost; shews that there is but one Person and two Natures in Jesus Christ; and explains the Procession of the Divine Persons.

The Treatise of the Procession of the Holy Ghost against the Greeks, is no less Theological than the former: For the Arch-bishop proves therein, That the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Son as well as from the Father, and discusses the principal Questions relating to his Procession.

His Treatise of the Fall of the Devil, is written in form of a Dialogue and the Subject of it is less obscure. He shews, That altho' the Good Angels receiv'd from God, all the Good that was done by them, and even the Gift of Perseverance; yet it cannot be said, That the Bad did not persevere, because God deny'd them that Gift, but because they would not persevere: That the Good Angels were in a capacity of Sinning as well as the Bad; but that having freely preferr'd Righteousness to Unrighteousness, they had as a recompence, the assurance of never swerving from the former: And that the Bad on the contrary, having voluntarily fallen from Righteousness, lost for ever the Good which they had, and put themselves out of a Capacity of ever becoming Righteous. Afterward he treats of the nature of Evil, and proves that it consists only in a privation of Good, and debates some other subtil Questions.

The Treatise which shews, Why God was made Man? Discovers its Subject in the very Title, and is more particularly explain'd in the Preface. This Treatise (says he) is divided into two Books; the first of which contains the Objections rais'd by the Infidels, who imagine it to be contrary to Reason, That a God should become Man, with the Answers of the Faithful to their Arguments; and it is shewn therein, That 'tis impossible for any Man to be Sav'd without the Mediation of a God Incarnate. In the second Book 'tis prov'd, That Humane Nature is design'd to enjoy everlasting Life, both in respect of the Soul and of the Body; and that this advantage cannot be obtain'd but by the means of a God-Man.

The Treatise of Original Sin, was compos'd immediately after the preceeding, and in it are discuss'd many Questions about the nature of Sin, and the manner how it is communicated to all the Posterity of Adam.

The Treatise of Truth, of the Will, and of Liberty, contains variety of Metaphysical Principles concerning those Matters, to explain their Nature and Kinds. These Discourses are written, in form of Dialogues as well as the preceeding.

In the following Treatise, he enquires into the means of reconciling Free-will with Fore-knowledge, Predestination and Grace. As for Fore-knowledge and Predestination, all his Discourse on those Matters is rambling, and in some places very obscure.

The Subject of the Three next Treatises is less intricate, and the first of them Dedicated to Valeran Bishop of Naumburg, is about the use of Unleavened Bread; in which the Author maintains against the Greeks, that altho' the Eucharist may be administred with Unleavened and Leavened Bread, yet 'tis most expedient to make use of the former. The second is a Letter written by the said Valeran, complaining of the great number of Ceremonies used in the administration of the Sacraments, and entreating St. Anselm to resolve this Question, viz. Why the sign of the Cross is made on the Bread, and on the Chalice; and why the Chalice is usually cover'd with a Vail or † Pale before the Consecration? In the end he gives him to understand, that he was reconcil'd with Pope Paschal II. St. Anselm returns him an Answer in the following Treatise, That the variety of Customs and Ceremonies, does not hinder the Unity of the Faith, and alledges certain Mytical Reasons for making the sign of the Cross on the Host, and on the Chalice, and for covering the latter with a Vail.

To these Treatises is annex'd another small Tract, in which he asserts, That Clergy-men, who make Confession of Sins of the Flesh committed privately, may be re-establish'd in the Functions of their Order, after having done Penance. This Piece is only an extract of St. Anselm's Letter to the Abbot William.

In the Treatise of Marriages forbidden between near Relations, he enquires into the Reasons of that Prohibition, which he extends only to the sixth degree of Consanguinity.

There is nothing relating to Divinity in his Treatise of the Grammarian.

In that of the Will of God, being the last of the Dogmatical, of which the first Part of his Works is compos'd, he explains the different Senses, in which the Term of the Will of God is taken, and the different kinds of Wills that may be distinguish'd in him.

To these Works is to be added a Treatise of Peace and Concord, which is inserted in the end of the Volume; a Piece that is well worthy of St. Anselm and which is altogether written in his Style.

The second Part of the Works of this learned Prelat contains the Parænetick and Ascetic Treatises, viz. 1. Sixteen Homelies, the First of which is on the 24th Chapter of Ecclesiastes, and the others on divers Gospels: Indeed the first is only found in the ancient Editions of his Works, and the rest were since added; but they are all of the same Style, and some of them bear St. Anselm's Name in certain Manuscripts; so that 'tis very probable, that they all belong to him. 2. An Exhortation to the contempt of Temporal Things, and to the desire of Eternal, publish'd by Father Theophilus Renaudeus, which contains wholsom Admonitions compris'd in short and patherical Sentences. Altho' there be no proof, that this Piece is St. Anselm's; nevertheless it is very conformable to his manner of Writing. 3. Advice to a dying Person, which is a Form of assisting Persons at the Hour of Death, bearing St. Anselm's Name in certain Manuscripts. 4. A Poem in Hexameter and Pentameter Verses, on the Contempt of the World, which altho' Printed under this Arch-bishop's Name; yet does not bear it in the Manuscripts, but that of Bernard of Cluny, and in another, that of Roger Monk of Bec: This Poem is follow'd by two other very short Pieces on the same Subject, which appear to be written by the same Author. 5. A Collection of 21 Meditations on different Subjects. 6. Seventy four Prayers. 7. A Psalter in honour of the Virgin Mary; that is to say, certain Stanza's of Hymns on the Psalms of her Office, with other entire Hymns for the Canonical Hours, and the Festivals of the Blessed Virgin. This Piece does not bear St. Anselm's Name in any Manuscript, and seems to me to be unworthy of so great an Author.

The third Part comprehends St. Anselm's Letters distributed into four Books, in the First of which are contain'd those that he wrote whilst he was a simple Monk, which are 77 in Number; in the Second, those that were written by him being Abbot of Bec, to the Number of 53; in the Third, those that he compos'd when Arch-bishop; and in the Fourth, 106 Letters which never were as yet Printed. There are also Nine others in the Supplement taken out of Tome IX. of the Spicilegium by Father Luke Dachery. We shall not here produce the Extracts of all these Letters, it being sufficient to hint, That they are either such as relate to Compliments or particular Affairs, or to Morality and Piety, or to the Monastick Discipline and that of the Churches of England. Besides these Letters but now recited, there are Eight others in the ninth Tome of the Spicilegium, which are not compris'd in the four Books of Letters belonging to the Works of this Arch-bishop.

The Works falsely attributed to St. Anselm are reserv'd for the Appendix, and the First of these is call'd, An Illustration or Dialogue concerning Theological Points; being a Body of Divinity by way of Question and Answer, which bears St. Anselm's Name in some Manuscripts, but neither is of his Style, nor conformable to his Doctrin. Trithemius attributes a Piece under this Title, to Honoratus of Autun.

The Second is a Dialogue concerning the Passion of our Lord, in which the Virgin Mary is introduc'd discoursing with St. Anselm: It is a supposititious Piece and forged at pleasure.

The Third is the Treatise of the Measure of the Cross, which is a Moral Explication of these Words of Jesus Christ: If any one will follow me, he must deny himself, and take up his Cross. 'Tis a Book full of very devout Expressions, in which the Author cites St. Bernard, and therefore it cannot belong to St. Anselm, who died before that Saint was in a Capacity to write.

The Fourth is a Treatise of the Conception of the Virgin Mary, the Author of which explains the Solemnity of the Festival of the Conception: The State of the Question plainly shews, that this Piece is of a later date than the time of St. Anselm; since the Author treats of that Festival, which he supposes to be of considerable Antiquity, and yet did not begin

St. Anselm begin to be instituted till St. Bernard's time. There is a certain Manuscript, in which this Arab-bishop Treatise is attributed to Hervens, a Monk of the Monastery founded by Ebbo, in the Village of Dol near Bourges, who liv'd in the XII. Century.

The Fifth is another Tract in the same Festival of the Conception of the Virgin Mary, which is more visibly spurious.

The Sixth is an History of the Passion of St. Guigner and his Companions, which is rather a Romance, than a pious and true Narration.

The Seventh is a small Tract on the Monastick Stability, of which St. Anselm may well be reputed to be the Author.

The Eighth is a Dialogue about Matters of Religion between a Christian and a Jew, compos'd by Gislebert a Monk of Westminster, and dedicated to St. Anselm.

The Ninth is another Dialogue of the same Nature, compos'd by the Abbot Rupert.

The Tenth is a Collection of certain useful Sentences, that are attributed to St. Anselm and which are very suitable to his Genius, as well as two other small Tracts that follow them.

The last is a Fabulous Relation of two Miracles falsely ascrib'd to St. James the Apostle.

This Edition does not contain the Treatise of the Sacrament of the Altar, imputed in some Manuscripts to St. Anselm, which cannot be his, in regard that it comprehends certain Extracts of the Book of Divine Offices, by the Abbot Rupe; and which belongs to William of St. Thierry, according to the Manuscript of Longpont, under whose Name it was Printed in the Bibliotheca Ordinis Cisterciensis. Neither do we find in the same Edition, the Treatise of the Parts and Actions attributed to God, which are extant among St. Bonaventure's Works, and among the supposititious Works of St. Augustin and St. Jerom; because it does not bear St. Anselm's Name in any Manuscript, no more than the Tracts of the Image of the World, that are inserted among the Works of Honoratus of Autun, and of which the Authors are unknown.

We do not meet with any Ecclesiastical Writers before St. Anselm, who wrote after so Scholastick a manner, nor who have started so many Metaphysical Questions, and argu'd so subtly, as he has done: He is also the First who compos'd long Prayers in form of Meditations: His Letters are written in a plainer Style, but they are less accurate: His Exhortations are simple Homelies, full of mystical Notions, in which there is not much Eloquence, and very little Morality. He does not seem to have been well vers'd in positive Divinity, nevertheless he had perus'd St. Augustin's Works, and took out of them many Principles, which he makes use of, in his Theological Ratiocinations.

There are two Gothick Editions of his Works, viz. one A. D. 1491. at Nuremberg, and the other at Paris in 1544 and 1549. They were also Publish'd at Venice in the last of these Years, and at Colen in 1573. Father Picard a Regular Canon of St. Victor at Paris, set forth an Edition much larger than the former, Printed at Colen in 1612. Some time after, Father Theophilus Renaudus a Jesuit caus'd one to be Printed at Lyons in 1630. And at last Father Gerberton a Benedictin Monk of the Congregation of St. Maur, Publish'd a new Edition much finer and more correct than the preceding, Printed at Paris in 1675. which is a signal Proof of his accurate Industry and sound Judgment, whose Merit is well known in the Common-wealth of Learning.

Eadmer
St. Anselm's Pupil.

To St. Anselm's Works are annex'd those of Eadmer a Monk of Canterbury and his Pupil; the First of which is the Life of his Tutor, written very largely, and in a very plain Style.

The Second is call'd, The History of Noveltries, and divided into six Books, of which the first Four contain a Relation of the Conteſts which St. Anselm had with the Kings of England about the Affair of the Investitures, and of the Persecutions he suffer'd upon that Account; and the Two last, the History of the Transactions in the Church of Canterbury under Radulphus his Successor, who was translated from the Bishoprick of Rocheſter to the Archbishoprick of Canterbury, five Years after St. Anselm's Death, and govern'd that Church till A. D. 1122.

The Third is a Treatise of the excellent Qualities of the Virgin Mary, in which he extols her Nativity, Annunciation, Assumption, the Love that she had for her Son, and the Advantages she procur'd for Men, and ends with a Prayer made to her.

The Fourth is a particular Tract of the four Cardinal Vertues observable in the Blessed Virgin.

The Fifth is a Discourse of Beatitude, or rather of the State of the Blessed in Heaven, which he had heard deliver'd by St. Anselm.

The Sixth is a Collection of divers Similitudes and Comparisons that were taken out of St. Anselm's Works, or which he had heard from his Mouth.

The Same Author likewise compos'd a Treatise of Ecclesiastical Liberty, and wrote the Lives of St. Wilfrid and St. Dunstan, and many Letters which are not as yet Published. He died A. D. 1111.

CHAP. X.

Of the Ecclesiastical Writers of the Eleventh Age, who compos'd Treatises of Church-discipline or Commentaries on the Holy Scripture.

BURCHARD a German by Nation, a Monk of Lobes and the Pupil of Olbert Abbot of Gemblours, succeeded Franco his Brother in the Bishoprick of Worms A. D. 996. He assisted in the Council of Selingenstadt held by Aribo Arch-bishop of Mentz in 1023. and died in 1026. He compil'd by the help of Olbert a Collection of Canons, distributed according to the Matters, and divided into twenty Books, call'd Decrees; in which he has copy'd out and follow'd Regino, but he has added many things and even committed several Errors which Regino never fell into. This Work was Printed at Colen in 1548. and the next Year at Paris, and at the end of it are annex'd the Canons of the Council of Selingenstadt: 'Tis compos'd very Methodically, but without a due choice of Matters; being full of Quotations of the false Decretals of the Popes, according to the Custom of that Time.

ARIBO, the nineteenth Arch-bishop of Mentz is plac'd by Sigebert and Trithemius in the Class of the Ecclesiastical Writers: The former only attributes to him a certain Commentary on the Fifteen gradual Psalms, and the other adds a Letter to Berno Abbot of Richenaw and some others. He says, That that Arch-bishop held in the Year, 1023. a Council at Selingenstadt, with Burchard Bishop of Worms, and the other Bishops and Abbots of his Province, in which were made very useful Constitutions, and that he died under the Emperor Conrad, A. D. 1031.

BERNO, a Monk of St. Gall, and afterward Abbot of Richenaw, who was contemporary with, and the familiar Friend of Aribo, is likewise recommended by Trithemius, as a Person not inferiour in Knowledge to any of the learned Men of his Time: He was more especially Skilful in the Art of Musick, which was much study'd in that Age, and compos'd many Works, as well in Prose as in Verse. We shall here mention those that Trithemius has taken notice of, viz. A very elegant and useful Treatise, Dedicated to Pilgrin Arch-bishop of Colen, but he does not declare the Subject of it; A Treatise of Musical Instruments; Another of the coming of our Lord, Dedicated to Aribo; A Book of the Office of the Mass; one of the Fast of the Ember-weeks; one of Saturdays Fast; another of the Time of the Monocord, and several Letters. But Trithemius has forgotten to make mention of the Life of St. Ulric Bishop of Augsburg, compos'd by that Author, and set forth by Surius; as also of the Life of St. Meginrad Bishop and Martyr, which Father Mabillon Publish'd in the second Part of the fourth Benedictin Century. Berno flourish'd under the Emperor Henry II. from A. D. 1014. till 1048. when he died, after having been Abbot during forty Years.

Berno Ab-

His principal Work is the Treatise of the Office of the Mass, in which he enquires into the Authors of it, and the Original of the Prayers of which 'tis Compos'd. He supposes that in the beginning of the Church, the Mass was not said after the same manner as afterwards; that in the time of the Apostles, no other Prayers were recited but the Lord's Prayer; and that for that Reason St. Gregory Pope ordain'd, that the Lord's Prayer should be said over the Host after the Consecration: He adds, That the Canon was not made by a single Person, but that it was augmented from Time to Time; and that the other Parts of the Mass were Establish'd by Popes or by Holy Fathers: Lastly, he Treats in particular, of the Gloria in Excelsis, and of the times when it ought to be said; of the Solemnity of the Octaves, of Pentecost, of the Office for the Sundays in Advent and other Sundays of the Year; of that of the four Ember-weeks; and of other Rubricks of the Divine Office. But it ought to be observ'd, That in this Book, as in other Works of the same Nature, divers Matters of Fact are advanc'd, without sufficient Ground, and even contrary to the Truth of History.

BRUNO Duke of Carinthia, Uncle by the Father's side to the Emperor Conrad II. was ordain'd Bishop of Wurtzburg, A. D. 1033. He wrote a Commentary on the Psalms, taken out of the Works of the Fathers, with certain Annotations on the Songs of the Old and New Testament, on the Lord's Prayer, and on the Apostles Creed, as also on those of St. Athanasius and St. Ambrose. He died, A. D. 1045. being crush'd to Pieces under the Ruins of a House which fell upon him, as he accompany'd the Emperor Henry III. who was going to carry on the War in Hungary. His Works were Printed at Colen in 1494. and inserted in the Bibliotheca Patrum of the Colen Edition, and in the last at Lyons.

John or Jeannelin Abbot of Erbrestein.

Father Mabillon, Publish'd in the first Tome of his Analeſta, the Preface belonging to a Treatise of Prayers, taken out of the Fathers, and Dedicated (as he proves it) to the Empress Agnes, the Wife of the Emperor Henry III. with certain Extracts of these Prayers, Copied out of an ancient Manuscript of the Monastery of St. Arnulphus at Metz. The Preface bears the Name of John Abbot, and Father Mabillon shews that he is apparently John surnam'd Jeannelin by reason of the lowness of his Stature, who was sometime Monk of St. Benignus at Dijon, afterwards Prior of Fecamp under William Abbot, and at last nominated Abbot of Erbreſtein, by the Emperor Henry III. A. D. 1052. This Author makes mention in that Preface, of four or five other Treatises which he had compos'd, viz. one of the Institution of a Widow; another of the Life and Manners of Virgins; a third of Alms; and a fourth of the Heavenly Jerusalem or of Contemplation; the greatest part of those Prayers are also contain'd in the Book of Meditations, attributed to St. Augustin.

There are likewise in the same Place, Letters of the same Abbot, written by him when Prior of Fecamp: In the Two first, he consents to the Proposal made him by William I. King of England, that Vitalis Abbot of Bernay, should be translated to Westminster, and that his Brother Osborn, a Monk of Troarn, should be substituted in his room. By the Third, directed to Warin Abbot of St. Arnulphus at Metz, he requires a certain Monk, nam'd Benedict, to be sent back again, who was then in his Abbey.

Warin
Abbot of St. Arnulphus at Mets.

WARIN returns him a large Answer, complaining of his rude Manner of treating him; and declares, That the Monk whom he demanded, did not belong to his Jurisdiction, by reason that after having taken upon him the Vows of Religion, under the Abbot William, he was plac'd by that Abbot in the Monastery of Gorze, which he left to go to that of St. Arnulphus, with the Permission of the Priors of Gorze, and even of the Abbot William.

William Abbot of
St. Arnulphus at Mets.

Warin had for his Successor, in the Abbey of St. Arnulphus at Mets, WILLIAM, who was chosen by Manasses Arch-bishop of Rheims, to be also Abbot of St. Remy. William wrote to Pope Gregory VII. about the Affair, protesting that he did not accept of that Office without a great deal of Reluctancy and Trouble, and so much the rather, in regard that he had no prospect of discharging it with good success, by reason of the Irregularities that were then Predominant among the Monks of that Monastery. The Pope did not approve that this Abbot should have the Government of two Abbies at once, yet left him at Liberty to retain both: However, William himself soon repented of having had any thing to do with the Abbey of St. Remy; for Manasses, who only nominated him, to the end that he might Pillage the Revenues of the Monastery, with greater impunity, perceiving that the Abbot would not suffer it, treated him so rudely, that at last he forc'd him to leave it; which William did, severely reprehending the Arch-bishop for his Tyrannical and Exorbitant Practices, as it appears from the two Letters which he wrote to him, publish'd by Father Mabillon in the first Tome of his Analeſta, with that Abbot's Letter to Pope Gregory VII. four other Letters, and a Prayer by the same Author.

Robert de Tombale-ne, Abbot of St.
Vigor at Bayeux.

At the same time liv'd Robert de Tombalene, a Monk of St. Michael's Mount, and afterwards Abbot of St. Vigor at Bayeux, who wrote a Commentary on the Canticles, the Prolegomena, to which was set forth by Father Mabillon, with an Extract of the Work it self, in the first Tome of his Analeſta. This Extract makes it appear, That the Commentary is not much different, from that which is attributed to St. Gregory the Great. There is a certain Manuscript without the Author's Name, in the Library of St. Vigor, and it was publish'd under that of Radulphus Abbot of Fontanelle, by Father Homey of the Order of the Hermits of St. Augustin, and Printed by Peter de Laune at Paris, A. D. 1684. This good Frier apparently had no other Ground to ascribe it to Radulphus than the Letter R, which he found in his Manuscript, which denoted Robert and not Radulphus, as he imagin'd.

Anselm
Bishop of Lucca.

ANSELM born at Mantua, of a noble Family, succeeded Alexander II. in the Bishoprick of Lucca: He receiv'd the Investiture from the Emperor Henry IV. and repenting of it some time after, retir'd to the Monastery of Cluny, from whence he was re-call'd by Gregory VII. to govern his Bishoprick in 1073. Afterwards he was always extremely wedded to the Interests of that Pope, and stiffly maintain'd them against the Emperor and Guibert the Antipope: He wrote two Letters against Guibert, in Vindication of Gregory; and made a Collection of certain Sentences, to shew, That Kings have no Right to be Masters of the Church-Revenues. These Works are referr'd to by Canisius, in the sixth Tome of his Antiquities. To him likewise is attributed a large Collection of Canons, of which there are some Manuscript-Copies in divers Libraries; but although it bears his Name in a certain Manu-

Manuscript of the Barberine Library, nevertheless 'tis not probable that it belongs to him; as M. Balufus has prov'd, in his Preface to Antonius Augustinus: 1. Because the Author of the Life of St. Anselm, Sigebert and Trithemius, have not made any mention of it. And 2. By reason that it contains some Decrees of Popes of a later Date than the Year 1086. which was that of the Death of Anselm of Lucca. Antonius Augustinus ascribes this Collection to Hildebert Arch-bishop of Mans.

Some in like manner attribute to DEUS-DEDIT Cardinal, with the Title of St. Eudoxia, who liv'd under Pope Victor III. a Collection of Canons divided into four Books, a Manuscript Copy of which is to be found in the Vatican Library. There is also a third Collection, bearing the same date, and call'd Polycarp; which was made by another Cardinal of the Church of Rome, nam'd GREGORY, and of which there are some Manuscript Copies in M. Colbert's Library. Deus-De-dit Cardinal.

Gregory
Cardinal.

BENNO, a German by Nation and Cardinal of the Church of Rome, was one of the greatest Adversaries of Pope Gregory VII. and wrote two Books against him, full of Reproaches and Invectives, which are compris'd in the Collection made by Ortlwinus Gratius, under the Title of, Fasciculus rerum Expetendarum & Fugiendarum, Printed in 1535. and afterwards set forth by Goldastus, in a Collection of Pieces, compos'd in favour of the Emperor Henry IV. against Pope Gregory VII. Benno Cardinal.

In this Collection, by Goldastus, is likewise contain'd a Treatise by Conrad, Tutor to Conrad Henry Bishop of Utrecht, call'd; An Apology for preserving the Unity of the Church, and putting an end to the Schism between the Emperor Henry, and Pope Gregory VII. which is also Printed among the Historians of Germany, publish'd by Freherus. Indeed some Persons attribute this last Treatise to Waldramus of Naumberg, and others to Weneric Bishop of Verceil, who flourish'd at the same time. Trithemius says, That the latter wrote a Letter in the Name of Thierry Bishop of Verdun, to Pope Gregory VII. in which he admonishes him, as a Friend, of every Thing that (as it was reported) he had acted or alledg'd contrary to the Rules of Justice and Equity, and conjur'd him to put a stop to those Irregularities.

ULRIC, descended of a Family of Bavaria at Ratisbon, a Monk of Cluny, made a Collection of the ancient Customs of that Abbey, in three Books, at the request of William Abbot of Richenaw. This Collection is contain'd in the fourth Tome of the Spicilegium, by Father Luke D' Achery. Ulric a
Cluny.

BERNARD, a Monk of the same Monastery, was likewise employ'd about that time, in writing on the same Subject; but his Work being not so compleat, Father Dachery did not think fit to publish it. But care must be taken, not to confound this Writer with another of the same Name, a Monk of Corby in Saxony, who flourish'd some time after, and wrote a Book in a very fine Style, but very Satyrical against the Emperor Henry IV. which is mention'd by Sigebert and Trithemius. Bernard Monk of Cluny.

Bernard
Monk of Corby in Saxony.

There is also a third Author of the same Name, who was a Clerk of the Church of Utrecht, and wrote Commentaries on Theodulus's Eclogues, of which mention is made in Sigebert. To these Authors may be added, certain Writers, of whom Trithemius takes particular notice, and whose Works are not as yet come to our Hands. Bernard Clerk of the Church of Utrecht.

ÆGILNOTHUS, Arch-bishop of Canterbury, famous for his extraordinary Charity, to whom he attributes a Piece in Commendation of the Virgin Mary, certain Letters and some other Works, flourish'd (according to his Account) under the Emperor Conrad the Young, A. D. 1030. Ægilnothus Archbishop of Canterbury.

CAMPANUS OF LOMBARDY, a renown'd Philosopher and Astronomer, was a Man of a subtil Wit, an able School-Divine, well vers'd in the Holy Scriptures and very skilful in the Art of Arithmetick, more especially in the Calendar: For all these commendable Qualities are attributed to him by Trithemius, who adds, That he set forth many small Tracts, the reading of which might be of very great use to Bishops, and among which he himself had perus'd the following, viz. a Treatise of Ecclesiastical Numbers; another of the manner of making Sun-dials; a Calendar; and some other Astronomical Works. This Author flourish'd, A. D. 1040. Campa-nus of
dy.

Sigebert of Gemblours, makes mention of another Scholastick Philosopher of Liege, nam'd FRANCO, who liv'd in the Year 1060. He compos'd a Treatise of the Quadrature of a Circle; another of the Calendar; and certain Commentaries on the Holy Scriptures. Franco a Philosopher of Liege.

BERTHORIVS, Abbot of the Monastery of Mount Cassin, joyn'd (according to Trithemius) the Study of the Holy Scriptures, to that of the Profane Sciences; and after having written, before his Conversion, certain Works relating to Philosophy and Physick; he compos'd, when Abbot, divers Discourses for the Edification and Benefit of the Monks under his Tuition.

ERARD, a Benedictin Monk, spent his Time in Preaching and Explaining the Holy Scriptures. Trithemius met with certain Commentaries on the whole Pentateuch, and divers Homilies written by this Author. Erard a
dictin Monk.

Adam Abbot of Perseme. ADAM, Abbot of Perseme, in the like manner apply'd himself to Preaching: He compos'd many Discourses for the use of his Monks, with several Homilies on the Festivals of the Saints, and on different Subjects, and some Commentaries on the Holy Scripture, of which Trithemius makes mention, without having seen any of them. M. Balusius has publish'd in the first Tome of his Miscellaneous Works, five Moral Letters by this Author, directed to Osmond a Monk of Mortemer in Normandy.

C H A P. XI.

Of the Authors who wrote Ecclesiastical History, or the Lives of the Saints in the Eleventh Century.

- MEGENFROY, MEGINFROY or MEGINFRED, a Monk of Fulda, wrote in the Year 1010. the Life of St. Emmeran Bishop of Ratisbon, directed to Arnulphus Count of Vogburg, and afterwards a Monk of the Monastery of St. Emmeran at Ratisbon, and refer'd to by Canisius in the second Tome of his Antiquities. The same Author compos'd Twenty four Books of History, cited by Trithemius, in the Life of St. Maximus Bishop of Mentz, which is in Surius's sixth Tome, November 18.
- SYRUS, a Monk of Cluny, and the Pupil of St. Maiol, wrote about the same time, the Life of his Tutor, dedicated to Odito; which was publish'd with great accuracy by Father Mabillon, in the fifth Benedictin Century, and with Aldebaldu's Addition by the Bollandists, in May 11.
- OSBERN or OSBERT, a Monk and Chanter of Canterbury, wrote in the beginning of the Century, the Life of St. Dunstan, with those of St. Odo and St. Alphegus. The Life of St. Dunstan, was set forth by Surius, under the Name of Osbert; but that Narration belongs to a later Author, since it was written in Lanfranc's Time, and Father Mabillon has publish'd the genuine Life of that Arch-bishop by Osbert, as well as that of Odo of Canterbury, and the Life of St. Alphegus, refer'd to by Bollandus in April 19.
- TANGMARUS, a Saxon, Dean of Hildesheim, compos'd a Relation of the Life of St. Bernard Bishop of that City and his Pupil, which was publish'd by Browerus and afterwards inserted in the last Edition of Surius. This Author wrote in the Year of our Lord, 1023.
- ARNOLD, a Canon of Herfeldt, wrote the Life of St. Godehard Abbot of that Monastery, who succeeded St. Bernard in the Bishoprick of Hildesheim, A. D. 993. and died in 1036. This Author was Meginfroy's Pupil, and had seen Godehard in his Youth, but he was inform'd of the Passages which he committed to Writing, by a certain old Man, who had spent his Life with that Saint. This Piece was set forth by Browerus, with the Life of St. Bernard; and these two Lives may well be reckon'd among the most accurate, that were written at that time.
- EBERARD, made a Narrative of the Life of St. Harvic Bishop of Salzburg, who died in 1024. He was his Pupil, and wrote a little while after his Death. This Work is inserted in the second Tome of Canisius's Collection.
- ARNULPHUS, Count of Vogburg, and afterwards a Monk of St. Emmeran at Ratisbon, compos'd two Books in form of Dialogues, of the Life of St. Emmeran, which were publish'd by Canisius, in the second Tome of his Antiquities.
- ERGHINFROY or ERGHINFRED, Abbot of Melck in Austria, wrote A. D. 1012. an Account of the Life and Miracles of St. Colman a Scotch Man, which is cited by Lambecius, in his Bibliotheca.
- Tritheimius reckons among the Ecclesiastical Writers, of the beginning of this Century, RUPERT, Abbot of Mount Cassin, whom he much commends; and says, That he compos'd certain Sermons, and some other Works, but we have none of his Pieces in our Possession.
- DITHMAR, the Son of Count Sigefroy and of Cunegonda, born in Saxony, A. D. 976. became a Monk of St. John at Magdeburg, under the Abbot Riddagius; was afterwards made Provost of Walbeck, and at last Bishop of Mersburg after Wigbert, whom he succeeded in 1008. He compil'd seven Books of Historical Chronicles, containing the Occurrences and Transactions under five Emperors, viz. Henry the Fowler, the Otho's, and Henry II. He intermixes in several places, a great deal of Ecclesiastical History, and enlarges in the Commendation of many reverend Bishops of his Time. He died A. D. 1018. and his Works were Printed at Frankfort in 1580. as also among those of the German Historiographers.

ADEMAR, or AIMAR DE CHABANOIS, a Monk of the Monastery of Ademar St. Cibar at Angoulesme, compos'd a Chronicle of the History of France, which begins A. C. 829. and ends in 1029. with a Catalogue of the Abbots of St. Martial at Limoges; publish'd by Father Labbe in his second Tome of his Library of Manuscripts: He took care to procure the Writing of the Treatise of Offices by Amalarius, and some attribute to him the Supplement to that Work, relating to St. Benedict's Rule, which Father Mabillon inserted in the second Tome of his Analecta, tho' 'tis more probable, that it belongs to Amalarius himself. We have also Ademar's Acrostick Verses, taken out of an Extract that he made of the Lives of the Popes, attributed to Damasus, by the Order of Roben Bishop of Angoulesme, which Verses were set forth by the same Father, in the first Tome of his Analecta. M. Balusius has in his Possession, a certain Manuscript Letter, (which he has thought fit to communicate to us) written by this Author, after the first Council of Limoges, held A. D. 1029. in which he assisted, and directed to Fouldain Bishop of Limoges, and to the Abbots and other Clergy-men of that Diocese; as also, to Arnulphus Bishop of Rhodex, to Thierry Bishop of Metz, to the Empress Cunegonda the Widow of the Emperor Henry, to Conon, to the Emperor Conrad, to William Duke of Guienne, and to Pope John, who is branded therein, as a brutish, cholerick and cruel Man. In this Letter, he relates many remarkable Passages that happen'd during the Contest about the Apostolical Dignity of St. Martial Bishop of Limoges, chiefly in reference to Benedict, Prior of the Abbey of St. Michael at Cluse in Piemont, who a little while after the Session of that Council, being arriv'd at a certain Place call'd La Bussiere, in the Province of Limousin, on the Festival of the Nativity of the Virgin Mary, publicly gave it out, with a great deal of Heat and Passion, That St. Martial ought not to be reckon'd among the Apostles, and that the Inhabitants of Aquitaine, who look'd upon him to be so, were Asses and ignorant Doters.

This being reported in the Monastery of St. Cibar, by two Monks of that Convent, who were then present at La Bussiere, made so great an impression on the Minds of the Friars, that all, except Aimar and Gosbert, embrac'd Benedict's Opinion; which gave occasion to this Letter, in which Aimar treats Benedict very rudely, who nevertheless, (even according to Aimar's Report) was a judicious and learned Person, but extremely Passionate, if we may give Credit in that respect to Aimar, in his own Cause: For it appears, That the Prior inveigh'd against him most bitterly at La Bussiere; accusing him as the Author of that Innovation, which he also term'd Herefie, and affirming that 'twas devis'd by him through Flattery, on purpose to gratifie the Abbot and Monks of Limoges, who had corrupted him with Money. Benedict added, That having disputed with Aimar upon that Point, he had baff'd him, and had oblig'd him to hide himself. Now Aimar wrote this Letter to refute the Prior's Arguments, declaring what had pass'd at Limoges, between himself and Benedict, whom he censures as an Impostor and Profligate Wretch: He likewise gives an account of the Contest that he had at Angoulesme, about the same Affair, with a certain Monk of Ravenna, being also an able Physician, nam'd Bernard, who came to La Bussiere with Benedict, and had learnt of him all the Arguments against the Apostleship of St. Martial. But it ought to be observ'd, that this Benedict said, That the Dispute could not be determin'd, but by a general Council of France and Italy, held in the Pope's presence: Quis ausus fuit Martialem predicare Apostolum, nisi prius grande generale Concilium omnium Episcoporum Gallia & Italia, una cum Papa Romano congregaretur, & ibi esset probatum, si est aut non est Apostolus? And so far as Benedict and a Monk of St. John d'Angely, who likewise maintain'd that Saint Martial was not an Apostle, peremptorily declar'd, That 'twas requisite to make application to the Pope, and to cause the Monks of St. Martial to be forbidden to place him in the Rank of the Apostles, for the future; Aimar replies, "That if the Pope being surpris'd by the Insinuations of envious Persons, should publish such a Prohibition, it would be more expedient to obey God, rather than the Pope of Rome; by reason that no Pope has receiv'd Power to absolve or excommunicate the Holy Apostles, nor to hinder the Church of God from doing well and speaking well: Si Papa subripiente consilio invicidorum hoc prohibet, tamen obedire oportet Deo magis quam Papæ Romano. Nulli etenim Papæ data est potestas vel absolvendi, vel excommunicandi sanctos Apostolos Dei, vel prohibendi Ecclesiam Dei a benefaciendo & recte loquendo. M. Balusius has also divers Sermons made in the Council of Limoges, relating to the Apostolical Dignity of St. Martial, which he supposes to have been written by the same Author.

HUGH, Arch-deacon of Tours, compos'd a small Dialogue between him and Fulbert Hugh Bishop of Chartres, containing an Account of an Apparition of St. Martin, seen by Hervens Arch-deacon of St. Martin at Tours, in the beginning of this Century, which was Publish'd by Father Mabillon, in the second Tome of his Analecta.

ODORAN, a Monk of St. Peter Le Vif at Sens, is the Author of a Chronicle, which Odoran begins at the Year of our Lord, 675. and ends in 1032. It was Printed in M. Du Chesne's Monks of St. Peter Collection of the Historians of France.

C.* 666. to Waf'n, who succeeded Richard in 1041. and died in 1048. It was set forth by Chapeauville, in his Collection of the Historians of Liege.

Hermannus Contractus, Monk of Richenaw.

HERMANNUS, surnam'd CONTRACTUS, by reason that his Limbs were shrunk, the Son of the Count of Weringen in Suevia, who was Educated in the Monastery of St. Gall, and afterwards became a Monk of Richenaw, flourish'd in the middle of the Century, and acquir'd much Skill in divers Languages and liberal Sciences. He compos'd a Chronicle, from the Creation of the World, to A. D. 1052. continu'd by Bertulphus of Constance, to 1065. It was Printed at Frankfurt, in 1583. in the Edition of the Historians of Germany, by Pistorius; in Canisius's Antiquities; and in the last Bibliotheca Patrum. To him are also attributed, certain Anthems in honour of the Virgin Mary; the Veni Sancte Spiritus; and some other † Profes or Hymns. Tribemius likewise makes mention of the following Works of this Author, viz. a Treatise of the Science of Musick; another of the Monochord; three Books of the manner of making the Astrolabe; one of its usefulness; one of the Eclipses; another of the Calendar; a Treatise of the Quadrature of a Circle, one of the Discord of Sounds, one of Physiognomy; and the Lives of divers Saints.

C H A P. XII.

Of the Greek Ecclesiastical Writers who flourish'd in the Eleventh Century.

Leotbe
Grammarian.

LEO, the Grammarian, is the Author of a Continuation of Theophanes's Chronicle, from A. C. 813. to 1013. which is apparently the Year when he wrote. It was publish'd by Father Combefis, in the end of Theophanes's Works; Printed at Paris, A. D. 1655.

Eugesip-pus.

EUGESIPPUS, an Author very little known, compos'd a Geographical Treatise of the Holy Land, publish'd by Allarius, in his Collection of the Greek and Latin Writers. 'Tis reported that this Treatise was written about A. D. 1040.

Theopha-nes the Ceramean, Archbishop of Tauromenium.

THEOPHANUS the Ceraean, Arch-bishop of Tauromenium in Sicily, liv'd in this Century, although we have already made mention of him in the Ninth Age, to which he is generally referr'd; but two Reasons invincibly prove, that he belongs to the Eleventh: The first is, That he cites Metaphrastes; and the other, that 'tis express'd, That the Homely on Palm-Sunday, was made in the Presence of King Roger, who could be no other Person but the Count of Sicily, whom he stiles King and Emperor, according to the usual Custom of the Greeks. The Homelies attributed to Gregory the Ceraean, in some Manuscripts, are not different from those of Theophanes; inasmuch, that it must either be an Error of the Transcribers, or else Theophanes had two Names. Let the Case be how it will, these Homelies being 72 in Number, are not Contemptible; in which the Author explains the literal Sense of the Gospels, and afterwards enlarges on the Allegorical and Moral; but his Style is plain, without any manner of Ornament, or loftiness of Expression.

Nilus Doxopa-trus, Archimandrita.

At the same time likewise flourish'd NILUS DOXOPATRIUS, Archimandrita or Abbot of his Convent; who by Count Roger's Order, compos'd a Treatise of the five Patriarchal Sees, and of the Arch-bishopricks and Bishopricks under their Jurisdiction; as also concerning the Institution of those Patriarchs, their Ranks, Titles, Rights and Privileges. Allarius has produc'd many Fragments of this Piece; and it was publish'd entire by M. Le Moine, in the first Tome of his Sacred Varieties.

Nicetas Pectora-tus Monk of Studa.

NICETAS PECTORATUS, besides the above-mention'd Treatise against the Latins, compos'd also some other Works; particularly a Treatise of the Soul, of which Allarius set forth a Fragment; an Hymn in Honour of St. Nicolas; and another in Commendation of Metaphrastes, referr'd to by the same Author.

Michael Psellus
Senator.

MICHAEL PSELLUS, descended of a noble Family in Constantinople, made so great Progress in the Studies to which he apply'd himself, that he became one of the most learn'd Men of that Age: He exercis'd the Office of a Senator, and was highly esteem'd by the Emperors: He was one of those Deputies whom Michael surnam'd Stratioticus, sent to Isaac Comnenus to treat with him, and the latter made use of his Service against Michael Ceru- larius;

Iarius; afterward he was chosen Tutor to Michael Ducas, who was advanc'd to the imperial Throne by his means, A. D. 1071. He follow'd the Fortune of that Emperor; and was oblig'd, when the same Prince was depos'd in 1078. to retire to a Monastery, where he died a little while after. The Greek Writers, who succeeded him, made many Encomium's on his profound Skill in all manner of Sciences; more especially Allatius, who gives us a very particular Character of him; and says, That none in that Age nor in the following, was ever more successful in inventing; nor observ'd a more regular Method; nor wrote with so admirable Eloquence, and discuss'd Matters so thoroughly; and lastly, that there is no Science, in which he has not written Commentaries, Abridgments or Treatises.

The Printed Works of Michael Psellus, are a Paraphrase in Verse on the Canticles, dedicated to Nicephorus Botoniata, which was publish'd in Greek by Meursius, and Printed at Leyden, A. D. 1617. and in Latin at Venice in 1573. A Commentary on the same Book, taken out of St. Gregory Nyssen, St. Nilus and St. Maximus, which is extant among Theodore's Works: Certain Questions about the Holy Trinity and the Person of Jesus Christ, Printed at Augsburg in 1608. Iambick Verses on the Vertues and Vices: Moral Discourses on Tantalus and Circe, and an Allegory of Sphinx, Printed at Basil in 1545. A Dialogue of the Operation of Demons, Printed at Paris in 1615. with M. Gaulmin's Notes: A Scholion or brief Commentary on the Chaldaick Oracles, Printed at Venice in 1593. and at Paris in 1599. A Treatise of the Faculties of the Soul, Printed at Paris in 1624. with Origen's Philocalia: Annotations on some Passages of St. Gregory Nazienzen, publish'd by Bilius: The Panegyrick and Office of Simeon Metaphrastes, set forth by Allatius: And a Treatise of the Seven general Councils, publish'd with several Poems by M. Bosquet, and Printed at Paris in 1632. Not to mention a great number of Books of Philosophy and Commentaries on Aristotle, which bear the Name of this Author, and are Printed at several Places.

Allatius likewise produces a Catalogue of many other Treatises written by Psellus, which are only extant in Manuscript; particularly, a Treatise against Eunomius; an Epitome of the Books of Moses; certain Theological Questions; divers Tracts about the Mysteries of Jesus Christ; many Homilies and some Letters: Notwithstanding the high esteem that Allatius has for this Author, his Works do not appear to be very useful, nor very learn'd, in respect of Ecclesiastical Matters, nor very eloquent. Although he was no Friend to Michael Cerularius, yet he maintain'd the Opinion of the Greeks concerning the Procession of the Holy Ghost.

In the end of the same Century liv'd SIMEON surnam'd the Younger, Abbot of the Simeon Monastery of Xerocerce, of whom we have 33 Orations or Sermons on Faith, and on the Christian and Monastick Manners; as also a Pious Treatise call'd, Hymns of Divine Love, in measur'd Prose, which the Greeks call Politick or Blank Verse; and 228 moral Maxims, which Jacobus Pontanus translated into Latin from the Manuscripts of the Libraries of Bavaria and Augsburg, and caus'd to be Printed at Ingolstadt in Quarto, A. D. 1603. Allatius gives us a Catalogue of 79 Homilies, 53 Hymns, and some Instructions by this Author, with the Titles and Beginings of them: Of the Homilies there are only Fifteen among those of Pontanus, and of the Hymns there are Twenty, which Pontanus has not publish'd, no more than the Instructions of which he makes mention. These Works are full of Moral and Ascetic Precepts; but there are also certain Maxims of the Hesychasts or Quietists: So that perhaps it may not be amiss, here to shew after what manner he lays down those Principles of Quietism, in his third Discourse of Prayer.

"In the first place (says he) three Things are to be Practis'd, in order to attain to what you desire, viz. the Contempt of all Rational and Irrational Creatures, Mortification, and a pure Conscience, free from all manner of Passions and particular Interests. Afterwards sitting alone in Tranquility in a Corner of your Cell, do what I am now about to tell you: Keeping your Door shut, lift up your Mind above all Vanities; that is to say, above all temporary and transitory Things, and bowing your Head to your Belly, hold your Breath; seek your Heart in Mind: At first you'll find thick Darkness, but by continuing this practice Day and Night, you will discover Wonders and meet with endless Consolation: For when the Mind has once found out the place of the Soul, it clearly perceives things which it never comprehended before; it discerns Air round about the Heart, and becomes altogether Luminous and full of Wisdom: And when a Man is arriv'd to that height of Perfection, if any evil Thought intervenes, it is expell'd and immediately disappears, before it can make any Impression; so that the Mind being exasperated drives away the Devil: You may learn the rest with God, by preserving Jesus Christ in your Heart.

This is the Model of Quietism fram'd by that Monk, who talks of nothing for the most part in his System of Divine Love, but Divine Illuminations and Lights, Divine Unions, Essential Unions with God; the Transformation of our Members into those of Jesus Christ, and other Matters of the like Nature. However it must be acknowledg'd, That otherwise the Works of this Author are full of most excellent Maxims, solid Principles, and very useful Instructions for promoting the Spiritual Life. There are also two other small Tracts by the same Author, viz. one of the alteration and impressions which the Elements make on the Bodies and Souls of Men; and the other, of the manner of God's Omnipresence in all Places, and how his Light is dispers'd every where. The same Method of Writing, and the same Principles are observable in these Pieces: But Simeon was cast into Prison in the end of his Life, for reproving the Emperor too freely (as some say) or as others will have it, upon account of his Erroneous Doctrins. He is also reputed to have first broach'd the Error of those Greek Monks, who imagin'd, That the Light which appear'd on Mount Tabor, was the uncreated and eternal Light of the Divine Majesty; and that all Happiness consisted in the Contemplation of it.

JOHN Arch-bishop of Euchaita in Paphlagonia, compos'd in the middle of this Century, certain Poetical Pieces in Iambick Verse, on the principal Histories of the Festivals of the Year. Printed at Eton, A. D. 1610. As also a Relation of the Lives of St. Eusebius and St. Dorotheus the Younger; some Extracts of which are produc'd by Allarius, in his Book of the Agreement of the Greek and Latin Churches, concerning Purgatory.

JOANNES THRACESIUS SCYLITZES, † Curopalata, who flourish'd under Alexis Comnenus, wrote a Continuation of Theophanes's History, from the Year 813. to 1081. when Alexis Comnenus was advanc'd to the imperial Dignity. It was Printed at Venice in Latin, of Gabius's Translation; and Peter Goar publish'd it in Greek, at the end of Cedrenus's Chronicle, part of the same History by Scylitzes, which begins at A. D. 1057. and ends in 1081.

GEORGIUS CEDRENTUS, a Monk, flourish'd in like manner in the end of the Century, and wrote Annals or an Epitome of History, from the beginning of the World to the Year 1057. It is only a Collection of divers Authors, more especially of George the Syncellus, whose Chronography he Copied out from the Creation of the World, to the Reign of Diocletian; of Theophanes, from Diocletian to Michael Curopalata; and of Joannes Thracensis Scylitzes, afterward Curopalata, to his time. In a word, his whole History is taken out of the Works of several Writers, the Extracts of which he has drawn up without much Judgment or Skill, in the Art of Critick. These Annals were Translated by Xylander, and Printed at Basil, A. D. 1566. and afterward at Paris in the Royal Printing-House, with the Notes of Fabrot and James Goar, in 1647.

CONSTANTINUS LICHUDES, who succeeded Michael Cerularius, A. D. 1058. in the Patriarchal See of Constantinople, compil'd certain Synodal Constitutions, which are contain'd in the Collection of the Greek and Roman Law, as well as a Synodal Decision of Michael Cerularius about Marriages, to the seventh Degree of Consanguinity; and some other Fragments of Constitutions by the same Patriarch, relating to forbidden Marriages.

JOHN XIPHILIN, of Trebisond or Trapezunt, a Monk of Mount Olympus, succeeded Constantin Lichudes, A. D. 1066. and died in 1078. We have still in our Possession his Homily on the Cross, or on the third Week of Lent, cited by Gretzer, and certain Decrees about Marriage inserted in the Collection of the Greek and Roman Law. 'Tis also reported, That there are to be seen in some Libraries, certain Homilies by this Patriarch, on all the Sundays of the Year; and some have imagin'd him to be the Author of the Epitome of Dion Cassius's History, but the latter assures us himself, That he was his Nephew, and that he compos'd that Abridgment under the Emperor Michael Ducas.

SAMONAS, Arch-bishop of Gaza, flourish'd (as 'tis suppos'd) in the end of this Century, and wrote a small Tract in form of a Dialogue, between Himself and a Saracen; in which he proves, That the Bread and Wine in the Eucharist, are chang'd into the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ. This Piece is extant in the Bibliotheca Patrum; but 'tis more probable, that that Arch-bishop did not live till the Thirteenth Century.

NICOLAS, Bishop of Metone, is also referr'd to the Eleventh Century: He compos'd a Treatise of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, like that of Samonas, against those who doubted that the Consecrated Bread and Wine, were really his Body and Blood: But there is yet a much greater probability that this Author belongs to the Twelfth Century. He likewise compos'd three Treatises of the Procession of the Holy Ghost against the Latins, of which some Manuscript-Copies (as we are inform'd by Allarius) are preserv'd in the Vatican Library: His Treatise of the Eucharist is in the Bibliotheca Patrum.

THEOPHYLACT, Arch-Bishop of Acria in Bulgaria, flourish'd under the Emperors Romanus Diogenes, Michael Ducas and Nicephorus Botoniatas. He took a great deal of pains in explaining the Holy Scripture, by making an Abridgment of St. Chrysostom's Commentaries, and after that manner compos'd his Commentaries on the four Gospels, on the Acts of the Apostles, on St. Paul's Epistles, and on four of the lesser Prophets, viz. Habakkuk, Jonas, Nabum and Hesekiel.

These Commentaries were Printed in Latin at Paris, A. D. 1554. and at Basil in 1570. The Commentaries on the Gospels were Printed in Latin at Antwerp in 1564. in Greek at Rome in 1542. and 1568. and in Greek and Latin at Paris in 1562. The Commentaries on the Acts, were Printed in Greek and Latin at Colen in 1568. The Commentaries on St. Paul's Epistles, were Printed in Latin at Rome in 1469. at Antwerp in 1564. at Colen in 1531. and at Paris in 1552. as also in Greek and Latin at London in 1536. Lastly, The Commentaries on the

the four lesser Prophets were Printed at Paris in 1549. and 'tis reported that there is extant an entire Manuscript Commentary on all the lesser Prophets, in the Library of Augsburg; Meursius has publish'd 75 Letters by this Author in Greek, Printed at Leyden in 1617. which were afterward translated into Latin by Marinerius, and Printed at Colen in 1622. Gretser likewise set forth under Theophylact's Name, a Discourse of the Crofs, and Father Pouftin another Treatise, which is an Institution dedicated to Constantin Porphyrogeneta. Joannes Vecus has cited certain Passages of the same Arch-bishop, relating to the Procession of the Holy Ghost, against the Latins; and 'tis reported that there is to be seen in the Library of the Duke of Bavaria, a Manuscript Treatise by him, concerning the Differences between the Greeks and Latins, and a Discourse on the Emperor Alexis Comnenus. Theophylact's Commentaries are very useful for the Literal Explication of the Holy Scriptures.

NICETAS SERRON, a Deacon of the Church of Constantinople, and afterward Arch-bishop of Heraclea, Coremporary with Theophylact, wrote a Commentary on St. Gregory Nazianzen's Homilies, which is inserted in Latin among the Works of that Father: To him likewise is attributed a Catena on the Book of Job, Printed in Latin at Venice in 1587. and at London in 1637. which nevertheless may be rather appropriated to Olympiodorus, than to this Author; but 'tis probable that the Commentary on the Poems of St. Gregory Nazianzen, Printed at Venice in 1563. under the name of Nicetas the Paphlagonian, belongs to this Nicetas of Heraclea.

NICOLAS, Sirnam'd the Grammarian, chosen Patriarch of Constantinople, in the Year 1084. wrote a large Letter to the Emperor Alexis Comnenus to prove, That 'tis not lawful to take away Bishopricks from the Metropolitans. He likewise made certain Constitutions about Marriage, which are to be found with this Letter, in the Collection of the Greek and Roman Law.

PETER, Deacon and Chartophylax or Keeper of the Records of the Church of Constantinople, made, A. D. 1090. his brief Answers to certain Cases that were propos'd to him: They are in like manner compris'd in the Collection of the Greek and Roman Law.

Among all these Authors may be reckon'd, a certain Jew of Africa, nam'd Samuel of Morocco, converted to the Christian Religion; who compos'd a small Tract to prove, That the Messiah was come; in which he gives us to understand, that he wrote a thousand Years after the Destruction of the Temple of Jerusalem: This Piece was Printed at several times separately, and is extant in some Collections of Authors.

CH A P. XIII.

Of the COUNCILS held in the Eleventh Century.

HAVING already given an Historical Account of divers Councils, treating of other Ecclesiastical Affairs transacted in this Century, we shall now proceed to do the same thing, in reference to those of which we have not hitherto had occasion to make mention.

The Councils of France.

I N the Year of our Lord, 1017. certain concealed Hereticks were discover'd, who spread abroad detestable Doctrins and committed no less infamous Actions; and this Discovery was first made by a Norman Lord nam'd Arefastus: He had a Clergy-man in his House, who going to Orleans to hold Conferences with the Learned of that City, met two other Clerks, one nam'd Stephen, Professor of School-Divinity in St. Peter's Monastery, and the other Lisius, Clerk of the Convent of St. Croix, who were then in great repute for their Learning and Piety. He Convers'd with them for some time, till they communicated their Errors to him, and afterward returning to Normandy, acquainted his Patron with their Tenets, who disclos'd the matter to Duke Richard. Whereupon the Duke gave notice of it to King Robert, and at the same time sent Arefastus with his Chaplain in order to discover and convict the Hereticks. Arefastus pass'd through Chartres, to know of Fulbert what Measures were most expedient to be taken in this Case; but not meeting with him, he consulted Eorard, a Doctor of Divinity and Prebend of the Church of Chartres, who advis'd him to give himself up to Prayer, to receive the Holy Communion, and to fortify himself every Day with the sign of the Crofs, before he enter'd into Conference with those Hereticks; not to contradict what he heard them say, and feigning to be their Disciple, to make a Discovery of all their Errors. He follow'd this Advice, and having associated himself with them

The Council of Orleans, 1017.

several times, was inform'd by them, " That they did not believe that JESUS CHRIST " was born of the Virgin Mary, nor that he died for the Salvation of Mankind, nor that " he was bury'd and rose again: And that they maintain'd, That Baptism did not procure " the remission of Sins; that the Consecration by the Priest did not constitute the Sacra- " ment of the Body and Blood of our Lord; and that it was unprofitable to make Prayers " to the Holy Martyrs and Confessors. Afterward Arefastus having interrogated them about the Salvation which they hop'd to be partakers of, they inform'd him, That at certain Hours of the Night, they were wont to meet together in a particular Place, every one being furnish'd with a Lamp, where after having invoc'd the Demons, they perpetrated infamous Villanies, and even burnt the Children born of their incestuous Copulations, whose Ashes they reserv'd to be given to sick Persons as a kind of Viaticum.

King Robert being arriv'd at Orleans with some Bishops, caus'd this Herd of Miscreants to be apprehended and Arefastus among them, by whose Testimony they were Convicted, and their Errors were refuted by the Bishops: But upon their refusal to abjure their Heresy, they were depriv'd of their Ecclesiastical Habits and all burnt in a House, except one single Clerk and a Nun, who were Converted. These Circumstances are thus related in an ancient History of the Council of Orleans, referr'd to by Father Luke Dachery, in the second Tome of his Spicilegium; and Glaber a Cotemporary Historian, relates them almost after the same manner as to the matter of Fact, except that he makes no mention of Arefastus; but he attributes to them some other Errors, viz. " That they deny'd the Holy Trinity, " affirm'd the World to be Eternal, and believ'd that sensual Pleasures are not to be punish'd " in the future State, and that good Works are unprofitable. This Author adds, That the Persons burnt upon that Account, were thirteen in Number.

The Synod of Arras, held in the Year, 1025.

The Synod of Arras,
in 1025.

SOME time after there appear'd in Flanders another Sect of Hereticks, which was likewise Condemn'd in a Synod held at Arras, A. D. 1025. on the Festival of Christmas, by Gerard Bishop of Cambray and Arras; for both these Cities had then but one Bishop. Gerard residing some Days in the latter, News was brought him, that certain Persons were arriv'd from Italy, who introduc'd a new sort of Heresy, which ruin'd the Gospel Ordinances, and the Discipline of the Church; and that these Miscreants making profession of perfect Righteousness, gave it out, That that alone was sufficient for the Justification of a Person, and that there was no other Sacrament in the Church for the attaining of Salvation.

Upon this Report, Gerard caus'd a strict search to be made after those, who were suspected to be maintainers of this Heresy; insomuch, that they were apprehended by the Governor's Order, and even brought before the Bishop, who being taken up at that instant with other Affairs, after he had examin'd them for some time concerning their Doctrine, and perceiv'd them to be in an Error, caus'd them to be confin'd during three Days, and order'd a Fast to be kept the next Day, by the Clerks and Monks who were there present, that Almighty God might be implor'd to give Grace to those Miscreants to acknowledge their Errors. On the third Day, being Sunday, he held a Synod compos'd of the Abbots, Archdeacons, Monks and other Clergy, and caus'd the Prisoners to be brought forth in the presence of the People: Then, after having made a Speech to the Assembly, he demanded of the Prisoners, what their Doctrine was, and who were their Teachers: They reply'd, That they were the Disciples of an Italian nam'd Gandulphus, who had instructed them in the Commandments of the Gospel, and of the Apostles; that they receiv'd no other Scripture, but that they observ'd that very strictly. The Bishop having heard it reported, That they abhor'd Baptism; that they rejected the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST; that they gave it out, that Penance was altogether unprofitable; that they despis'd the Churches; that they condemn'd lawful Marriages; that they did not acknowledge any Eminency in the Confessors; and that they affirm'd, That none ought to be honour'd except the Apostles and Martyrs; he thought fit to interrogate them, and to give them Instructions about those Points. As to the first, they own'd, " That their Master " had Taught them, That provided that they practis'd the Precepts of the Gospel; that " they renounced the Vanities of the World; that they did not follow their Passions; that " they got their Livelihood by the Labour of their Hands; that they did no injury to " any; and that they exercis'd Charity toward those, who were animated with the same " Zeal; it was not necessary to receive Baptism; that if the performance of these Duties " were neglected Baptism would be unprofitable, and that altho' 'twere granted that it had " some efficacy; yet it was now become altogether useless and of none effect for these three " Reasons, viz. 1. Upon account of the irregular Practices and Conversation of the Ministers. 2. Because the Sins which might have been remitted by Baptism, are committed " again by Professours during the whole Course of their Lives. 3. In regard that Infants " are Baptis'd, who have neither Faith nor free Will; who cannot desire Baptism, nor " know " know what is meant by Faith or Free Will ; neither can the Profession of others avail them any thing.

The Bishop reply'd upon that Article, " That altho' JESUS CHRIST was perfectly Righteous, yet he condescended to receive Baptism from St. John ; That he instituted it for the regeneration and the remission of Sins ; That in this Sacrament the Holy Ghost operates invisibly in the Soul, what is done outwardly by the Water, on the Body : That altho' it be administer'd by worthy or unworthy Ministers, nevertheless it is always effectual ; because it is the Holy Ghost who Sanctifies, and the Iniquity of a Man cannot hinder the effect of the operation of God : That whilst the Minister outwardly sprinkles the Body, the Soul is inwardly purify'd by the operation of the Holy Ghost : That afterward Holy Unction is administer'd to the Infant, for its farther Sanctification after Baptism ; by reason that as Sin is remitted by Baptism, so Unction sanctifies the Person after Baptism : That the Imposition of Hands was also added, to procure the Descent of the Holy Ghost : That the necessity of Baptism is prov'd by the Doctrine of the Gospel and of the Apostles : That how Holy or Innocent soever, the Life of a Man may be, yet he cannot be Sav'd without receiving this Sacrament : That Baptism takes away both original and actual Sins, and re-establishes Man in the same State of Uprightness, in which he was created, altho' it does not render him immortal : That the Example of the Man Sick of the Palsy, whom our Saviour cur'd, having regard to the Faith of those Persons, who brought him into his Presence ; and that of the Cananitishe Woman, who by Faith obtain'd a Cure for her Daughter, give us to understand, that the Faith of those who present an Infant to be Baptis'd, may stand it in some stead. Lastly, he demanded of them, for what reason, they express'd so great contempt of the Sacraments of the Church, who were so punctual in observing the Ceremony of washing their Feet ? Neither does he insist less on the second Article, concerning the Mytery of the Eucharist, of which he explains the Effects, proving the real Presence of the Body and Blood of JESUS CHRIST, and answering the Objections that were made about the impossibility, that the same Body should be present in divers Places, to which purpose he relates a great number of Miracles.

These Hereticks being convinc'd by his Discourse, acknowledg'd their Error, and sued for a Pardon : The Bishop gave them some hopes of obtaining their Request, and proceeded to the other Points of Discipline, to which they had no regard, viz. those that related to the Churches, Altars, Sacred Orders, Unction, Exorcisms, Bells and Funeral Rites. After having vindicated the Customs of the Church as to these Matters, he endeavour'd to prove against them, the usefulness of Penance for the Living, and that of Prayer, good Works and Sacrifices for the Dead. He shews, " That lawful Marriages is not forbidden by the Ordinances of the Gospel : That the Confessours ought to be honour'd as well as the Martyrs : That the singing of Psalms is not only allow'd of, but also commendable : That a due Veneration ought to be had for the Cross, by referring that Worship to JESUS CHRIST : That the use and adoration of the Images of our Saviour, and of the Saints is profitable ; because the sight of them represents their Actions, and puts us in mind of their Vertues. He concludes with discoursing of the usefulness and distinctions of Sacred Orders, and about the necessity of the Grace of JESUS CHRIST.

Upon the conclusion of this Discourse, the Hereticks, who were present, declar'd, That they acknowledg'd the Truths, which the Bishop of Avras had explain'd to them ; inasmuch that a Form of a Confession of Faith contrary to the Errors which were refuted by that Prelate, was immediately drawn up and recited by him and the rest of the Clergy : Afterward they caus'd it to be explain'd in the Vulgar Tongue, by an Interpreter in favour of these Hereticks, who did not well understand the Latin : Then they approv'd and sign'd it, and were dismiss'd in Peace after having receiv'd Benediction from the Bishop. The said Gerard himself compil'd the Acts of this Synod, and Dedicated them to one of his neighbouring Bishops whose name is mark'd by the Letter R prefix'd at the beginning of the Epistle which he wrote to him, and who is apparently Reginald of Liege. These Acts were publish'd by Father Luke Datchery, in the thirteenth Tome of his Spicilegium, and may well be esteem'd as one of the finest Monuments of those times.

The Council of Bourges, held in the Year, 1031.

AIMO, Arch-bishop of Bourges, held a Council on the first day of November, A. D. 1031. The Council in that City, in which assisted the Bishops of Puy en Velay, Clermont, Alby, Cahors and of Bourges Mande, with the Abbot of Micy and several others. Pope John's 18th Letter was read concerning the Affair of St. Martial's Apostleship ; proper means were sought for, to put a stop to the Civil Wars and to establish Peace in the Kingdom, and the following Constitutions were rectify'd.

The First ordains, That the Commemoration of St. Martial shall be made among the Apostles, and not among the Confessors.

The Second, That the Priest shall not keep the Body of Jesus Christ, consecrated under the same Hosts longer, than from one Sunday to another.

The Third imports, That the Bishops shall not receive any Presents upon account of Ordinations, nor even their Officers, who were wont to take somewhat for Registering the Names of those Persons, who were propos'd for Ordination.

The Fourth, That none shall obtain an Arch-deaconry, who is not a Deacon.

The Fifth, That Priests, who cohabit with their Wives, shall only be Readers or Chanters for the future; and that Deacons and Sub-deacons shall not be suffer'd to keep either Wives or Concubines.

The Sixth, That the Bishops shall oblige them to take an Oath to that purpose, at their Ordination.

The Seventh enjoins, That all those who are employ'd in the Ministerial Functions, shall have Ecclesiastical Tonsure; that is to say, their Beards shav'd, and the Crown made on their Heads.

The Eighth, That the Sons of Deacons and Sub-deacons, shall not be admitted into the Clergy.

The Ninth, That Slaves shall not be ordain'd Clerks, till they have obtain'd Freedom of their Masters.

The Tenth, That such Persons shall not be look'd upon as the Sons of Clergy-men, as were born after their Fathers quitted the Ecclesiastical State, and return'd to that of Laicks.

The Eleventh, That the Bishops shall declare at the time of Ordination, that they excommunicate those who shall presume to present to them any Sons of Clergy-men or Slaves to be ordain'd, and that Persons under such Circumstances, who have got their Ordination by surprise, shall be depos'd.

The Twelfth, That nothing shall be exacted for the Administration of Baptism and Penance, nor for burying the Dead; nevertheless that it shall be permitted to receive whatever the Faithful shall think fit to bestow Voluntarily upon those Occasions.

The Thirteenth orders, That the Priests shall have the Offerings, and the Funeral Torches, which are presented to them, but that the Paschal-Taper shall remain to give Light to the Altar.

The Fourteenth, That Linnen Cloths which have serv'd to cover dead Bodies, shall not be laid on the Altar.

The Fifteenth, That no publick Meetings shall be held on Sundays for the Management of Secular Affairs, unless they be call'd to perform Works of Charity, to oppose the Insults of Enemies, in case of danger, or to transact Business upon some other emergent Occasion.

The Sixteenth ordains, That those Persons who leave their Wives, except upon account of Adultery, shall not marry others as long as the former are living, nor the Women other Husbands in the like Cases.

The Seventeenth, That no Man shall take to Wife a Relation to the sixth or seventh Degree of Consanguinity.

The Eighteenth, That none in like manner shall be permitted to Marry his Kinsman's Wife.

The Nineteenth, That no Man shall give his Daughter in Marriage to any Priest, Deacon or Sub-deacon, nor to their Sons.

The Twentieth, That none shall Marry their Daughters.

The Twenty first imports, That Lay-men shall not enjoy Ecclesiastical Benefices.

The Twenty second, That Laicks shall not put Priests in their Churches without the approbation of the Bishop.

The Twenty third, That those Ecclesiastical Persons, who renounce their Clerkship or Ministerial Functions, shall be separated from the rest of the Clergy.

The Twenty fourth, That Monks, who quit their Habit, shall be depriv'd of the Communion of the Church, till they have resum'd it; and if the Abbots or Monks refuse to readmit them, they shall reside with the Clerks in Churches or in other Monasteries, wearing the Habit of Monks and observing the Monastick Rule.

The Twenty fifth, That neither the Canons nor Monks shall pass from one Church or from one Monastery to another, without a License from the Bishop or Abbot.

After the Session of this Synod, Aimo made a Declaration, That St. Martial should be stil'd an Apostle in all the Church-Offices.

The Council of Limoges held in the Year, 1031.

The Council of Limoges in 1031.

THE same Question was debated at large in the Council of Limoges, assembled eighteen days after in the Church of that City, where the greatest part of the Prelates who had assisted in the Council of Bourges, were present, with Fourdain Bishop of Limoges, Isambert of Poitiers, Arnold of Perigueux, Rohon of Angoulesme and some others. There were only two Sessions, viz. the first on the 18th day of November, and the other on the 19th. In the former after many Debates, the Apostolical Dignity was confirm'd to St. Martial.

In

In the second, after having observ'd, that different Customs might be in use in several Churches, the Constitutions made in the Council of Bouges were read; and the second concerning the renewing of the Host every Sunday was alter'd, because 'twas judg'd sufficient that they should be renew'd Twelve times a Year. Afterward the Affair of the Abbey of Beaulieu was propos'd, which was possess'd by a secular Abbot: He was Summon'd to the Synod, and after he had consented that it should be reform'd according to the Rule, 'twas ordain'd that the Bishop of Limoges should place a regular Abbot therein, before the Festival of Christmas. This gave occasion to treat of the Monastick Regularity in the Council: The Bishop of Limoges was very well satisfied with the Conduct of the Abbots and Monks of his Diocese, and only complain'd of one Abbot, who had suffer'd a certain Vicount, excommunicated by the Bishop and deceased without Absolution, to be interr'd in his Church: The Abbot vindicated himself; alledging, That it was done without his Knowledge by the Souldiers of that Vicount, who bury'd him themselves; but that as soon as he was inform'd of the Matter of Fact, he caus'd his Corps to be dug up, and to be laid without the consecrated Ground. The Bishop of Cahors related an Accident of the like nature, which happen'd in his Diocese. Then the Prelates of the Council proceeded to find out Means to oblige the great Lords and Noblemen to make Peace one with another, and Excommunication and Suspension from Divine Service were propos'd to that end. The Monks of St. Martial had their Custom confirm'd of Administ'ring Baptism on the Festivals of Easter and Whitsuntide; and the Abbots had a Privilege granted them to have a Chaplain and three Deacons assisting at their Celebration of Mass, on the solemn Festivals: The Canons against incontinent Clergy-men and Simoniack Practices were reviv'd; and the time of Ordination was fix'd on the four Ember-Weeks. Upon a Remonstrance, that divers Persons excommunicated by their Bishops for notorious Crimes, went to Rome and receiv'd Absolution from the Pope; the Bishop of Puy en Velay reported, that some Years ago, the Count of Clermont being excommunicated by the Bishop, for leaving his lawful Wife to Marry another, made a Journey to the Court of Rome, where he obtain'd Absolution of the Pope, who had no notice of the Sentence of Excommunication pass'd against him: That the Bishop having made a Complaint, the Pope return'd for Antwer, That he ought to blame himself for what had happen'd, by reason that he never gave him any Information that the Count was excommunicated; the Pope added, That if he had known it, he would have confirm'd the Bishop's Sentence, because he makes Profession to assist his Brethren in every thing, and not to oppose them; that he should be very sorry, to hear of any Schism or Mis-understanding between him and them; and that therefore he abrogated and made void the Penance and Absolution, which he had granted to that excommunicated Person, by whom he was surpriz'd, and who ought to expect nothing but a Curse, till he has made Satisfaction and has been duely absolv'd by his Diocesan.

This Narrative makes it appear, That these sorts of Absolutions were often surreptitiously got of the Popes, as it may be further evinc'd from another Passage of the like nature, which happen'd at Angouleme; where a certain excommunicated Person, who could not obtain Absolution, by reason that he was unwilling to make Satisfaction, presented to his Bishop a Letter from the Pope, in which he intreated him to admit the said Person to the Penance which he had enjoy'd: The Bishop, without being surpriz'd, reply'd, That he did not believe that that Order came from the Pope, and that it should not be serviceable to the Offender, who should remain under the Sentence of Excommunication, till he had accepted of and done the Penance, that should be impos'd on him by himself or by his Arch-deacon by his Order. Upon these considerations, the Bishops unanimously declar'd, That the Pope had indeed a Right to confirm, augment or diminish the Penance enjoy'd an Offender by his Diocesan, or even to impose it on those, whom the Bishops should nominate for that purpose; but that he had no Power either to impose Penance or to grant Absolution, in respect of an excommunicated Person, without consulting the Diocesan. And that it was his Office, rather to confirm than to disannul the Sentences of the other Bishops; in regard that if the Members ought to follow their Head, the Head also ought to take care not to oppress the Members: The Acts of this Council are very large, and contain a great number of Matters of Fact, Authorities and Arguments, relating to the Affair of St. Martial, which are of no very great Moment.

Divers Councils held in France, A. D. 1040.

MANY other Councils were conven'd at the same time in divers Provinces of France, particularly in Aquitaine, Burgundy and Lyonnais for the re-establing of Peace and Church-Discipline. Effectual Means were chiefly sought for therein, to put a stop to the Civil Wars, publick Robberies and Outrages that were committed, more especially in reference to the Church-Revenues and Clergy. It was ordain'd in all these Councils, that the People should abstain from eating Flesh on Fridays and Saturdays, and from drinking Wine on Fridays; that those who were desirous to be exempted, for some lawful Cause, should be oblig'd to maintain their indigent Persons on those days; and that in consideration of this Abstinence, Divers Councils held in France, in 1040.

Offenders

Offenders should be discharge'd from other Pennances, provided that they bound themselves by an Oath to observe it. However some Bishops oppos'd this Constitution, and among others Gerard Bishop of Cambray, who maintain'd, That that Yoke ought not to be laid equally on all People, because there were some who were not able to undergo it, by reason of the weakness of their Bodies; neither perhaps did their Transgressions deserve so severe a Chastisement, and there were others, in respect of whom, this Satisfaction is not proportioned to the heinousness of their Offences: That it were more expedient to follow the Canonical Rules in the imposing of Pennances; and that much less ought the People to be constrain'd by an Oath to observe this Abstinence; since that were by such means to expose them not only to the hazard of breaking a Commandment, but also of incurring Perjury. The same Prelate did not think fit that the Bishops should be concern'd in Military Affairs, and the bearing of Arms; saying, That it is the Province of Kings to take cognizance of these matters, and not that of Clergy-men.

'Tis a thing very observable, that a great number of Bodies of Saints and abundance of Relicks were brought into those Councils, and that 'twas generally believ'd, that many Miracles were wrought therein: There were also held at the same time divers other particular Councils, either for the dedicating of Churches, or for the granting of Privileges to Monasteries, or for the determining of private differences among the Bishops, about the limits of their Diocesses, or to put an end to other Contests, which are mention'd by the Writers of that Time, but do not deserve to be insist'd upon in this Place.

The Council of Rheims held in the Year, 1049.

The Council of Rheims in 1049. HERIMAR, Abbot of St. Remy at Rheims, having invited over Leo IX. to consecrate his new Church, that Pope arriv'd there in the Month of October A.D. 1049. accompanied with the Arch-bishops of Trier, Lyons and Bezançon, and the Bishop of Porto, and after having perform'd the Ceremony, and that of the Translation of the Body of St. Remy to this new Church, he held a Council therein, which continu'd during some Days: It was compos'd of the Arch-bishops of Rheims, Trier, Lyons and Bezançon; of the Bishops of Seis-fons, Terouane, Senlis, Mets, Langres, Coutances, Lisieux, Bayeux, Auranches, Verdun, Nevers, Angers, Nantes and Porto, and of a Bishop of England, with divers Abbots and other Clergy-men, to the number of Fifty. Peter Deacon of the Church of Rome open'd the Council, declaring, That it was requisite to treat about the reformation of many Abuses which had crept into the Churches of France, particularly Simony, the seizing of Churches by Laicks, forbidden Marriages, the Apostacy of Clerks and Monks, &c. But above all things, he admonish'd the Bishops to declare under pain of an Anathema, whether they were ordain'd for Money or otherwise: The Arch-bishops of Trier, Lyons and Bezançon, protested that they were not, but the Metropolitan of Rheims desired time to return an Answer: Among the Bishops there were only Four, who were not able to clear themselves, viz. those of Langres, Nevers, Coutances and Nantes. The Abbots being ask'd the same Question, many of them protested themselves innocent, and others own'd their Fault by their silence. The Abbots of Poitiers was accused of Incontinency by the Bishop of Langres, and not having sufficiently clear'd himself, was depos'd. In the end of this Session, it was prohibited under the penalty of an Anathema to attribute the Title of Universal Primate of the Church to any but the Bishop of Rome.

The next Day, the Arch-bishop of Rheims after having had a private Conference with the Pope and some other Prelates, entreated the Bishop of Senlis to speak in his favour, who accordingly declar'd that the Arch-bishop was not guilty of Simony; but the Pope order'd that he should clear himself by Oath; whereupon he sued for longer time, which was granted, on condition that he should appear in a Council to be held at Rome in the middle of April in the following Year. The determination of the Cause that was depending between that Arch-bishop and the Bishop of Toul, about the Abbey of Monstier-Randy, was refer'd to the next Day. Afterward certain Clerks of the Church of Tours, brought an Accusation against the Bishop of Dol for assuming the Quality of Arch-bishop, and withdrawing himself with the seven Bishops of Bretagne from the Jurisdiction of the Metropolitan of Tours: It was order'd that he should be summon'd to the Council of Rome, in the Month of April following. Then the Bishop of Langres was accused of Simony, of bearing Arms and committing Murders, of tyrannizing over his Clergy, and of perpetrating other more notorious Crimes: One of his Clerks depos'd that the said Bishop took away his Wife, whom he had whilst he was as yet a Lay-man, and after having abus'd her, made her a Nun: A certain Priest gave in evidence, that he caus'd him to be kept in Custody under a Guard and to endure much hardship, on purpose to extort Money from him. The Bishop of Langres demanded Counsel, and made application to the Arch-bishops of Lyons and Bezançon: The latter going about to plead for him, falter'd in his Speech, and the other acknowledg'd, that the Bishop had expos'd the sacred Orders to Sale, and exacted a Sum of Money of that Priest, but deny'd that he caus'd him to be misus'd.

On the third Day, the Bishop of Langres not daring to appear, and being summon'd thrice, and fought for to no purpose, was at last excommunicated. The Bishop of Nevers own'd, that his Relations had given a Sum of Money for his Bishoprick, but that he was altogether ignorant of what they had done; nevertheless he declar'd, that he design'd to leave it, and even at the same time laid down his Crozier-Staff at the Pope's Feet, who caus'd him to take it up again, after he had taken an Oath, that that Money was paid without his knowledge. Then an ancient Copy of a Privilege granted to the Church of Rheims was read, which made it appear, that the Abbey of Monfieur Rands belong'd to its Jurisdiction, and it was accordingly adjudg'd to that Church. The Bishop of Comances confess'd, that his Brother had laid out a Sum of Money to get him advanc'd to the Episcopal Dignity; but having taken an Oath, that it was done without his knowledge, he was declar'd innocent. The Bishop of Nantes was not so favourably treated; for having own'd that he succeeded his Father in his Bishoprick, after having disburs'd a certain Sum of Money, he was depos'd, and only permitted to exercise the Office of a Priest. Lastly, a Sentence of Excommunication was denounc'd against the Prelats who were summon'd to this Council but did not appear, and the following Constitutions were agreed upon, viz.

1. That none shall be promoted to Ecclesiastical Dignities, but by the election of the Clergy and People.
2. That none shall buy or make Sale of the Sacred Orders, Ecclesiastical Offices or Altars.
3. That Laicks shall not retain Spiritual Livings.
4. That none but the Bishop or some Person deputed by him shall be empower'd to levy any Sums of Money within the Parishes of the Churches.
5. That nothing shall be exacted for Burying the Dead, or for administering the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper.
6. That Clergy-men shall not bear Arms, nor go on Warfare.
7. That no Clerk nor Lay-man shall lend Money upon use.
8. That the Monks and Clerks shall not quit their Profession.
9. That none shall offer violence to Clergy-men as they are Travelling.
10. That there shall not be suffer'd any manner of oppression of the Poor.
11. That no Man shall take to Wife any of his near Relations.
12. That it should be prohibited to leave a lawful Wife, in order to marry another.

Lastly, all those Persons were excommunicated, who should protect or hold correspondence with the new Hereticks of France, the Sodomites and certain Lords, who had contracted forbidden Marriages and assaulted some Bishops and other Clergy-men.

The Council of Tours, held in the Year, 1060.

THE Custom being now introduc'd that the Councils for the reformation of Church-discipline, should be held in the presence or by the authority of the Legats of the See of Rome; Stephen Cardinal and Legat of Pope Nicolas II. call'd one A. D. 1060. at Tours, in which it was ordain'd, The Council of Tours in 1060.

1. That all those Persons who give Money for any Ecclesiastical Dignity, shall be depriv'd of it for ever.
2. That if any Bishop or Patron confer Benefices for Money, the Clerks shall be allow'd to oppose their Proceedings and to have recourse to the Arbitration of the neighbouring Bishops; nay, even to Appeal from them to the See of Rome.
3. That no new Benefice can be sold, nor any Church-Revenues alienated.
4. That none shall purchase any Spiritual Livings of Lay-men.
5. That the same Person cannot enjoy two Benefices in different Churches.
6. That the Bishops, Priests and Deacons, who knowing the Prohibition made by Pope Nicolas, do not forbear the Exercise of their Ministerial Functions, when they have been engag'd in a scandalous Conversation with Women, or who shall refuse to desist for the future, after having receiv'd information of that Prohibition, shall be depos'd without a possibility of restoration.
7. That Clergy-men, who bear Arms, shall be depriv'd of their Benefices and Dignities.
8. That Laicks, who presume to sell or dispose of the Church-Revenues shall be excommunicated.
9. That those Men who marry their Kinswomen, or those Women who keep an unchast Correspondence with their Kinsmen, and refuse to leave them, or to do Penance, shall be excluded from the Communion of the Faithful and turn'd out of the Church.
10. That those Monks who quit the Monastick State, shall likewise be separated from the Communion of the Church as Apostates.

The Council of Soissons, held in the Year, 1092.

ROSCELIN, a Clerk of the Church of Compiègne, and a very able Logician, gave it out in the end of the Eleventh Century, That the three Divine Persons of the Holy Trinity were three Things: This Opinion was condemn'd in a Council held at Soissons, A. D. 1092. The Council of Soissons in 1092.

Roscelin der Raynold Arch-bishop of Rheims, and confuted by St. Anselm, by Ives of Chartres, and even by Abaelard, who is reputed to have been his Pupil. Roscelin was oblig'd to make an abjuration of his Error in that Council, but afterward he did not forbear to maintain it obstinately, and for that reason was banish'd from France and England. THEOBALD, a Clerk of the Church of Etampes likewise wrote a Letter against him, on another Subject, viz. to shew, That the Sons of Priests may be admitted into the Clergy.

The Council of Lisieux, held A. D. 1055. and that of Rouen in 1063.

The Council of Lisieux in 1055.

THE Arch-bishop of Rouen, under whom the preceding Council was held, was depos'd, A. D. 1055. in another Council conven'd at Lisieux, in the presence of Stephen Bishop of Sion in Switserland, the Pope's Legat, which consisted of the Bishops of that Province. He was accus'd of having robb'd his Church, of consuming its Revenues in unprofitable Expenses, and of dissipating part of them to Largesses only to satisfy his Ambition: He was also suspected to be guilty of infamous Crimes, and was censur'd for not shewing a due Respect to the See of Rome: He was apparently culpable, but that which chiefly brought upon him this Condemnation, was the Displeasure of Duke William his Nephew, who was incens'd against him, because he had excommunicated that Prince upon account of his Marriage with the Princess Mathilda his Kinswoman, the Daughter of Baldwin Count of Flanders, and favour'd the Party of Duke Argues his Brother: Therefore the Duke banish'd him immediately after his Condemnation, to the Isle of Guernsey, and caus'd Maurillus, a Monk of Fecamp, to be substituted in his room. The latter was zealous in endeavouring to re-establish the Church-Discipline and to reform the Corruption of Manners: To which purpose he call'd divers Synods, and made some Constitutions. In that which was held by him at Rouen, A. D. 1063. for the Dedication of the Cathedral Church, the building of which was compleated at that time, he publish'd a Confession of Faith against Berenger's erroneous Opinion, of which we have made mention elsewhere.

A Quarrel between the Archbishop of Rouen, and the Monks of St. Ouen.

In the following Year, there happen'd a notable Quarrel between John de Bayeux the Arch-bishop, and the Monks of the Abbey of St. Ouen at Rouen: It was a Customary thing for the Metropolitan of that City, to celebrate a solemn Mass in their Church on the Patron's Festival: Arch-bishop John having made them stay somewhat longer than ordinary, they began the Office without him; but he arriv'd when the Hymn call'd Gloria in excelsis was ended; and being incens'd, because they did not wait for him, he excommunicated all the Monks, caus'd the divine Service to cease, and the Abbot of Sees, who was officiating, to depart from the Altar. By this means a great Tumult was rais'd, during which one of the Monks or one of their Servants got up into the Steeple, rung the Alarm-bell, and cry'd out from the top of the Tower, That the Arch-bishop was come to take away the Relicks of St. Ouen: Whereupon the People were gather'd together; some with Hatches, and others with Staves; ran in crowds to the Church; and broke in furiously; whilst others climb'd upon the Vaults: The Arch-bishop terrify'd with the danger, retir'd toward the Church-doors, caus'd them to be shut, and made a Rampart of Seats and Benches against those who were in the Church. In the mean while his Attendants fell foul upon the Monks with Candelsticks and Staves, and the Monks on the other side, defended themselves as resolutely; till at last the Sheriff of the City being inform'd of this Tumult and of the danger, to which the Arch-bishop was expos'd, came with his Guards and rescu'd him out of the Hands of the Rabble: The latter immediately wrote to King William about the Affair, and the Monks did the like on their side. This Prince order'd, that the Arch-bishop should reconcile the Church, and upon his refusal, caus'd it to be done by the Bishop of Avanches; nevertheless, to give Satisfaction to the Arch-bishop, some of the Monks were put into Prison, and others were dispers'd in divers Monasteries.

The Council of Rouen, held, A. D. 1074.

The Council of Rouen, in 1074.

IN the Year 1074. the same Arch-bishop John, held another Council at Rouen with his Suffragans, in which he publish'd Fourteen Canons.

The First imports, That to extirpate Simony, 'tis forbidden to buy or sell any sort of Benefice, whether it be an Abbey, Arch-deaconry, Deanery or Cure of Souls, and to exact any thing for admission into Orders.

The Second, That Abbéys shall only be bestow'd on those who are well vers'd in Matters of Church-Discipline, by the means of a continu'd practice of it for several Years.

The Third, That the ancient Constitution shall be observ'd, which prohibits to entertain any Clerk, without a Letter of recommendation from his Diocesan.

The Fourth, That several Orders shall not be receiv'd on the same day.

The Fifth, That the Sub-deacons, Deacons and Priests, shall not be ordain'd but upon making a solemn Profession, according to the Injunctions of the Council of Toledo.

The Tenth, That no Credit shall be given to the Depositions of those Persons, who under a colour of a scruple of Conscience, declare that they have had to do with the Sisters or Relations of their Wives, to have a pretence to leave them, unless they bring sufficient Proof of the Matter of Fact.

The Eleventh, That they shall likewise be oblig'd to the same thing, who give it out that they did not receive all the inferior Orders, when they were ordain'd Priests, on purpose to get an opportunity to quit the Sacerdotal Functions.

The Twelfth, That Clergy-men degraded for their Misdeameanours, shall not have the liberty to lead a secular Life, as Laicks.

The Thirteenth, That those Persons whose Marriage is declar'd Null, because it was contracted with near Relations, shall live continently till they be married to others.

The Fourteenth, That the Christians shall not have any Jews for their Slaves, nor any Jewish Women for their Nurses.

Some time after, this Arch-bishop of Rouen falling Sick of a Palfey, King William the Conqueror demanded a License of Gregory VII. to substitute another Clerk in his room. This Pope gave orders to Hubert Sub-deacon of the Church of Rome his Legat, with the Bishops and Abbots of the Province, and the Clergy of the City of Rouen, to enquire whether John de Bayeux their Metropolitan were really capable any longer to perform the Episcopal Functions, and in case it appear'd so, that they should exhort him to consent to the Election of another Arch-

Arch-bishop; but if his Distemper hindred him from giving such Consent, they might proceed to the Choice of a Person worthy of being advanc'd to that Dignity. Upon mature deliberation, John being found incapable was oblig'd to make a Resignation in due form, and retir'd to one of his Country-Houses: The King caus'd William Abbot of St. Stephen at Caen, the Son of Radbod Bishop of Sees to be chosen to supply his place. Pope Gregory disapprov'd this Election, because he was the Son of a Priest; but notwithstanding his Prohibition, William was ordain'd, A. D. 1079. whilst John was as yet living, who died some time after.

The Council of Lillebonne, held, A. D. 1080.

D.* 1054. at Toulouse, with the Arch-bishop of Narbonne, and divers other Bishops of France, and drew up thirteen Canons.

In the First it is Decreed, That those Persons who receive Ordination for Money, shall be degraded from their Dignity, as well as they who ordain'd them.

The Council of Dortmund in 1005. IT is related by Dithmar the Historian, that a great Council was held at Dortmund in Westphalia July 7. A. D. 1005. in which the Emperor Henry II. complaining of the Irregularities in reference to Church-Discipline, induc'd the Bishops to revive the Ecclesiastical Laws, and to endeavour to reform the Exorbitances and corrupt Manners of the Clergy and Laity, by making divers useful Canons: But the Acts and Constitutions of this Council are lost.

The Council of Selingenstadt, held, A. D. 1023.

The Council of Selingenstadt in 1023. ARIB O, Arch-bishop of Mentz, held in the Year, 1023. a Council at Selingenstadt, compos'd of Burchard Bishop of Worms, Vernarius Bishop of Strasburg, Bruno of Augsburg, Eberhard of Bamberg and Meginhard of Wurtzburg, in which these Bishops made the following Constitutions, viz.

The First ordains, That Abstinence from eating Flesh shall be observ'd fourteen Days before the Festival of St. John, as many before that of Christmas, and on the Vigils of the Epiphany, of the Festivals of the Apostles, of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, of St. Laurence and of all the Saints.

The Second fixes the Ember-Weeks.

The Third denotes the time, when the solemnization of Marriages is forbidden, viz. from Advent till after the Epiphany, and from Septuagesima till after Easter, as also on the above specified Days of Abstinence, as well as the Vigils of the solemn Festivals.

The Fourth imports, That a Priest who has drunk plentifully after the Cock-crowing in the Summer, or even in Winter, shall not be allow'd to say Mass the next Day, unless in case of necessity.

The Fifth prohibits Priests to celebrate above three Masses in one Day.

The Sixth forbids under pain of an Anathema that † Corporals should be thrown into the Fire to put a stop to the Conflagration.

The Seventh ordains, That if two Persons suspected to have committed Adultery together, one confesses the Crime, and the other denies it, the Party who owns it shall be put to Penance, and the other shall clear himself by taking his Trial.

The Eighth forbids the carrying of Swords into the Church, except the Sword of State.

The Ninth prohibits Meetings in the Church-yards.

The Tenth condemns the Custom of some Laicks, and more especially of certain Ladies, who contented themselves only to hear every Day the Gospel In principio, or to cause the Masses of the Trinity and of St. Michael to be said in their presence; and ordains, That this shall not be done for the future, but in the proper time: Otherwise if any Persons be desirous to hear a particular Mass, being mov'd by a singular Veneration for the Holy Trinity, and not by any superstitious Conceit; they shall hear a Mass for the Day, or one for the consolation and safety of the Living, or one for the Dead.

The Sixteenth, That none shall take a Journey to Rome, without a Licence from the Bishop or his Grand Vicar.

The Seventeenth, That no Priest shall retrench any thing from the Forty Days Fast imposed on Penitents.

The Eighteenth is against those who being guilty of enormous Crimes, refuse to receive Penance from their Diocesan, upon a presumption, that going to Rome, the Pope will forgive all their Sins: The Council declares, That this Indulgence shall stand them in no stead, and and that they ought at first to receive a Penance proportioned to the heinousness of their Offences, after which they may go to Rome with the permission and recommendatory Letters of their Diocesan.

In the Nineteenth, Penitents are prohibited to Travel during the forty Days of their Fast.

The Twentieth forbids Priests to admit into the Church, such Persons as are not allow'd to enter therein, by reason of their Crimes, without having receiv'd an Order from the Bishop.

These Canons are follow'd with a Form of Ceremonies to be observ'd, and Prayers to be said during the Session of a Synod.

The Council of Mentz, held, A. D. 1069.

SIGEFROY or SIGEFRID Arch-bishop of Mentz succeeded Luitbold, A. D. 1059. and govern'd that Church till 1084. He held a Council in 1069. at Mentz, in which the Emperor Henry IV. made a Proposal to divorce his Wife, by reason that he could not have any Issue of her Body. Sigefrid inclin'd to his Opinion; but Peter Damien the Pope's Legat being arriv'd, and having prevented the Divorce, the Arch-bishop wrote to Alexander II. that he had prohibited the Emperor from divorcing his Wife, under pain of Excommunication; but that this Prince having alledg'd, that he could not have carnal Copulation with her, and the Empress having own'd her impotency, he found himself oblig'd to consult the Holy See, about so extraordinary a Case; that he was unwilling to pass Judgment on the Affair in a Council, which was call'd upon that occasion, till he had receiv'd his Answer; and that he entreated him to send his Legats to examine and decide the matter in Germany.

The Council of Mentz, A. D. 1071.

THE same Arch-bishop held another Council at Mentz, A. D. 1071. to enquire into the Ordination of Charles nominated to the Bishoprick of Constance: He was accus'd of Simony, and the Pope forbid Sigefrid to ordain him Bishop; nevertheless the Emperor peremptorily requir'd it, and wrote to the Pope about the Affair, who refer'd the examination of it to the Arch-bishops of Colen and Mentz. Whereupon they summon'd a Council, but the Emperor would not suffer it to be held, and took a resolution to send Charles to Rome, to the end that the Pope might take cognizance of the matter and ordain him Bishop. Sigefrid prevented the Pope, and entreated him not to consecrate Charles, but if he found him Innocent, to send him back to him and to his Collegues, to receive Ordination from them. The Pope refusing to determine this Affair at Rome, sent him back to be examin'd in his own Country, and it was refer'd to the Council which Sigefrid held at Mentz in the Month of August, A. D. 1071. The Arch-bishops of Salzburg and Trier with nine Bishops of Germany assisted in this Synod, in which, Matters were debated during four Days between Charles and his Adversaries, till at last Charles fearing lest he should not be able to carry the Point, declar'd that he would not be Bishop contrary to the Inclination of those whom he was to govern, and deliver'd up his Ring and Crozier into the Emperor's Hands. The Acts of this Council, which were sent to the Pope and Sigefrid's Letters are still extant.

The Council of Erford, A. D. 1073.

IN the Year, 1073. there happen'd a difference between Sigefrid and the Clergy of Thuringen, about the Tithes of that Province, which this Arch-bishop claim'd as his Right, and which were contested with him by the said Clergy, more especially by the Abbots of Erford in Fulda and Herfeldt. The matter was debated in an Assembly held at Erford in the same Year, and determin'd by the Emperor to the advantage as Sigefrid, who wrote about it to Hildebrand, and to Pope Alexander. The History of this Council is written by Lambert, and we still have Sigefred's two Letters, in the last of which, he makes mention of the Outrages committed against the Arch-bishop of Trier, declaring that he was taken away by force, extremely abus'd, and at last shamefully put to Death.

The Councils of England.

The Council of Aenham, held in the Year, 1010.

KING Ethelred call'd a Council about the Year, 1010. in which Elphegus Arch-bishop of Canterbury and Ethelred Arch-bishop of York assisted, and made a great number of Constitutions concerning the Reformation of Manners and Church Discipline; Rules that that ought to be follow'd by the Clerks and Monks; the Celebacy of Priests and other Clergy-men; against superstitious Practices and Incontinency; about the Rights of Churches, particularly St. Peter's Pence, the Tribute of funeral Torches, which was paid thrice a Year, that of Burials, &c. concerning the Festivals and Fasts that ought to be observ'd, viz. the great Festival of the Virgin Mary, preceded by a Fast; and the Festivals of the Apostles in like manner preceded by their respective Vigils, except that of St. James and St. Philip, when a Fast is not to be kept, by reason of the Paschal Solemnity: the Fast of the four Ember-Weeks, and that on all Fridays: Concerning the time, in which Marriages are forbidden to be solemniz'd, that is to say, the solemn Festivals; the Ember-Weeks; from Advent to the Octave of the Epiphany, and from Septuagesima, to the end of the Fortnight after Easter: About the Interval that ought to be observ'd by Widows before they marry again, which is the space of a Year: Lastly, concerning frequent Confessions; the receiving of the Communion; and divers other Points of Morality. For the Ordinances of this Council contain many excellent Instructions and very prudent Exhortations: Forasmuch as it was held under Elphegus Archbishop of Canterbury, it must needs be between the Year of our Lord, 1006. and 1013. There are two different Editions of the Acts of the Council of Aenham.

The Laws of the Kings Ethelred and Canut.

King Ethelred and King Canut's Laws.

THE same King Ethelred publish'd A. D. 1012. certain Laws, among which are some relating to Ecclesiastical Affairs; particularly, about the payment of Peter's Pence; to oblige all the Faithful to Fast three Days before the Festival of St. Michael; concerning the Prayers which ought to be said in the Churches for the State, and about Alms-giving.

King Canut in like manner in the Year, 1032. caus'd divers Laws to be proclaim'd which relate to Church-Affairs, viz. concerning the exterior Religious Worship; the Peace of the Churches; the respect due to Clergy-men; unlawful Marriages; the payment of Tithes, Peter's Pence and other Tributes; the observation of Festivals, Sundays and Days of Abstinence; the Functions and Manners of the Clergy and of the Faithful; and against Irregularities, Abuses and Misdemeanours. These Laws are full of moral Maxims and pious Exhortations: There are also some others of the like nature enacted by King Edward III.

The Council of London, held in the Year, 1075.

The Council of London in 1075.

T WAS a long time since any Councils were held, or any Constitutions made relating to Church-discipline in England, when Lanfranc was ordain'd Arch-bishop of Canterbury, neither could such an Assembly be summon'd for some time after, because the King would not suffer any to be conven'd without his permission. At last he held a National Synod at London, A. D. 1075. in which Thomas Arch-bishop of York assisted and eleven Bishops of England, with the Bishop of Coutances, who was admitted to the Council, because he had a considerable Estate in this Kingdom: There were also present 21 Abbots in this Council, in which it was first ordain'd, That all the Bishops should take their Places according to the antiquity of their Ordination, except those who had a peculiar Privilege upon account of the Dignity of their Sees; and after having sought for those who might lay claim to such a Privilege in England, it was determin'd that the Arch-bishop of York should be plac'd on the right Hand of the Metropolitan of Canterbury; the Bishop of London on the left, and the Bishop of Winchester next the Arch-bishop of York; and that in the absence of the latter, the Bishop of London should sit on the right Hand of the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of Winchester on the left. Afterward it was decreed, That all the Monks should live according to St. Benedict's Rule; that they should take care to instruct the Youth, and that they should not have any private possessions: Then three Episcopal Sees which were erected in Towns, were translated to Cities, according to the Tenor of the third Constitution, and the ancient Injunctions were reviv'd, which prohibited to receive a Clerk who was subject to the Jurisdiction of another Bishop, without Letters of recommendation from his Diocesan, and to marry a near Kinswoman. Simoniacal Practices, Witchcraft and Pagan Superstitions were likewise forbidden, and the Celebacy of the Clergy was strictly enjoin'd.

The Council of Winchester, held, A. D. 1076.

IN a Council held the next Year at Winchester, Lanfranc caus'd divers Canons to be drawn up against Persons guilty of Simony; for the celebration of Provincial Councils; the subjection of Clerks to their Bishops, and the payment of Tithes; concerning the administration of the Sacraments and divers other Points of Discipline, among which the following are more especially remarkable, viz.

That

That the Altars ought to be made of Stone : That the Mass cannot be celebrated with Beer or Water : That Divine Service shall not be perform'd in Churches till they be Consecrated by the Bishops : That none shall be bury'd in the Churches : That the Bells shall not be rung during the Canon of the Mass : And that the Chalices shall not be made of Wax nor Wood. Constitutions were also made about the time of Penance for divers Crimes.

The Council of London, held, A. D. 1102.

Arch-bishop Laufanc continu'd to celebrate divers other Councils in England in his Lifetime, the Canons of which are not as yet come to our Hands ; but after his Death, much time pass'd ere any could be conven'd, and St. Anselm his Successour in vain importun'd the Kings of England to that purpose, till at last he held a solemn Synod at London, The Council of London, in 1102. A. D. 1102. the Constitutions of which were transmitted to us by Eadmer : The Arch-bishop of York and twelve Bishops of England assisted in this Council, and made the following Constitutions.

By the first, they condemn'd Simony, and depos'd several Abbots, who were convicted of that Crime.

The Second forbids Bishops to exercise the Functions of Civil Magistrates, and enjoyns them to wear Habits suitable to their Profession.

In the Third, it is prohibited to let out Arch-deaconries to Farm, or to confer them on any other Persons than Deacons.

The Fourth revives the Constitutions about Celibacy.

In the Fifth, Clergy-men are forbidden to undertake the Management of secular Affairs, or to sit as Judges in Criminal Causes, and to drink in Victualling Houses or Places of publick Resort : They are also enjoyn'd to wear Habits of one single Colour, and to have their Crowns shav'd.

The Seventh declares, That Tithes ought only to be paid to the Churches.

The Eighth is a Prohibition to build new Chappels without the consent of the Bishops, and without raising a sufficient Fund for the Maintenance of the Priest and Church.

In the Ninth, Abbots are prohibited to bear Arms, and enjoyn'd to reside in their Monasteries, with their Monks.

The Tenth prohibits that Monks should administer Penance without the consent of their Abbot, and that Abbots should impose it on other Persons than those, who are under their Jurisdiction.

In the Eleventh, Monks are forbidden to hold Farms ; to stand as God-fathers ; to get Churches into their Possession without the consent of the Bishops ; or to take the Revenues of those that are granted to them, without allowing a competent Maintenance for the Priests who serve in them, and a sufficient Fund for the keeping them in repair.

The Twelfth declares the Promises of Marriage, made without Witnesses, to be Null, if it be deny'd by one of the Parties.

The Thirteenth enjoyns the Cutting of the Hair short, so that part of the Ears and the Eyes may be discover'd.

The Fourteenth prohibits Marriages, to the seventh Degree of Consanguinity.

The Fifteenth forbids to bury the Dead without the Bounds of their Parish, unless the accustomed Duties be paid to the Curate ; and to honour their Memory, without the Bishop's Authority.

In the Sixteenth, it is prohibited to make Merchandise of Men, by selling them for Slaves as it was often practis'd. Lastly, Sodomy is forbidden under very severe Penalties, and this Case is reserv'd to the Cognizance of the Bishops. These Constitutions were confirm'd by the Authority of the See of Rome.

In the Year 1108. St. Anselm held another Council at London, in which he made Ten very rigid Canons against Priests and Deacons, who were marry'd or liv'd incontinently. The Council of London, in 1108.

The Councils of Spain.

The Council of Leon, held in the Year, 1012.

FEW Councils were call'd in Spain in this Century, by reason that part of that Kingdom was then under the Dominion of the Moors. However, King Alphonfus held a notable Assembly at Leon, A. D. 1012. in which the Bishops drew up Seven Canons. The Council of Leon, in 1012.

The First imports, That Ecclesiastical Affairs shall be first treated of, at the opening of the Synods.

The Second, That the Churches shall peaceably enjoy such Revenues as are left them by last Wills and Testaments, and that the Clergy-men shall pass Judgment as to their validity.

The Third, That Abbots, Abbeſſes, Monks and Nuns, shall be subject to the Jurisdiction of their Dioceſan Biſhop.

The Fourth ordains, That none shall ſeize on the Church-Revenues.

The Fifth, That the King's Officers shall Proſecute thoſe who have kill'd a Clergy-man.

The Sixth, That after having diſpatch'd Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, the Biſhops ſhall proceed to the Examination of thoſe of the Kingdom.

The Seventh, That none ſhall buy the Eſtate of a Vaſſal of the Church, and he who has done it, ſhall loſe the Money he gave for the Purchase.

Theſe Decrees are follow'd with Forty others for the advantage of the State, ſome of which nevertheleſs have reference to the Preſervation of Eccleſiaſtical Revenues.

The Council of Coyaco, held, A. D. 1050.

The Council of Coyaco, in 1050.

SINCE the time of King Alfonſus, we do not find that any Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions were made in Spain, till the Reign of Ferdinand I. King of Caſtile, who being deſirous to revive the ancient Church-Diſcipline, which was for ſo long time diſus'd, call'd a Council in the Year 1050. at Coyaco, a Caſtle in the Dioceſs of Oviedo, where the Biſhop of that City aſſiſted, together with Eight other Biſhops of Spain; and the following Conſtitutions were ratify'd by them.

The Firſt ordains, That the Biſhops ſhall govern their Dioceſſes, and perform their Eccleſiaſtical Functions with their Clerks, according to the Order of the Church.

The Second, That the Abbots and Abbeſſes ſhall likewiſe govern their Monaſteries according to St. Benediſt's Rule, and ſhall be ſubject to the Biſhops; and that they ſhall not admit any Religious Perſons of another Monaſtery, without the permiſſion of their Abbot or Abbeſſes.

The Third, That the Churches and Clergy ſhall be under the Jurisdiction of the Biſhops, and not under that of Laicks: That the Churches ſhall not be divided, but that they ſhall be ſupply'd with Priests and Deacons, and furniſh'd with Service-Books and Ornaments; ſo that there may be no need of Wooden or Earthen Chalice: That the Habits of the Priests during the Celebration of the Maſs, be the Amict, the Albe, the Cincture, the Stole, the Chafuble and the Maniple; and thoſe of a Deacon, the Amict, the Albe, the Cincture, the Stole, the Dalmatick and the Maniple: That the Altar be intirely made of Stone, and conſecrated by the Biſhop: That the Hoſt be altogether of pure Wheat and without any Defect: That the Wine be likewiſe Pure, and the Water Clean; the Altar decently adorn'd and cover'd with a white Linnen Cloth, with a Corporal above and below the Chalice: That the Priests and Deacons ſhall not bear Arms; but that they ſhall always have the Crown of their Head and Beards ſhav'd: That they ſhall not keep any Women in their Houſes; unleſs their Mother, Siſter, Aunt or Mother-in-Law: And that they ſhall teach Children the Creed and the Lord's Prayer.

The Fourth imports, That Perſons guilty of Murder, Adultery, or any other ſort of Uncleanneſs, ſhall be oblig'd to do Penance; and if they reſuſe to ſubmit to it, they ſhall be ſeparated from the Church and the Communion.

The Fifth, that thoſe whom the Arch-deacon preſents for Ordination, in the Ember-Weeks, ſhall be well verſ'd in the Plaſter, the Hymns, the Canticles, the Epistles, the Gospels, and the Prayers: That the Priests ſhall not be preſent at Weddings to eat among the Gueſts, but only to give the Benediction: That the Clerks and Lay-men, who partake of the Funeral Banquets, eating the Bread of the Deceas'd, ſhall do ſome good Work for their Souls, and that they ſhall invite the Poor and the Sick to theſe Banquets.

The Sixth, That all the Chriſtians ſhall go to Church, on Saturday Evening and on Sunday Morning; that they ſhall aſſiſt on that day at the Maſſes and the whole divine Service; that they ſhall do no ſervile Work, nor undertake any Journeys except for Devotion ſake, or to bury the Dead and viſit the Sick, or to put in Execution ſome private Order receiv'd from the Prince, or to defend themſelves againſt the Saracens: And that the Chriſtians ſhall not keep any Correſpondence with the Jews.

The Seventh, That the Counts or chief Magiſtrates ſhall govern the People with Juſtice; ſhall admit upon a Tryal, only the Evidence of Eye or Ear Witneſſes; and ſhall ſeverely puniſh falſe Witneſſes.

The Eighth, That Juſtices ſhall be adminiſter'd in the Kingdoms of Leon, Gallicia, Aſturia and Portugal, according to Alphonſus's Law, and in Caſtile, according to thoſe of Sanchez.

The Ninth declares, That the Triennial Preſcription ſhall not take place, in reference to the Churches.

The Thirteenth, That the Subjects of the Kingdom shall be obedient to their Prince, as they were to Alphonfus and Sanchez. These Constitutions were made in the Presence, and by the Authority of King Ferdinand and Queen Sanchia.

The Council of Elna in Rouffillon, held, A. D. 1065.

TO these Councils may be join'd an Assembly of Bishops and Counts, held in the Year 1065, at Elna in the County of Rouffillon, where the Episcopal See of Perpignan was formerly fix'd: Divers Constitutions were made in this Council, for the Preservation of Church-Revenues, and more especially that which was call'd, The Truce of God.

The Council of Elna in Rouffillon.

C H A P. XIV.

Observations on the Ecclesiastical Affairs of the Eleventh Century.

THE Study of Divinity, which was neglected in the preceding Age, was reviv'd in this Century; and many Persons made publick Lectures of it in the Schools of the Cathedral Churches or of the Monasteries. In the beginning, they contented themselves (according to the ancient Method) to relate the Explications of the Fathers on the Holy Scriptures, and Points of Doctrin were only treated of by the way, and when some remarkable Occasion induc'd them to do it. But in the end of this Century, they began to make Divinity-Lectures on the Doctrinal Points of Religion; to propose divers Questions about the sacred Mysteries; and to resolve them by the Principles of Ratiocination and according to the Logical Method. This was the Original of Scholastick Divinity, which became in a little after, the principal and almost only Employment of those, who studied Matters of Religion.

The Study of Divinity in the Eleventh Century.

Some of those, who follow'd this Method, relying too much on their nice Ratiocinations, and departing from the plain manner of Discourfing us'd by the ancient Fathers of the Church, advanc'd some erroneous Propositions. In this Century, Roscelin, who was Professor of Divinity at Compiègne, started a Proposition about the Holy Trinity, which gave offence to every Body; viz. That the three Divine Persons were three Things; nevertheless 'tis not probable, that he design'd to maintain the Error of the Tritheites, or to admit three different Substances in God; and one may reasonably suppose, that by those three Things, he understood only three subsisting and distinct Persons, altho' of the same Nature.

But altho' no new * Heresie sprung up in this Age about the Mysteries of the Trinity and the Incarnation, yet there were divers in respect of the Sacraments and Church-Discipline. We have shewn that in the beginning of the Century, certain Hereticks were discover'd at Orleans in Flanders, and at Toulouse, who deny'd the real Presence of the Body of Jesus Christ in the Eucharist; the necessity of Baptism, and the efficacy of the Sacraments; who rejected the Worship of Saints and Croffes, and the Use of Images; who condemn'd lawful Marriages, and censur'd the most part of the Ceremonies of the Church.

* We have not thought fit in this Translation, any where to omit the Words of the Author; who being of the Church of Rome, relates many things as Heresies, which the Protestants esteem not so: Wherefore we doubt not but the discreet Protestant Reader will always use his own Judgment.

Some time after, Berengarius divulg'd his Opinions about the Sacrament of the Eucharist, which were condemn'd in divers Councils. The Controversies that were debated in this Century, between the Greek and Latin Churches, have regard only to Points of Discipline, and particularly to the use of Unleavened Bread in the Communion. Lutheric Archbishop of Sens, is wrongfully accus'd of having deny'd the real Presence of the Body of Jesus Christ in the same Sacrament, in the beginning of this Century; and 'tis falsly suppos'd that he was reprov'd by King Robert upon that account: For Helguad does not say, that he embrac'd that Opinion, but only that he was wont to make use of the Eucharist, to try whether Persons were unworthy or not, by saying to those to whom he was ready to administer that Sacrament, If you are worthy to receive it, draw near and take it: And that King Robert found great Fault with this Expression, and reprov'd him very sharply for it; but that Leutheric turn'd the Reprimand to his own Advantage.

Rights of the Popes and of the Church of Rome.

The Quarrels that broke forth between the Popes and the Emperors, caus'd very great Confusions and Disorders in the Church and the Western Empire. During these Commotions, the Popes took an occasion to establish their Temporal Sovereignty in Rome, and endeavour'd to make themselves independent of the Emperors. Gregory VII. extended his Pretensions yet farther, and us'd his utmost Efforts to persuade the World, that he was rightful Sovereign of the whole Universe, as well in Civil as in Ecclesiastical Affairs: He was the first of the Popes, who attempted directly to dispossess the Emperor and the Kings of their Dominions, and imagin'd that he had a right to dispose of them in favour of whomsoever he should think fit to advance to that Dignity. As for the Spiritual Supremacy, he carry'd it beyond its due Bounds, and abrogated almost the whole Authority of the Bishops, and the Liberties of particular Churches. The great number of Legats of the See of Rome sent abroad on all sides, and the Power which they assum'd to themselves, did not a little contribute to ruine the Authority of the Ordinaries, and was extremely chargeable to the respective Churches: The Dignity of the Cardinals was augmented to the detriment of that of the Bishops, and they began to have the greatest share in the Election of Popes, and in the Management of the Affairs of the Church: The Arch-bishops were oblig'd to receive the Pall, before they were permitted to exercise the Functions of their Order; and to conclude, the Court of Rome, under divers Pretences, got the Cognizance and Determination of all manner of Ecclesiastical Affairs.

Divers
Points of
concerning the Clergy.

The Simoniack Practices, Marriage and Concubinage of Clergy-men were express'd, and their Career at last quite stop'd by the means of a vast number of Decrees: Some to palliate Simony, thought fit to distinguish the Temporal Revenue of Benefices from the Spiritual; and maintain'd, That in giving Money for a Benefice, they did not commit Simony, because they purchas'd only the Temporalities. This gave occasion to determine, That it was Simony, to buy the Revenues annexed to Church Livings, the Functions of which were Spiritual: The famous distinction of three sorts of Simony, ab officio, a manu, a lingua was in vogue at that time: St. Gregory was the first who made the Remark, and it was reviv'd by Gregory VII. The Laicks who had Tithes in their Possession, were mov'd by a scruple of Conscience to restore them; but they often bestow'd them on Monks, and apply'd them to the Founding of Monasteries: The Bishops oppos'd this Practice, and ordain'd that they cannot be given to Monasteries without the permission of the Diocessans and of the Pope: However, the Monks did not forbear to retain those that they had in their Possession, nor even to accept of others, when offer'd to them. The Elections of Bishops were still in use; but the Princes often nominated them, or caus'd those to be chosen whom they thought fit to promote, and sometimes the Popes took care to provide them, or ordain'd those who were elected, when the Metropolitan refus'd to do it.

The Emperors and Kings still had the Power of granting the Investiture of Bishopricks and Abbeyes; and this Right was not contested with them till about the end of the Eleventh Century: The Plurality of Benefices began to be in use, and was condemn'd by divers Constitutions: A great number of Monks were promoted to the Episcopal Dignity, and some Bishops left their Bishopricks to retire to Monasteries, after having obtain'd a Licence from the Pope. Many Bishopricks were made Metropolitan Sees, and many others were newly erected. The Arch-bishop of Lyons was instituted Primat of France: In the end of the Century, the Bishopricks of Arras and Cambray were separated, and the Episcopal Sees of Gascogne, which had lain for a long time vacant, were fill'd up again. The Sons of the Clergy were declar'd unworthy to be admitted into Holy Orders; but this Decree was not generally receiv'd, nor without opposition: For in many Places, the admission into the Monastick State, or into the Order of Regular Canons, remov'd that Obstacle. A great number of Churches, Abbies and Monasteries were then founded, and almost all the old Churches were demolish'd, to build new ones.

The Discipline of the Church, relating to Penance, was not so strict nor so severe as in the preceding Century; for the Pilgrimages, the Absolutions fetch'd from Rome, the Redemptions, the Disciplining Whip and the Crusades, contributed much to the Abolishing of that Injunction: Private Confession was more especially recommended. The Sentences of Excommunication were so frequent, that they became contemptible; and they were extended not only to Persons actually excommunicated, but also to those who convers'd or kept correspondence with them, even to the third Generation; a Practice which can scarce be met with in any other Age of the Church. The ancient severity of the Canons, which ordain, That Clergy-men guilty of notorious Offences, more especially of Simony, should be suspended from their Office for ever, was no longer observ'd; but they were generally re-establish'd in the Functions of their Orders, and restor'd to their former Rights, by the means of certain particular Ceremonies.

Remarks on the Scourging, Discipline and Fasts.

The use of the Disciplining Whip, unknown to all Antiquity, began in the end of this Century, having had its Opposers and Maintainers; the Custom of doing Penance for another, was likewise introduc'd at that time. The Fasts on the four Ember-Weeks were strictly observ'd; but the Ember-Week of the Summer-Quarter, was not as yet fix'd; for some took it to be the second Week of the Month of June, and others refer'd it to the Week immediately mediately following Whit-Sunday. Divers Councils ordain'd abstinence from Flesh on Saturdays, and from Flesh and Wine on Fridays: In the former Ages of the Church, 'twas customary to fast on Fridays and Saturdays, till the Hour of † Nine: The Church of Rome was † One of wont to keep a Fast on Saturdays instead of Wednesdays: The Churches of France for a long the Canon-time, observ'd the Fasts of Wednesday and Friday, but that Custom was abolish'd; neither was cal Hours. any regard had even to abstinence on those days. A Constitution was made to that purpose in this Century, for Friday and Saturday, although it met with some Opposition.

The Priests were forbidden to celebrate above on Mass in a day, unless in case of necessity, Observa- or when 'twas requisite that one should be said for a deceased Person; for then they were al- rions on the lowed to say such a Mass, and that of the day: Some sorts of Penance were impos'd on Mass. Priests who let fall an Host through Carelessness: In some Churches, 'twas customary to give a consecrated Host to the Priests on the day of their Ordination, with which they communicated during forty days. This Question was debated at that time, viz. Whether it were lawful for a Priest to celebrate Mass, without being attended with divers Assistants, and when he officiated in that manner, whether he ought to say, Dominus vobiscum? All the Faithful were obliged to receive the Holy Communion at Easter, and it was still usually administer'd in all the Churches, under both Kinds: However, in some, the consecrated Bread was steeped in the Wine; and perhaps the Canon of the Council of Clermont, which ordains, That both the Species should be receiv'd separately, was made against that Custom.

The general Commemoration of all the Dead, the next day after the Festival of all Saints, was instituted in the end of this Century: Odilo Abbot of Cluny, enjoyn'd it to his whole Order; and this Custom was introduc'd into the Church a little while after. It was ordain'd in the Council of Clermont, That the Office of the Virgin Mary should be said every Saturday, and there arose Disputes about the Festival of her Annuntiation, viz. whether it ought to be celebrated on March 25. or on December 18. but it was usually referr'd to the former: Some other Questions of less importance were likewise started, and hotly debated, particularly, That about the Apostolical Dignity, attributed to St. Martial. The Benedictins of the Abbey of Fleury, and those of Mount Cassin, had a long Contest for the Body of St. Benedict, the Founder of their Order, and the Monks of St. Dennis and of St. Emmeran at Ratisbon, in like manner contended for that of St. Dionysius or Dennis the Arcopagite.

The Monastick State, receiv'd very considerable Accessions and advantages in the Eleventh Observa- Century. The Congregation of Cluny was much augmented by a vast number of Monaste- ons on the ries newly founded, and by the great Revenues, with which it was endow'd; but the en- Monastick crease of Riches occasion'd Remissness of Discipline; caus'd Ambition to be predominant, and Life. immers'd the Monks in Secular Affairs. A serious reflection on these Irregularities induc'd many Persons to embrace a more austere sort of Monastick Life, and more conformable to that which is enjoyn'd in St. Benedict's Rule, and gave occasion to the founding of several new Orders, who all made profession to follow the same Rule made by St. Benedict; altho' they had their peculiar Customs. Thus St. Romuald founded that of the Camaldolites in Italy, in the beginning of the Century. He became a Monk, A. C. 971. at the Age of 20 Years, The Order of Camaldolites. in the Abbey of Classe in the Diocess of Ravenna, but perceiving the Disorders in which his Monastery was involv'd, and considering that the engagement of the Monks in Secular Affairs, was the cause of their Irregularity, he put himself under the tuition of a certain Reverend Hermit nam'd Marinus, who resided in the Territories of Venice, and embrac'd the Hermetick Life, which he re-establish'd in the Western Countries. Thir Institution was not to live alone, as the ancient Hermits, but to dwell together in the same place separated from other Men, and in distinct Cells, under the Government of the same Superiour, and observing the same Rule: These sorts of Monasteries were anciently call'd Laur, and St. Romuald founded a very great number of them in Italy: One of the most famous, was that which was built on Mount Apennin near Arezzo, in a Place which was given them by a certain Person nam'd Mandel, from whence the Order took the name of Camaldoli: St. Romuald liv'd 100 Years after he had taken upon him the Vows of Religion, and saw his Order in a flourishing Condition. Peter Damian in like manner instituted a Congregation of Hermits of the same kind: These Hermits practis'd great Austerities, and are reputed to have done very extraordinary things. John Gualbert of Florence having likewise quitted his Monastery to lead a more regular course of Life, retir'd to Vall'Ombrosa, and their laid the Foundation of a new Religious Society.

The Order of the Carthusians was instituted, A. D. 1086. by Bruno, a Native of Colen, The Order of Carthu- and Canon of Rheims, who repair'd, with Six of his Companions to the Solitude of Char- of Carthu- treuse, which was assign'd to them by Hugh Bishop of Grenoble. Some time after, two Gentlemen of Vienne nam'd Gaston and Girond, having devoted their Persons and Estates to the relief of those who being seiz'd with the Distemper commonly call'd St. Antony's Fire, came to implore the Intercession of St. Antony at Vienne, where the Body of that Saint was translated from Constantinople by Jocelin D'Albon, in the time of King Lothaire the Son of Lewes D'Outremer, gave occasion to the Institution of the Order of St. Antony, which was The Order of St. An- compos'd at first of certain Lay-men, and afterward of Monks, who made Profession of St. An- tony.

The Cister- St. Augustin's Rule. In the Year, 1098. Robert Abbot of Molesme retired to Cisteaux in the tian Order. Diocels of Challon sur Saone, with 21 Monks of his Convent, to practise St. Benedict's Rule with greater strictness: His design being approv'd by Gautier Bishop of Challon, and by Hugh Arch-bishop of Lyons, he built a Monastery in that Place, which was endow'd by Eudes Duke of Burgundy; but he had not long the Government of it, for Pope Paschal II. enjoind him, the next Year, to return to Molesme. The other Monks continu'd at Cisteaux, under the tuition of Alberic, and this Reform was approv'd by the Pope, A. D. 1100. Stephen Harding, who succeeded Alberic in 1109. brought this Order to its full perfection, insomuch, that it became very numerous and obtain'd great Reputation. About the same time Robert D'Arciselles Arch-deacon of Rennes, having receiv'd a Mission from Pope Urban II. to Preach to the People, by that means gather'd together a great multitude of Persons of both Sexes, and caus'd many Cells to be built for them in the Forest of Frontevault, at the distance of three Leagues from Saumur. Afterward he shut up the Nuns in a separate Apartment, and in the Year of our Lord, 1100. made a great Monastery, which was govern'd by him till the end of his Life; but before he died, he caus'd Petrucilla de Chemille to be chosen Abbess, A. D. 1115. and conferr'd on her, both the Government of the Nuns, and of the Monks of that Order.

Of the regular Canons. The regular manner of living in common, peculiar to the Canons, which was instituted in the Ninth Century, was now almost every where abolish'd; nevertheless some Bishops reviv'd it in their Chapters, and it was re-establish'd in the end of the Century in another form: For then certain Religious Houses were founded, in which Clergy-men, who were desirous to lead a more regular course of Life, retir'd thither, to live in common, without having any manner of private Property. These last Canons were different from those of the Ninth Century. 1. In regard that the former had Benefices annex'd to Churches, and were oblig'd to officiate in them; whereas there were many among these who had not any peculiar Church-Living. 2. Because the former were wont to live in common, of the Church-Revenues, but they might also retain those of their private Patrimony; whereas these were oblig'd to renounce them, as well as the Monks. 3. Upon account that the others were at liberty to quit that course of Life; whereas these last profess'd to live always after the same manner, and they were positively forbidden to do otherwise. The latter Canons liv'd in common, under an Abbot, Superiour or Provost, and made profession, as the Monks, of Poverty, Constancy and Obedience; altho' they were not as yet bound by an exprefs Vow; neither were they only employ'd in serving the Church or Monastery, where they resided, but they were also taken sometimes out of their House, to receive a Cure, and to exercise other Ecclesiastical Functions. Ives afterwards Bishop of Chartres, establish'd this strict Reform in the Monastery of St. Quentin, A. D. 1078. Afterward that Religious House supply'd France, with many other Convents of regular Canons, and in the beginning of the following Century, the Congregations of St. Rufus and St. Norbert were instituted; insomuch, that the Order of regular Canons, became very numerous, and extended very far within a short space of Time.

THE PREFACE.

THis Tenth Volume contains the entire History of the Twelfth Century, tho' that be larger than the Preceeding, by reason it contains a greater Number of Authors than the Ages before it, some whereof may be Compared to the greatest Lights of the Church. We here find the Empire and the Church at Difference; The Church of Rome disturb'd by Obstinate Schisms; The Popes at War with the Emperours; The Kings and Bishops in Dispute about their Rights. The Dignity of the Sacraments, and the External Worship in Religion, as also its Principles are attack'd by Monstrous and Ridiculous Heresies. Scholastick Divinity becomes the common Study, and the Body of the Canon Law, such as it is at Present, was form'd and establish'd in this Twelfth Century. The Church is stock'd with abundance of Monastick and Regular Orders. The Immunities and Exemptions of the Revenues of the Church and Ecclesiastical Persons are vigorously supported by the Bishops, and maintained by the Decrees of Councils. And Finally, the Manners of Ecclesiasticks and the External Ceremonies of the Church are reform'd in this Age by several very useful Regulations. This is what the Reader will find in the History and Extracts of the Authors and Councils of the Twelfth Century, which we Publish in this Volume.

CHAP. I.

Of the Life and Writings of Ivo, Bishop of Chartres.

IV O, Bishop of Chartres, (though Born in the XIth. Age of the Church,) not Dying till the Year 1115. shall begin our Catalogue of the Writers of this XIIth. Century; and his Life and Works have so many things remarkable in them, as to deserve a Chapter by themselves.

He was the Son of Hugo de Altylo and Hilemburga, and was Born at Beauvan; where he also began his Studies; but, removing afterwards to the Abbey of Bec, he applied himself to Divinity under Laufrene, and chiefly to the Reading and Studying of the Ecclesiastical Canons. Guy Bishop of Beauvais made choice of him for Abbot of the Monastery of St. Quentin, which he had Founded in the Year 1078. He gave all his Estate to this Foundation; wherein, by his Care and good Government, Religion and Learning did mightily flourish; and by some of the Members of this, were several other Monasteries of Canons Regulars Erected in divers parts of France.

Geofry, at this time Bishop of Chartres, was summon'd to answer before Pope Gregory VII. to the Charge of Simony, laid against him; which, nevertheless there appear'd not sufficient Evidence at that time to make out; but being afterwards Cited before Urban II. he was found guilty of divers Crimes and deposed by that Pope from his Bishoprick. The Clergy and People of Chartres Elected Ivo into his place, and presented him to King Philip, who gave him the Invefiture: but Richerius, Arch-Bishop of Sens, being enrag'd that Geofry was turn'd out, without acquainting him with it, refuses to Consecrate Ivo, though the Clergy and People of Chartres demanded it with much earnestness. The Arch-Bishop persisting in his Temper, Ivo Addresses himself to Pope Urban II. and from him receives his Consecration, with an express to Richerius to acknowledge him, and by virtue of it was soon put in possession of the Bishoprick of Chartres, and Geofry obliged to retire to that part of the Diocels which lay in Normandy, which for some time after he retain'd by the favour and interest of the Duke of that Province. Richerius, in revenge of the affront put upon him, and to assert his own rights and privileges, Summons Ivo before the Council he was to hold at Stampe, to answer for his having seiz'd himself of the Church of Chartres, while Geofry was yet living. Ivo not thinking it safe for him to appear there, the Arch-Bishop, together with the Bishops of Paris, Meaux and Troyes, declar'd him guilty of High-Treason against the King and the Ecclesiastical Laws, in having gotten himself Consecrated by the Pope, and resolv'd to resettle Geofry in his Diocels, but Ivo appealing once more to Rome, the Pope Interdicts Richerius the use of the Pallium, in case he should any longer oppose the Establishment of Ivo; upon which, Geofry was at last intirely driven out of the whole Diocels. The great zeal Ivo always express'd for maintaining Ecclesiastical Discipline, the observation of the Canons and purity of Manners, and his undaunted Courage in asserting the liberties of the Church, in opposing all Innovations and Irregularities, and in discouraging and discountenancing all remissness and neglect of duties, as it engag'd him in many differences with others, and involv'd him in much trouble, so it gave occasion to the World to perceive and admire his great Learning and Knowledge, and his mighty Wisdom and Constancy. He died at Chartres, the 23d. of December, in the Year 1115.

His Works.

There are yet extant, 287. Letters written by Ivo Bishop of Chartres, which, being full of remarkable Observations concerning the Discipline and History of the Church, and containing many excellent Lessons of Morality, judicious determinations of several Cases of Conscience and Law-Questions, propos'd to him by others, are of no small value, and it will be well worth our while to give the Reader a short and exact abridgement of each of them.

The two First in the Collection, are from Pope Urban II. one to the Clergy and People of Chartres, the other to Richerius Bishop of Sens, in which, he advertises them of his having Consecrated Ivo Bishop of Chartres; at the end of them follows the Pope's advice to him after his Consecration.

The III^d. Letter is from Ivo to the Pope regretting his having been by him drawn from his solitudes and retirement to be made a Bishop, and recommending to him the Bishop of Beauvais.

In the IVth. he admonishes Bernard, Abbot of Marmoutier, not to entertain any Monks of his Diocels, and in particular, demands of him one Walter, who had been Abbot of Bonneval, and quitted his Station for that retirement.

The Vth. Letter to Adela Countess of Chartres, severely reprimands her for countenancing the Marriage of her Kinswoman Adelaida with William, and advises that they forbear having Carnal knowledge of each other, till the matter be determined in Consistory.

The VIth. is a Letter of Thanks for a Present he had receiv'd from Girard; (suppos'd to have been a Regular Canon of St. Quentin at Beauvais, and afterwards Abbot of the Monastery of St. Loup in Troyes) He gives him also some account of the contrivances of his Enemies against him, and invites him to his House. He tells him in the Conclusion, that Geofry was forc'd to quit the whole Bishoprick, except a small corner of it, which he yet held by the Duke of Normandy's assistance.

The VIIth. is directed to Roscelin, a Priest of the Church of Compiègne, who had been Condemn'd of Heresie, in the Council of Soissons, and forc'd to a recantation, which he afterwards abjuring, was turn'd out of his Benefice, and not knowing, in that condition, where to find a retreat, had Address'd himself for relief to Ivo Bishop of Chartres. Our Prelate answers, that he would willingly grant his request and afford him entertainment, were he sure he had sincerely renounc'd his former errors; but having reason to believe the contrary of him, and fearing the People of Chartres would not endure him among them, must refuse what he asks of him; that the best advice he can give him is to bear his condition patiently, and to resolve on a publick and authentick abjuration of his errors in Religion.

The VIIIth. Letter of Ivo's is to Richerius Arch-Bishop of Sens, who had severely inveigh'd against him, in a Letter, by which he Cited him to appear and answer before him, for having usurp'd the See from Geofry. Ivo, in this Letter, remonstrates to him, how injuriously he dealt, and what inconveniencies he would draw upon himself, by undertaking the cause of one who had been found guilty of the most notorious Crimes, and stood condemn'd by the Holy See: that for his part, he was so far from aspiring to the Bishoprick of Chartres, that after the Clergy of that Church had Elected him and forc'd him to take Investiture of the King, he had still declin'd entring upon that Charge, till he was fully certified of the deposition of Geofry, and that it was the Pope's pleasure he should succeed him: that upon the Arch-Bishop's refusing to admit him, he had recourse to the Pope, who oblig'd him to accept the Bishoptick and Consecrated him himself. He reminds the Arch-Bishop, likewise that the Pope had written to him, and commanded him to receive him as his Suffragan, that he had ever since endeavour'd to behave himself according to the respect and obedience due from him to his Metropolitan: he adds, that he is willing to attend the Council at Stampe, if a safe Conduct may be granted him, and that Stephen Earl of Chartres should be ready there, on the King's side, to answer to all that shou'd be objected against him, without prejudice to the Authority of the Holy See, before which this matter might one day be brought.

The IXth. Letter is Address'd to Philip King of France, and gives His Majesty an account how Ivo had Accommodated the differences between the Monks of Bec and those of Molefme, with which the King was not satisfied.

In the Xth. he gives several Instructions to the Nuns of St. Avita near Châteaudun, and advises them in particular, to take care of their Reputations.

In the XIth. he Congratulates Gonthier, upon his return to his duty, orders him to retire into the Church of Sancta Maria de Gournay, where he should have the Charge of some Monks, and exhorts him to live there peaceably and orderly.

In the XIIth. he consults Pope Urban, about an odd practice of some in his Diocese, who would live by the Altar, but not serve at the Altar, and offer'd Money to him for Altars, as they were wont to purchase them of his predecessors, under the title of Personnats: Of this matter, Ivo intreats the Pope's Opinion, and his Advice how to deal with these Traders. He informs him also, that the Arch-Bishop of Sens, assisted by the Bishops of Paris, Meaux, and Troyes, had pronounc'd his Consecration void, and intended to reinstate Geofry. He appeals therefore to the Holy See, and judges it necessary that the Pope write to them, and oblige them either to give him no farther disturbance, or else to appear at Rome, and give an account of their proceedings. Lastly, he delivers his Opinion, that 'twould be convenient the Pope should send a Legate into France, to endeavour the Reformation of the Churches: and prays the Pope, that if any persons banish'd out of his Diocese for notorious Crimes, shall repair to Rome, he will not decree any thing concerning them, till he have fully inform'd himself of the whole merits of their causes.

The XIIIth. and XIVth. Letters are to the Arch-Bishop Richerius, and the other Bishops invited by the King to his Marriage with Bertrade, whom Ivo dissuades from going to Court, and exhorts to do all they can to hinder that Marriage.

In the XVth. he freely declares his mind to King Philip, that he neither can nor will assist at his intended Marriage with Bertrade, till his former Marriage be pronounced void in a General Council.

The XVIth. is an Answer to Walter Bishop of Meaux's, upon this Question, If it be lawful for a Man to Marry his Concubine? He tells him that some Laws have forbid it, and others have permitted it, and leaves the whole matter to the discretion and judgment of the Bishops; after which, he exhorts the Bishop of Meaux, not to approve of King Philip's Marriage with Bertrade.

The XVIIth. to the regular Canons of St. Quentin, at Beauvais, does with a great deal of Eloquence set forth the troubles he is involved in, since he was made a Bishop; admonishes them to continue to observe the Rules of their Institution and to make choice of a Superiour in his place.

In the XVIIIth. Ivo highly blames Cardinal Roger, the Pope's Legate, for being inclin'd to Absolve Simon Count of Niofle, whom he had Excommunicated for Adultery. This Count, after the Death of his Wife, Marries one with whom he had formerly been too familiar, and now demands Absolution; Ivo absolutely refuses it, and sends him to the Pope with a Letter, setting forth the whole affair: the Count makes his suit to Roger, hoping to meet with more gentle treatment from him than at the Pope's hands; Ivo hereupon declares to the Cardinal that he cannot absolve him, nor will he admit him to the Communion, till he has an answer from the Pope, either in writing or by word of mouth.

The XIXth. Letter is written to William, Abbot of Fécamp, who had compar'd him to St. John and to Elijah, for his boldness, in declaring his dislike of the King's Marriage. Ivo acquaints him how great inconveniences that liberty of his had brought him under, and desires the Prayers of him and his Monks. He cannot grant the Abbot's request in behalf of a Canon Regular, who would have leave to quit his Rule and enter into the Monastery of Fécamp; he tells him, if he knew the Man, he would not be concern'd for him, that he is a proud and idle Fellow, that for ten years together he had never as he ought observ'd his week for reading Mass, but was at any time for reading out of his turn, when there was an occasion of serving his vanity by it; however, if the Canons his Brethren, would consent he should leave their House, he would not hinder him, and gave him full leave to ask them.

Ivo being taken into Custody for opposing King Philip's Marriage, the Clergy and people of Chartres threaten'd to assault the Count, unless he would release him: to them, therefore Ivo writes, dissuading them from all thoughts of taking Arms, which would be a means not of procuring his liberty, but prolonging his Confinement, that it would moreover offend the Divine Majesty, that it was not fit for a Bishop to recover his Rights by violence, that he was resolv'd rather to Dye, than that any Man should lose his Life to rescue him, that that would much sooner be obtain'd by their Prayers, which was all he had to beg or expect from them. These are the Contents of his XXth. Letter.

A New Ecclesiastical History

In the XXIId. he pays his thanks to Isael Bishop of Mans, for the Prayers he had put up to God for his deliverance. He desires of him the Relicks of St. Julian's Body, which had been lately translated to Mans.

The XXIIId. to King Philip, acknowledges that having been by that Prince advanc'd to a Bishoprick, he owes to him under God the highest respect and observance: but that having had the misfortune to fall under his displeasure, for offering him as a true and faithful Servant necessary and wholesome advice, he had been ill treated, and the goods of his Bishoprick embroiled by his Enemies; that therefore he pray'd His Majesty to excuse his not coming to Court, and to allow him some time to breath, and to put his affairs into order again. He hopes God will one day convince him by experience of the truth of that Maxim of Solomon's, that the wounds and harsh usage of our friends who love us, are to be prefer'd before the kisses of our enemies and flatterers. He concludes with assuring the King, that he is ready to answer his accusers, when he may know what they have to object against him, and that he will defend himself in the Church, if his crimes fall under the Ecclesiastical Cognizance, or before His Majesty's Council, if he be charg'd with any against the State.

The XXIIId. is to Guy, Chief Master of the King's Household, who had interceded with the King, in favour of Ivo: he returns him thanks for his good offices, and assures him 'tis impossible they should come to any good terms, till the King have totally quitted Bertrade; that he had seen a Letter of Pope Urban's to all the Prelates of the Kingdom, Commanding them to Excommunicate him in case he continued to live with her, and that this Letter had been long since publish'd, if he had not conceal'd it out of the true love he bore His Majesty, and his unwillingness that his own people should rise up against him.

The XXIVth. is to Hugh, Arch-Bishop of Lyons; he acquaints him how great joy it was to him to hear that Pope Urban had appointed him Legate of France, in which employment he had so well acquitted himself under Gregory the VIIth. but, that he was now not a little griev'd to understand he had by the advice of several of his friends refus'd to accept of that Office again, by reason of the too great business which must lie upon him, at the present juncture of affairs, while the Church labour'd under such troubles as would not easily admit of being compos'd. Ivo tells him, he had been ill counsel'd, and ought not to be sway'd by his friends persuasions, that though in Italy a second Abab was arisen, and France had another Jezebel, who endeavour'd to overthrow the Altars and kill the Prophets of the Lord, yet he should remember the saying of Elijah, that God had yet left him Seven Thousand Servants, who had not bow'd their knees to Baal: that though their Herodias should request the Head of John, and Herod should grant her what she ask'd, yet John should not be afraid to tell him, 'tis not lawful for thee to put away thy own Wife, and to Marry another Man's Wife or Concubine. These and the like instances are urged by Ivo, to induce Hugh to take upon him the Legatine Authority, which he hopes he will soon acquaint him he has yielded to, and desires to know where he may meet him about the beginning of Lent.

His XXVth. Letter is address'd to Pope Urban; and lays before him an account of the troubles and difficulties he was daily oblig'd to encounter with, which made him often resolve to quit his Bishoprick. He then intreats the Pope not to hearken to what should be alledg'd, in his own defence, by one of the Clergy of Chartres, who had been degraded for Simony, Money-Coining, and other irregularities.

The XXVIth. is to Walter, Abbot of St. Maur des Fosses, who had thoughts of leaving his Monastery, by reason of the great corruptions and disorders amongst his Monks. Ivo dissuades him from pursuing that resolution, if he have yet any hopes of doing good upon and reforming but some of them; but in case they continue all incorrigible, thinks he may leave them.

The XXVIIth. is to Eudes, Chief-Justice of Normandy, who had ask'd his Opinion, how he ought to proceed against a certain Bishop; who, being formerly accus'd of Simony and other misdemeanours, had gotten himself Consecrated before the day appointed for his trial. Ivo advises this Magistrate not to regard him as a Bishop, but to treat him as an Heretick and an Intruder; and that if he could not have Justice done upon him by the Bishops of the Province, he should Cite both him and his Judges before the See of Rome, without whose determination such causes were seldom brought to a due issue.

The XXVIIIth. to King Philip, carries his excuses for not appearing with his Soldiers at Pontoise, or Chaumont, according to the King's Orders. 1. Because Pope Urban having forbid the King to keep Company with Bertrade, under pain of Excommunication, he could not have forborn publicly admonishing his Majesty of it. 2. Because most of the Guards and Militia of his Diocese lying under Excommunication for being concern'd in a Rebellion, he could not, till they had undergone a Penance, receive them into the Communion of the Church, nor tend them against the Enemy while they were under her Censures; and 3. because he thought it not safe for him to be at Court, where he was hated by the Sex that seldom pardon even their best friends.

The XXIXth. Severely reprimands Roger the Priest, for his ill conduct and behaviour.

The XXXth. contains Ivo's advice to Fulk, Bishop of Beauvais, not to persist in opposing Hugh the Pope's Legate, and communicates to him the Letters sent him by the Pope, relating to King Philip's affair.

By the XXXIst. to the same Prelate, he resigns up into his hands the Provostship of St. Quentin in Beauvais, conjuring him to see that his Successor be chosen by the majority and soundest of the Twelfth Century of Christianity.

part of that Society. And in the XXXIId. he sends his advice to them, to Elect a fit and able person for their Governour.

The XXXIId. and XXXIVth. Letters have nothing remarkable in them.

The XXXVth. is address'd to Richerius, Arch-Bishop of Sens, and the other Prelates assembled with him at Rheims, and sets forth his reasons why he would not obey their Citation of him before that Council: 1. that he was Cited by Bishops of other Provinces, who had no power to be his Judges. 2. Because they intended to try him out of the jurisdiction of the Province he was under; and 3. because the accusations laid against him proceeded only from their malice and hatred of his person: that therefore he appeal'd to the Holy See of Rome, where he should be sure to meet with the favour allow'd to all others in his condition, of being heard by the Pope himself, or by his Vicars: that he did take this method to avoid a Trial, being able enough to defend himself against their charge of Perjury, by bringing proof that he had not so much as taken any Oath, but that he did it to prevent his giving an ill example to others and exposing himself to apparent hazard of his Life, since he could not by any means obtain the King's Pass-port: that besides all this, he well enough foresaw he should not be allow'd liberty of speech in their Assembly, since they had already accus'd him of disloyalty to the King, and of being an Enemy to His Majesty, only for having had the courage to tell him his duty, as he thought all of them in Conscience bound to do; whereas His Majesty's real Enemies were those who dissembled with him, and dar'd not search his wounds with fire and sword; that the King might deal with him as His Majesty should think fit, but that he was firmly resolv'd never to approve of his Marriage.

In the XXXVIth. Letter to the Bishop of Beauvais, he shews him the reasons he had to complain of him; particularly, that having requested him to send a Canon Regular to be prefer'd to a vacancy in his Diocese, that Bishop would have had him put in a Monk, contrary to the constitutions of that Church ordained by the Pope. Hereupon, Ivo takes occasion to shew the dignity of the Regular Clergy above that of the Monks, and cites, to this purpose, a passage of St. Austin, wherein that Father says, he scarce ever knew a Monk prove a good Clerk, and some places out of St. Jerom, preferring the Clergy before the Monks. He protests however, that he does not intend all this to reproach and disparage the Monastick way of living, but to put them in mind that they ought to continue truly Monks, and be content to lead a retir'd life. "We praise their Institution, (says he) and believe their state to be as perfectly happy as any on Earth, while they confine themselves within the bounds assign'd them by their Founders; but we think them fitter to be Subjects than Governours, and would have them be humble and obedient, not proud and aspiring.

In the XXXVIIth. he exhorts a certain Canon Regular to go on as he had begun, in all due submission to his Superiours, and in the practice of virtue and Religion.

The XXXVIIIth. is a Letter of thanks to the Bishop of Winchester, for a Chalice he had made him a Present of, to hold the Holy Chrism.

In the XXXIXth, he acquaints St. Anselm, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, That he had shewn what kindness he could to the Monks of Bec, in taking their part against those of Molefine, and that he had long since done them Justice, in their demands upon the Abbey of Poissy, if they had not resolv'd to wait first of all for the King's Consent.

There is nothing observable in the XLth. Letter.

The XLth. Written to Geoffry Abbot of Vendome, Treats of the following Question, viz. Whether a Monk taking the Vow upon him, and receiving the Benediction from another Monk, ought again to receive it from his Abbot? Ivo determines, that it may be either repeated or omitted, without any prejudice either to the one or the other of the parties, because the Benediction of a Monk is not by imposition of hands, nor the Administration of any Sacrament of Apostolical Tradition, and that it has no other virtue in it than what is in the Absolution of a Penitent, or the Prayers of a Priest for his People; that a private Monk having no body but himself to take care of, may, by his own act, dedicate himself to that state of Life, without the Benediction of any Monk or Abbot, since that which constitutes him a Monk, is not any new Dignity conferr'd on him, but only his Contempt of the World and Love of God; that this is so, appears from considering the practice of the first Institutors of the Monastick Orders, who neither receiv'd nor us'd any Benedictions; that indeed, when the Communities of Monks began to be numerous, Vows were exacted of them, and they were admitted by Benedictions, which custom, was prudentially taken up, to oblige them the firmer and more solemnly, in the presence both of God and Men, to Diligence and Constancy in the way of Life they had chose and undertaken; which if they should afterward offer to renounce, they would have the more Witnesses to Condemn them; that these Ceremonies were the best security could be found out against the fickleness of Mens minds and resolutions; and that therefore, 'twere convenient it should be left to the discretion of every Abbot to oblige his Monks, if he thought fit, to renew the Vows they had come under before Witnesses, and to repeat the Benedictions they had receiv'd from others, or wholly to omit them; since these were not Sacraments, which ought not to be repeated; but if the Benediction were look'd upon as such, it ought not to be administred a second time, as Bishops were not to Consecrate anew the Nuns that had been already Consecrated by Priests.

The XLId. is a Letter of Moral Advice, to the Bishop of Soissons.

The XLIIId. Congratulates Pope Urban, upon the Restitution of Peace to the greatest part of Italy; and acquaints him, that one William, a Clergy-man of his Diocese, was Elected Bishop of Paris. The

The XLIVth. is an Admonition to all the Bishops of France, to put in Execution a Law which prohibits all manner of War, four days in the week.

The XLVth. forbids the whole Clergy of the Archdeaconry of Poissy to marry the Count de Meulan to the Daughter of the Count de Crépy, they being within the Degrees of Consanguinity, as he proves from the Genealogy of the two Families.

The XLVIth. Letter to Pope Urban, advertises him that the King of France was dispatching a Deputation of some Courtiers to him, to obtain from him, either by threatnings or fair offers, an Absolution; and exhorts him not to be prevail'd on by them to grant it.

In the XLVIIth. he tells Guy, the Chief Master of the King's Household, that 'tis in vain for that Prince to think of procuring a Dispensation of his Marriage with Bertrade, by his promises of bestowing great Endowments on the Church; that it can never be granted him, nor can he atone for his great Sin by so good a Work, or ever hope for Remission of it, while he resolves to keep to her.

In the XLVIIIth. he acquaints Pope Urban with the promotion of Manasses II^d, to the Archbishoprick of Rheims.

The XLIXth. is Written to Stephen, Earl of Chartres and Blois, denying him the Exemption of the Cloyster of the Canons, from the Bishops's Jurisdiction, and refusing to Swear Homage to him, out of the bounds of the City of Chartres.

In the Lth. he makes his excuses to Richerius, Arch-Bishop of Sens, for not waiting upon him, without the King's Pass-port: He interposes his Advice, concerning the Dispute for Primacy, between the Arch-Bishop of Lions and Richerius, that if he have good Authorities to produce, he should do it, and desires he would send him the Copies of them; but, if no such can be found, thinks he had best refer the matter to the Pope's Decision: He acquaints him, that William is Elected Arch-Bishop of Paris, praying that he would Consecrate him before the Feast of St. Remy, letting him also know, that he had obtain'd leave for him of the Pope, to make use of his Pallium on this occasion, though otherwise, it had been forbidden him.

The LIst. Letter is written to Sanction, Dean of Orleans, who had been Elected Bishop of that Church, in the Year 1099. John, the Sub-Dean, had us'd underhand measures to get himself into that Bishoprick, and some of the Clergy of his Faction, had, by Letters to Ivo, accus'd Sanction of Simony: Ivo, hereupon, endeavours to dissuade him from aspiring after that Dignity, and from getting himself Consecrated, till he had the Pope's Order for it, and had clear'd himself of the Aspersions cast upon him. In the mean while, the Clergy and People of Orleans, had prevail'd on the Arch-Bishop of Sens, to Command Ivo to Consecrate him; he refus'd to do it at Châteaulandon, bordering on the Diocess of Sens, by reason of the difference between the Arch-Bishop of Sens and the Pope, about the Primacy of Lions; but the Clergy having interest'd the King to confirm their Election, Ivo sends forth his Citation for Sanction's Adversaries to appear at Chartres, which they not obeying, and Sanction having purg'd himself by Oath, of what they had alledg'd against him, he was Consecrated by Ivo Bishop of Chartres, William Bishop of Paris, and Walter Bishop of Meaux, as is fully related by Ivo, in his LIVth. Letter, written on this occasion, to Hugh Arch-Bishop of Lions. No sooner was Sanction settled in his new Dignity, but he began to abuse and insult over those of his Clergy who had oppos'd him, which drew from Ivo the LIIId. Letter in this Collection, wherein, he severely taxes him for his indecent Behaviour. The Arch-Bishop of Lions was highly displeas'd at Sanction's Consecration, and took care to let Ivo know how ill he resent'd it at his hands: To him, therefore Ivo protests, (in his LIXth Letter) that he had not taken any Money for performing that Office; that he knew nothing of the Crimes Sanction was accus'd of; that Sanction had denied them all upon Oath; that he did not give him notice of that solemnity, because 'twas not customary to do so; nor did he conceive that the Arch-Bishop could by virtue of his Legatine Authority, challenge such Jurisdiction over the Bishops of France, as that they should not have power of Consecration, without his leave and Licence.

In the LIId. Letter, Ivo writes to Gansfroy, Dean of Mans, about one Everard a Canon-Regular, who had entred himself a Monk, in the Abbey of Marmoutier, and had a mind to return to his former Order, that he ought by no means to suffer him to quit his Monastery, nor receive him again among the Clergy.

In the LVth. he requests the Arch-Bishop of Lions to confirm the Election of one who had been chosen Bishop of Beauvais, notwithstanding some Objections he had against him.

In the LVIt. he Answers King Philip, that he could not hear, that Hugh Arch-Bishop of Lions intended to call another General Council this Year, the Pope having already held two within His Majesty's Dominions; and that if he should Summon one, 'twould be contrary to the Apostolical Institutions and the practice of the Church; that if the Pope's Legates shall after any reasonable distance of time, think fit to Convene the Bishops, they are to obey their Orders; but, if they shall begin to impose a new and intolerable Yoke upon the Bishops, he hopes His Majesty will think it his duty to put a stop to their encroachments.

In the LVIIIth. he tells Geofry, Abbot of Vendome, That he ought to deny the Rite of Burial, among his Monks, to one of them, who had four times quitted his Monastery; because, at his last Return thither, he had not brought back with him, the Goods he had sacrilegiously carried away from the Monastery.

Richerius, Arch-Bishop of Sens, dying in the beginning of the Year 1096, the Clergy elected Daimbert, and sent to Ivo, to Ordain him both Priest, and Bishop; who answers them, in the LVIIIth Letter, That he could not do it, but within the Times appointed for Ordinations ; and, that before his Election could be confirm'd, he must confer with the rest of his Brethren the Bishops, about an Obstacle that offer'd itself. This Obstacle, was, the Opposition of Hugh, Arch-Bishop of Lions, who gave out, That no Bishops could be Ordain'd in France, without his Permission ; and that he would, in particular, do all he could to hinder Daimbert's succeeding to the Arch-Bishoprick of Sens, till he should acknowledge the Primacy of Lyons. Ivo, therefore, in the LIXth Letter, demands of Hugh, If he may Ordain him ? And prays his Answer with all speed. Hugh absolutely refusing to give him Leave to do it, Ivo lets him know by the LXth Letter, That he will obey his Pleasure therein, and had communicated it to the Bishops of his Province ; but he intreats and advises him, to be more moderate, and reserv'd, for the future, in the Exercise of his Authority, and not to insist so rigorously, in exacting their Obedience, to all the Commands of the Holy See ; least, by imposing on them Burdens too heavy for them to bear, he force them to disown her Power, through an impossibility of performing what she lays upon them ; or out of some necessity, and expediency, of acting contrary to it : That tho' they are all very well inclin'd to pay due Obedience to the Orders, or Prohibitions of the Holy See, in Matters relating to Faith and Morality, either concerning the Defence of Religion, the Punishment of wicked Men, the preventing Dangers, and Evils, and the like ; and tho' they are ready to suffer any thing, in Obedience to what he shall Command, and Appoint, to any such Good Ends and Purposes ; yet, as to indifferent Matters, the observing, or not observing of which, has no Influence upon our Salvation : And as to the Endeavours of the Court of Rome, to alter ancient Customs, established by the Holy Fathers, he intreats him to consider with himself, Whether they ought not rather to adhere to what they have established, than to receive her new Constitutions ? The ancient Canons (he tells him) do constantly order, that Metropolitans be Consecrated by the Bishops of the Province ; and therefore, he wonders, that Hugh should go about to introduce another Custom, and pretend to oblige the New-elected Arch-Bishop of Sens, to come to him before his Consecration, and to promise Submission, and Obedience to him ; which is contrary to what was ever practis'd in the Province of France, or in any other Country ; and, that since Daimbert had not been accused of any Crimes, and had been elected duly, and without Simony, he had no Authority to Cite him before him : And whereas, Hugh complains, in his Letter, that Daimbert had receiv'd Investiture from the King's Hands ; Ivo tells him, he knew of no such Matter ; and that tho' it were so, he could not see how that Ceremony should concern Faith and Religion, since, upon a Canonical Election, their Kings had always assum'd a Right of Conferring Bishopricks, and the Popes themselves had written to them, to give Investiture to such as had been duly Elected ; and, sometimes, had sent Orders to defer the Consecrations of Bishops, who had not obtain'd the King's Consent. He urges, moreover, That Pope Urban oppos'd only the real Investitures, and did not exclude their Kings from Electing, or Confirming Elections : And tho' the Eighth General Council prohibited their being present at Elections, yet it allow'd them to admit the Person Elected, to the Possession of his Bishoprick ; that it matters not, whether that Ceremony be administred by the Hand, or some other Sign ; whether by pronouncing any Form, or giving the Pastoral Staff ; since Kings pretended not to convey any thing Spiritual, but only to shew their Approbation of the People's Choice of a Pastor, and to give him Possession of such Lands, and other Ecclesiastical Profits and Advantages, as the Churches were entituled to, from the Liberality of Princes ; that the putting a stop to the Practice of such Investitures, had occasion'd many Evils in the Church, which could not be prevented, or remedied, but by permitting again the Exercise of them : Not that he speaks this out of any Disrespect to the Authority of the Holy See, but to shew how much he wisheth, that the Ministers of the Church of Rome, would apply themselves to the Correcting the greatest Evils, and Distempers, and not lay out themselves, so much, upon such small and insignificant Matters : And therefore, Ivo demands, again, with much Earnestness, That he, and his Brethren, may be permitted to Consecrate the Arch-Bishop of Sens ; which, if Hugh will grant them, he promises to prevail on him, to own the Primacy of Lions ; but if he deny this their Request, tho' they did not, at present, think of doing it without his Leave, yet, if a Schism should, hereupon, break out in the Church, the Blame would not lie at their Doors. Ivo ends this large Epistle, by letting Hugh understand, That he had Reason to demand Satisfaction of him, for the Wrong done to himself, and his Church, by those of Puisset, who lay under an Excommunication, which Hugh had taken off, without his knowledge ; whereby they had been encourag'd to farther Sacrilegious Attempts, presuming to get off so again for the future.

But this was not the only Instance of the strange Carriage of Hugh, Arch-Bishop of Lions : For he pretended, also, to oblige the New-elected Bishop of Nevers, to wait upon him for his Consecration, at Autun. And herein Ivo oppos'd him again, and tells him, in the LXIst Letter, That the Privilege he assum'd, was a Violation both of the Laws, and Customs, of the Church, by which Bishops were to be Consecrated by their Metropolitan ; or, when that could not be, by the Bishops of the same Province.

Ivo, having accommodated Matters with Adelecia, Countess of Puisset, writes the LXIId Letter to Sanction, Bishop of Orleans, letting him know, That the Agreement made between them, did not at all meddle with the Difference that Bishop had with the Clergy, and Monks, of Puisset ; that he may still execute the Sentence of the Canon upon them, for Celebrating Divine Services, while they lay under an Interdict from him ; tho' he would advise him, not to meddle with them, but by the Arch-Bishop of Lions's Consent, without which he would not get Justice done upon them. He tells him also, He need not wonder at his having receiv'd Gervase, (Count of Châteauneuf) neuf, in Thimerais) into the Communion of the Church; being oblig'd so to do, out of Respect to the King, by the Canon, which enjoyns, That if the King admit any Excommunicated Person to eat at his Table, the Bishops are to restore him to Ecclesiastical Communion.

A New Ecclesiastical History

In the LXIII^d Letter, he proves, That none but such as are in Holy Orders, can Consecrate, and Administer the Sacraments.

The LXVth, to Pope Urban, acquaints him, That the Bishop of Paris is on his Journey toward Rome; recommends him to the Pope, and prays, he will give him so good Instructions, and wholesome Advice, that he may return wiser, and of a more manageable Temper, than he had formerly been: He petitions, also, in the same Bishop's behalf, for an Inhibition, to prevent the Abbot, and Monks, of Legny, from withdrawing themselves from under his Jurisdiction; and lastly, intreats the Pope to determine what should be done, in the Affair of the New-elected Arch-Bishop of Sens, whom the Arch-Bishop of Lions would not Consecrate, 'till he would submit to his Primacy.

Sanctien had not been long in possession of the Bishoprick of Orleans, before he was deposed by the Arch-Bishop of Lions, at the Request, and Instigation of the Arch-Bishop of Tours, to make room for John, one of his Creatures; but a very infamous Person, who had been Arch-Deacon of that Church, under Sanctien's Predecessor: To bring this Matter about, the Arch-Bishop of Tours had Crown'd King Philip, at Christmas, and obtain'd his Grant, that John should be Consecrated Bishop of Orleans: But as soon as Ivo understood it, he wrote to Hugh, Arch-Bishop of Lions, conjuring him to put a stop to it, and accusing John of many notorious Crimes, particularly of having procured the Bishoprick by Simony. These are the Contents of the LXVIth Letter.

In the LXVIIth, Ivo writes to Pope Urban likewise, to interpose his Authority, that so scandalous a Wretch may not be suffer'd to get into the Episcopal Order: And in this Letter, he offers his Apology to the Pope, who was incens'd against him, on Account of what he had written to the Arch-Bishop of Lions, touching the Election, and Consecration of Daimbert, to the Arch-Bishoprick of Sens: Ivo protests, he had no other Design in it, but to induce the Arch-Bishop of Lions to cut off all occasion of those Complaints that were daily made against him, by the Bishops of France; and to take Care, that the Churches of that Kingdom be not oppress'd, and overburden'd by the Regulations, and Decrees, of the Holy See; that if any thing he had said, relating to the Primacy claim'd by the Arch-Bishop of Lions, had been displeasing to him, he thought he might take leave to speak his Opinion freely upon that Subject, to one, especially, for whom no Man, on this side the Alps, had so entire a Respect, and by devoting himself to whose Interests he had been a great Sufferer: However, if his Holiness were offended at any Expression that had dropt from him, he would retract it, and would resign his Bishoprick, rather than bear his Anger, whether he had deserv'd it or not: And if by this Means he might make Satisfaction, for any thing his Holiness might have taken amiss, he would willingly stand to his Offer, and prays him to accept it: Adding, moreover, that if the Pope would not permit him to quit his Diocese, he fear'd he must shortly be constrain'd to do it, by the King's violent Hatred of him, and the miserable Contempt of God's Word, among the People under his Care. This Letter is dated nine Years after he came to his Bishoprick, which shews it was written in the first Year of this Twelfth Century.

Hugh, Arch-Bishop of Lions, making no Account of these Remonstrances of Ivo, Cites him to bring Proof of what he had to alledge against the Person, and Election of John: But, Ivo, instead of obeying this Summons, answers him, by the LXVIIIth Letter, That the Crimes being so notorious, 'twas needless to search after farther Evidence; and if there were occasion for it, he could produce sufficient Witness, that John had already distributed Moneys among the Queen's Servants, and had promis'd them a farther Sum, to procure for himself the Bishoprick of Orleans: That, besides, his being Elected by the King only, made his Title void by the Canons; and, that however the Examination of this whole Affair, ought to be made in the Province, to which his Accusers were subject, and where the Evidence lay that was to be brought against him, and not in any other.

The LXIXth Letter, is, to the Provost of the Canons Regulars of Estrepepe, in the Diocese of Limoges, who complain'd, That the Bishop had issued out a Prohibition against their taking upon them the Cure of Souls, and the Administration of the Sacrament of Penance. Our Prelate tells him he is of Opinion, That the Bishop had done better, if he had endeavour'd to bring all the Clergy to a regular Way of Living, rather than to have refus'd the Pastoral Office to those who were already oblig'd to it: However, they might make a good Use of this Exemption, in having the better leisure to look after the State of their own Souls. The Regular Clergy, he thinks, ought not to be universally forbid undertaking the Cure of Souls; nor ought it to be permitted to all of them, since it would be an Injury to the Order it self, and tend to the Dissolution of it, tho' the Correction, and Instruction of others, may more safely be trusted in the Hands of such as have been long train'd, and carefully exercis'd, in examining, and well-ordering their own Lives and Manners; therefore that Charge is not to be impos'd upon, and enjoyn'd to all the Regular Clergy: For, by that means, their Discipline will soon be destroy'd; and instead of learned and able Champions in the Cause of Religion, the Monasteries will afford us but weak Defenders, and Betrayers of it: To prevent which fatal Mischief, the most prudent, and best approv'd among them, should be pick'd out for this weighty Employment, and be presented to the Bishop, as fit to be entrusted by him, with the Care of other Mens Souls.

of the Twelfth Century of Christianity.

The LXXth Letter, is an Admonition to the Bishop of Meaux, to Reform the Monastery of Marmoutier; which was scandalous for very great Irregularities.

In the LXXIst, he lays before William Rufus, King of England, the Reason why he had absolv'd Nivard, of Septeuil, from the Oath he had taken to that King, viz. Because it was contrary to the Obligations of his former Oaths, to his own natural and lawful Princes.

The LXXIId to Girard, Abbot of St. Vandrille, contains this Decision; That the chief Stone, or Altar-piece of an Altar that has been demolish'd, or pull'd down, tho' it had been formerly Consecrated, is to be Consecrated again, when laid upon another Altar: And whereas it is objected, That the Portable Altars do not lose their Consecration, by being carried from one place to another, he answers, That there is a Difference between the moving these Altars from place to place, and taking the Stones from an old Altar, because the Stones of these Portable Altars are fastned upon a Plank of Wood, or some other Pedestal; and so to whatever place you remove them, they remain still as they were when first Consecrated.

The LXXIIIrd Letter is sent to Bernard, Abbot of Marmoutier, whom some of the Monks refus'd to submit to, as their lawful Abbot; because, as they pretended, he had been Consecrated by an Excommunicated Bishop. Ivo, in answer to this, maintains, That the Promotion of an Abbot depends, rather upon the Election of the Monks, than the Bishop's Benediction; which, in the present Case, is not given by Imposition of Hands, nor is it properly a Consecration, but only a Formula of Prayer.

The LXXIVth Letter is to Hildebert, Bishop of Mans; who is in a great Streight, Whether, or no, he shall put himself upon the Trial of Ordeal, or walking Blindfolded, and Barefoot, over red-hot Plowshares, to justify his Innocence to the King of England, who accused him of having treacherously surrendered the Town of Mans. Ivo tells him, That the Ecclesiastical Laws having utterly condemn'd that Practice, he should endure any thing, rather than undergo it.

The LXXVth is to John, who was Consecrated Bishop of Orleans, notwithstanding all the Efforts of Ivo to prevent it. The Countess of Puiset, and her Adherents, continuing to give Disturbance to the Church of Chartres, Ivo was oblig'd to ask Leave of the Pope, to Excommunicate them; which was granted him: John, out of spite to Ivo, pretended, 'twas his own Right to pronounce the Excommunication against them, being of his Diocess, and offer'd to try the Matter with Ivo, at Orleans. Ivo insists upon the Pope's having Commissioned him to do it; and, that the Case ought to be decided at Chartres, not at Orleans; since it was the Church of Chartres that had received the Affront, and that all Differences ought to be tried upon the place where they began.

The LXXVIth Letter is written to Daimbert, whom the Pope himself had Ordain'd Archbishop of Sens, (tho' Hugh, Arch-Bishop of Lions, had refus'd to do it) and who had thereupon submitted to the Primacy of Lions. Ivo lets him hereby know, That he intends to come and assist at the Provincial Council he had invited him to; prays him, to defer the Ordination of the Bishop of Nevers, (because of a Scruple about the Election) and to excommunicate the Lady of Puiset, her Son Hugh, and all that assisted, or belong'd to them.

The LXXVIIth is written to Hugh, Dean of Beauvais, and to the Chapter of that Church, upon occasion of a Trial they had had about a Mill belonging to them, but rendred usefess, by some Bridges, and other Buildings, that cut off its Supply of Water: Ivo advises them to complain to the Metropolitan, or the Pope's Legate, in case the Bishop of Beauvais will not remedy that Inconvenience.

The LXXVIIIth is a Letter of Advice to the Monks of the Monastery of Dol, in the Diocess of Bourges, to put an end to their Quarrels, and Divisions, about the Election of Bernier, (formerly a Monk of Bonneval) for their Abbot. Ivo assures them, he had had a very good Account of his Life and Conversation; that whereas some had thought ill of him, for quitting his Monastery without leave from his Brethren, he had been forc'd to do it by the Scandalous Irregularities that were therein, which had likewise occasion'd their Abbot himself and several others of the Monks who abhorrd the Villainies of the rest to take the same course.

The LXXIXth Letter is written in the Name of Ivo Bishop of Chartres, William Bishop of Paris, John Bishop of Orleans, Walter Bishop of Meaux, and Humbaud Bishop of Auxerre, Assembled in Synod at Stampes, to Philip Bishop of Troyes, who was Summon'd to this Council, but had not made his Appearance: They tell him, they might have pass'd Sentence against him, but would allow him time, till the Sunday before Christmas, and then he must not fail to defend himself, if he could, for this Contempt of their Authority. This Letter appears to have been written in the Year, 1100.

The LXXXth to William Abbot of Fécamp, confirms the decision of the LXXIId Letter, about the re-Consecration of Altars that have been remov'd out of their places.

The LXXXIst is a Congratulatory Letter to Pope Paschal II. upon his Elevation to the Pontifical Chair.

In the LXXXIId he Counsels Geoffry, Abbot of Vendôme, to forbear his severities against a certain Monk of his Convent, and either to confine him to a Cell by himself, or else suffer him to retire to some other Monastery.

The LXXXIIIrd Letter is Address'd to the Bishops of the Province of Rheims, advising them, in regard to their own honour, and that of the Bishop of Soissons, not to suffer the insults of their Metropolitan; for that if the Arch-Bishops shall thus take upon them to do what they please in the Churches of their Provinces, and, without the Ordinaries Consent, to Judge and Suspend any of the Clergy, as they shall think fit; they will quite overthrow the Credit of the Episcopal Dignity and the Orders in the Church, Establish'd by the Canons: That therefore, they ought to oppose any such Innovations, and if the Clergy of Soissons are ready to justify themselves by their Bishop, the Metropolitan has no power to Condemn them for Hereſie or Sacrilege.

The LXXXIVth is to Manasse Arch-Bishop of Rheims, upon the same subject. He lets him know, that he thought his Letter a little too severe, and exhorts him to use gentler methods to bring the Church of Soissons to their duty, and to accept of the submission and satisfaction they rendered him.

The LXXXVth Letter to John, Priest, Cardinal-Legate for Pope Paschal in France, highly commends him for refusing to Communicate with the King, though some Bishops of the Belgick-Province had dar'd to put the Crown upon that Prince's Head, at Whitsuntide, contrary to the Pope's express prohibition to them all.

Ivo approves likewise his intentions of Assembling a Council in the Province of Aquitain, but wishes, he would defer it till the beginning of Autumn.

In the LXXXVth he demands satisfaction of Stephen Earl of Chartres, for having abus'd some of his Clergy.

By the LXXXVIIth he advertises John and Bener, Legates of the Holy See, that Guarland, Elected Bishop of Beauvais, is an ignorant and debauch'd sort, altogether unworthy of that preferment; and observes to them farther, that the Church of Beauvais has a long time had the misfortune to be govern'd by very ill Bishops.

By the LXXXVIIIth he acquaints Pope Paschal, that Hilgode, heretofore Bishop of Soissons, was not Depos'd for any Misdemeanours, as his Holiness had been inform'd, but that he voluntarily retir'd into a Monastery, to avoid the inconveniencies all Prelates are expos'd to, choosing rather to live in meanness and obscurity, to secure the state of his own Soul, than to hazard the Salvation of it, in the heights of Honour and Preferments: And whereas, some were now against his being made an Abbot, 'twas not out of any dislike of him, but because they thought it not seemly that a Bishop should come to receive Benediction from an Abbot, which Ivo thinks needs not be made a scruple of, but that the Ceremony may be well enough quite omitted, or may be us'd to one of his Character, without any prejudice, since it is not a Sacrament reiterated.

The LXXXIXth Letter is to the same Pope, and admonishes him not to give credit too easily to any complaints that shall be brought to him, against the Bishops, or any private Persons of France, not to proceed to censures against them, but upon good evidence given in by credible Persons, and such as live near them: He acquaints him moreover, that the Bishop Elect of Beauvais is very undeserving of his Preferment, and that he had been already driven out of the Church, for his scandalous Behaviour, by Hugh Arch-Bishop of Lions.

In the XCth to Daimbert, Arch-Bishop of Sens, he examines this case; if a Man who had kill'd another, excepted out of the Articles of Peace agreed and sworn to, were to be deem'd a violater of God's Laws and subject to the Punishments due to such a one! and concludes, That though he be guilty of Manslaughter, yet, he has not thereby Offended God.

By the XCIth he congratulates Adela Countess of Chartres, upon the recovery of her Health, and exhorts her to protect the Churches.

The XCIIth Letter is written to Pope Paschal, at the request and in behalf of Stephen, Bishop Elect of Beauvais, praying his Holiness to confirm his Election, though he have not yet taken Orders, assuring him there is no other Objection can lie against him; that the Accusations that had been brought against him were found to be false and groundless; that Lisard Arch-Deacon of Beauvais, the chief promoter of them has acknowledg'd as much, by being fully reconciled to Stephen, and vindicating him on all occasions, and that if any be yet dissatisfied, he is ready to give them all full and Canonical satisfaction.

Notwithstanding this Letter, Pope Paschal would not allow of Stephen's Election, but severely reprimanded Ivo for offering one to him so unworthy of any favour or preferment as every body else represented him to be; at which Ivo was so far from being displeas'd, that he lets the Pope know, by the XCVth Letter, how glad he is that Stephen had miss'd of his aim; and assures his Holiness, he had extorted the former Letter from him, by his importunities, and that he did not think when he wrote it, 'twould prove a help to his desired advancement, or be taken for a serious recommendation of him, by his Holiness, or any intelligent person that should observe the Stile of it. He likewise minds the Pope, that his Holiness had proceeded too far in approving of Drogo's pretensions to the Treasurership of Châlons, because the Merits of them having been examin'd in the Council of Poitiers, it appear'd that the late Bishop of Châlons had not power to bestow the place upon him, unless, as was required by the Ecclesiastical Laws, he were first Canon, (or Prebend) of that Church; which Drogo could never pretend to, because he was Canon and Arch-Deacon of another: and that therefore they had decreed his Institution to the Treasurership of Châlons null and void, following therein the Opinion of his Holiness himself, and of his Predecessors, who have determin'd that no Man shall have preferment in two Churches at the same time: And therefore Ivo intreats the Pope to consider well of this matter, and the ill consequences that may ensue, if he do not revoke what he has order'd in it, contrary to the Opinion and resolution of the Council.

The XCIIIth Letter, after having Complimented Daimbert, (or rather, Dagobert) Patriarch of Jerusalem, recommends to him some of Ivo's Diocess, who were travelling to that City.

By the XCIVth Ivo Requests Pope Paschal to grant his Bull to the Clergy of Chartres, empowering them to Excommunicate all such as should at any time hereafter pretend to renew the Claim which the present Earl had quitted, in his own and his Successor's Name, to the Goods and Houses belonging belonging to the Bishop and to that Church; and to proceed to the like severity against any Bishop of Chartres, who shall connive at, or consent to any Attempts of that nature.

In the XCVIth Letter, he asserts that Christian-Burial is not to be denied to any one who Dies in the Communion of the Church.

In the XCVIth, he desires Lambert Bishop of Arras, and John Bishop of Tereñane, to write to the Arch-Bishop of Rheims, to take care that a new Bishop be Chosen at Beauvais, in the room of Stephen, whose Election Pope Paschal would not allow of.

The XCVIIIth is an Exhortation to the People of Beauvais, to choose for their Bishop one who is Eminent for Piety and Learning.

The XCIXth is the resolution of a Question propos'd to him by Gualon, Abbot of St. Quintin, in Beauvais, viz. if Children under Six years of Age, can be Contracted or Married with one another, and in case there be only a Contract between them, and one of the parties die, whether the surviving party may Marry the Brother or Sister of the other? To which Ivo answers, that none can actually Marry till the Age of Fourteen, but that Children may promise Marriage to each other as soon as they are at years of Discretion, which he determines they are at Seven years of Age, and that a Contract agreed on at that Age shall hinder either Party, if one of them Die before they are completely Married, from Marrying with the Brother or Sister of the Deceased.

In the Cth Letter, he demands of John Bishop of Orleans, the restitution of an Altar; (or Church) which had been adjudg'd by the Council of Poitiers, to belong to the Diocese of Chartres.

In the CIIth Letter, to Adela Countess of Chartres, he Complains of her having assum'd Authority to Cite before her Judges Ralph, a Chief Clergy Man of his Diocese, to answer for his having seiz'd the Goods of a Counterfeit Nun: Ivo puts her in mind, that it has ever been the undisputed Right of his and of all the other Churches of France, that none but the Ecclesiastical Judges shall take Cognizance of, and inflict Punishments on disorderly Clergy-Men and Monks, unless their Crimes are such as deserve Death, in which case only, they are to be deliver'd over to the Justice of the Civil Magistrate.

In the CIIIth, he presses Manasses Arch-Bishop of Rheims, to proceed to the Consecration of the new Elected Bishop of Beauvais, without waiting any longer for leave from the King: The Election of Bishops (he tells him) is the Churches Prerogative, and has been yielded to them by the Capitulars or Grants of Charlemain and Louis le Debonnaire.

By the CIIIth, he acquaints Pope Paschal, that the Bishop of Sens, who had been forc'd out of his Diocese for adhering to his Holiness's Interests, could not regain possession of it, though he had produc'd his Holiness's Letters in that behalf to the King, and to his own Metropolitan; but that moreover, the Dean of Paris had also seiz'd to his own use the Prebend this Bishop had in that Church.

In the CIVth, he advertises the same Pope, that the soundest and most judicious of the Clergy of Beauvais, having Elected for their Bishop one Gualon, a person of excellent Learning and Morals, some who were still zealous for Stephen, had slyly insinuated to the King, that the other being a Disciple of Ivo and nominated by the Pope, his Majesty had reason to fear he would prove no very good Subject of his: upon which suggestion, the King absolutely refus'd to Consent to the Election of Gualon, and to give him Investiture. Ivo tells the Pope, he had e'er this been Petition'd on that occasion, but the Metropolitan kept the Clergy from it, under pretence of speedily compromising the matter, perhaps to please the King by delaying it as long as he can in hopes of terminating it to his satisfaction; and therefore conjures his Holiness to interpose his Authority, for the Confirmation of what he has begun, and to stop his Enemies mouths. He acquaints him, that the King has declar'd he will go shortly to Rome, but he scarce believes it; though whether he go or send thither, 'twould be requisite his Holiness should be cautious of Absolving him, or do it only conditionally, for fear of a return to his beloved Sin, and should signify as much to all the Churches of France.

In the CVth Letter, he farther informs the Pope, that the King had taken a Solemn Oath, that Gualon should never be Bishop of Beauvais, in his Reign; and humbly remonstrates, that if his Holiness take any notice of this Oath, and do not resolutely shew his power to the contrary, there shall never any more regard be had for Elections in France. Ivo concludes this Letter with Praying the Pope's direction what course he shall take, if the King after obtaining his Holiness's Absolution, should re-assume his former ill practices, as he much fear'd he would.

The CVIth and CVIth Letters are to Henry the I. King of England, and his Queen Matilda, exhorting them above all things, to promote Religion, and take Care of the Churches in their Dominions, recommending also to their bounty the necessitous state of the Church of Chartres, of which they would be more fully inform'd by two of the Canons of it, whom he had sent on purpose to their Majesties.

In the CVIIIth he gives Pope Paschal an Account of the Quarrels between Ralph Arch-Bishop of Tours, and the Abbot of Marmoutier, whom the former had accus'd of divers misdemeanours: Ivo thinks the Arch-Bishop ought not to be heard against him; 1. because he was not himself Legally Ordain'd; 2. because the Abbot was never guilty of what is laid to his Charge; or, 3. if he were, the Arch-Bishop should then have Objected them against him, while he was concern'd in Church-Affairs, and not now he is retir'd into a Cloyster. 4. The ground of the Arch-Bishop's malice against him; is, that he cannot have leave to read Mass publickly, in the Church of Marmoutier, to insult over the Monks, and enbezzle the Goods of the Monastery; and therefore, to show his spite against it, he had lately in Synod, Prohibited any of his Diocese from entering into that Abbey: 5. All the Witnesses he had to produce against the Abbot, were either his own Kindred, or Men of a Scandalous Reputation, or such as he had brib'd and suborn'd; all which, he prays his Holiness to take into his Prudent Consideration, and do what he thinks requisite thereupon.

In the CIXth Letter, to the same Pope, he intreats him to Constitute for his Legate in France, some Bishop whose Diocese lies on this side of the Alps; for that the Cardinals who were wont to be sent from the other side could not stay there long enough to put the Affairs of the Church in order, which ministred occasion to the Enemies of the Holy See, to say that they were not sent to regulate abuses, but to scrape up Money for their own pockets, or the use of the Court of Rome: to prevent such clamours, Ivo proposes Hugh, Arch-Bishop of Lions, as the fittest person he can think of for this employment, in which he had heretofore acquitted himself with great applause, and done excellent service to the Church of Rome, and to those of France.

In the CXth, he acquaints the Pope, that having almost resolv'd to resign his Bishoprick, by reason of the excessive wickedness of his people, and his despairing of doing any good among them, he was got as far as the Alps, on his way towards Rome, to consult his Holiness on this occasion, when he was inform'd of a Treacherous design his Enemies had against him, which oblig'd him to return home and send Gualon, who could better pass unsuspected, and by whom he desires to know his Holiness's Opinion and Pleasure.

By the CXIth he requests Daimbert, Arch-Bishop of Sens, to Excommunicate Hugh, Lord of Puifet, as he had already done, for his violent and unjust practices against the Church of Chartres, and to interdict the use of Divine Service in the Village of Merville, which sided with him.

In the CXIIth he tells the Dean and Chapter of Paris, that they have power to Excommunicate any under their Jurisdiction, as has the Church of Chartres, and several others: But he blames them for receiving into their Church Hugh Earl of Puifet, and his followers, whom he had Excommunicated.

By the CXIIIth, he sends word to Daimbert, Arch-Bishop of Sens, that he is glad of the Election of Manasses to the Bishoprick of Meaux, and is ready to assist at his Ordination, if it be at any place whither he may securely come, or obtain a Pass-port for his safety; otherwise, he would consent and approve of it by Letters under his own hand. The CXVth Letter is to the same purpose.

In the CXIVth, he assures John Bishop of Orleans, that his Conscience cannot in the least accuse him of having done any thing that should Offend King Lewis; (the Son of Philip, Surnamed le Gros.) and as to Hugh Earl of Puifet, and his Companion, he cannot receive them into the Church, till they have given good satisfaction for their Offences.

In the CXVth, he intreats Adela, Countess of Chartres, not to give credit to, nor encourage any malicious and false Stories that shall be brought to her against him.

By the CXVIIth Letter, he acquaints Pope Paschal, that he had publish'd the Injunctions sent him by his Holiness, for the reforming some abuses in the Church, which were so well receiv'd by his Brethren, the Clergy of his Diocese, that few show'd any dislike of them; but that some additions were thought necessary for the Honour and Liberty of the Churches, which he prays the Pope to confirm, that Posterity may be oblig'd to observe them.

The CXVIIIth Letter to Henry King of England, requests him again, to bestow somewhat on the Church of Chartres.

In the CXIXth, he tells Daimbert, that though the opposition made against the validity of Manasses's Election was without any just ground, yet, to leave no room for suspicion or calumny, he thinks it convenient that some of the Clergy of Meaux vouch for him upon their Oaths, and that then he may proceed to Consecrate him publicly.

The CXXth Letter is to Robert Earl of Ponthieu and Bellême, whose Territories were put under an interdict, by the Bishop of Seés. This Earl had sent to Ivo for some of the Consecrated Chrism, which he tells him, he must be forc'd to refuse him, because the Canons absolutely forbid a Bishop's Communicating with any person Excommunicated by another Bishop: He assures him nevertheless, that he is heartily sorry for his sufferings, and should be glad if he might have an opportunity of doing him any service.

In the CXXIst, he expostulates with Adela Countess of Chartres, concerning the outrages committed by her Servants upon his Ecclesiasticks, and assures her, he is ready to assist them in obliging her to do them Justice, if she shall not think fit to endeavour it upon this third admonition from him.

The CXXIId to Volgrin, Arch-Deacon of Paris, asserts, that a Jewish Woman marrying with a Christian Husband, and afterwards returning to Judaism, is not freed from her Conjugal Vow, nor, though she leave him, can the Man marry with any other Woman during her life.

In the CXXIIIrd to Gautier, Library-Keeper of the Church of Beauvais, he gives his Opinion of a difficult case he had consulted him upon, viz. how he should proceed against a Priest, who had in a prophane manner, made use of other Ceremonies and words than are prescribed in the Form of marriage. Ivo tells him, he had never yet heard of so foul a Sacrilege, nor was there any provision against it in the Canons; and therefore, this being a Crime wholly new and unparallel'd, some more than ordinary punishment ought to be inflicted on the Author of it: However, not to deal too severely without Warrant and Authority from Scripture or the Ecclesiastical Laws, he thinks it sufficient that such Punishment be laid on him as the Canons order to be inflicted upon those that violate the Sacraments and holy things.

In the CXXIVth, Ivo acquaints Daimbert, Arch-Bishop of Sens, that Hugh Earl of Puifet having restored to the Church of Chartres their Goods he had detained, and given security for what he had taken from himself and his Domesticks, he desires he may be Absolv'd from the Excommunication he lay under: But, as to King Lewis (le Gros), he tells him, that Prince will not be yet reconcil'd to him, because he refuses to bestow Preferment on one who had begun a cruel Schism in the Church of Chartres.

In the CXXXVth to the same Arch-Bishop, he gives his Opinion, that those whose Wives had Committed Adultery while they were absent in the Holy-Land, ought either to be reconciled to their Wives, or, remain unmarried to any others during their Lives.

In the CXXXVIth, he returns his thanks to the same Arch-Bishop, for advising him to be reconcil'd with the Countess of Chartres, to which he tells him, he is very well inclin'd, but that he cannot release his Clergy from an Oath they had oblig'd themselves by, not to admit into their Church any but the Sons of Free-men.

By the CXXXVIIth to King Lewis, he excuses himself for not waiting on his Majesty, because he was not in a condition to take a Journey, when His Majesty's Orders came to him: And besides, having agreed with the Countess of Chartres, to refer the difference between them to the Bishop of Albane, he thought it would look unfair or suspicious in him to go to Court before the Arrival of that Bishop.

In the CXXXVIIIth, he sends word to Odon, a Regular Canon of St. Quintin in Beauvais, that he does not care to enter into Conference, or to have any thing to do with the person he was sending to him, who had been his bitter Enemy.

In the CXXXIXth, he writes to Geoffry, Earl of Vendôme, not to marry with the Vicountess of Blois, whose first Husband was his Kinsman, and threatens him with Excommunication if he venture to do it.

In the CXXXth, he sends the same message to the Vicountess of Blois, and advises her to defer the Marriage, at least, till the scruple about their Consanguinity be cleared and tried before him.

In the CXXXIth, he advises Volgrin, Arch-Deacon of Paris, not to suffer a Priest who had resign'd his Benefice to him, to re-enter it again by force; and if he attempt it to Excommunicate him and all that shall dare to assist him.

In the CXXXIId, he prays Daimbert, Arch-Bishop of Sens, to punish a Priest of Stampe, in his Diocese, who had abus'd a Clergy-man of the Church of Chartres; and asks his Advice about a Dispute among the Clergy of that Church about Moneys that had been expended out of the common Stock, to defray the charge of a deputation to the King, to demand Justice against the bold enterprizes of the Countess of Chartres.

The CXXXIIId Letter is to Richard, Bishop of Albane, the Pope's Legate, who had accus'd him of conniving at Simony in his Diocese: Ivo clears himself from this Aspersion, and tells him, if the Dean and Chanter, and the other Church Officers demand a Fee of every one that is admitted to a Canonry, 'tis what he cannot prevent, and has endeavour'd to remedy, but a Custom they plead Authority for, from the Example of the Church of Rome, where the Chamberlains and the other Officers of the Sacred Palace, exact of the Bishops and Abbots that come for Consecration excessive Sums, under the Specious names of Oblations, or Benedictions; and that though he has endeavour'd, with all his might, to Banish this wicked custom out of his Church, yet he is forc'd to yield to the practice of it by the iniquity of the Times.

In the CXXXIVth Letter, to Daimbert, Arch-Bishop of Sens, he asserts, and proves from good Authorities, that a Daughter promised in Marriage by her Father, to another Man's Son, is not bound thereby when she comes to Years of Discretion; though her Father be then Living. Ivo acquaints the Arch-Bishop likewise, that William, Son of the Countess of Chartres, notwithstanding, the Accommodation between them, and without any provocation given, had himself Sworn, and compell'd others to take an Oath at the Altar, to destroy him and his whole Clergy, if they will not yield to his unreasonable pretensions; that, thereupon, he had refus'd to Celebrate Divine Service, when they are in the Church, and to give them the Episcopal Benediction, daily us'd; but that he defer'd pronouncing them Excommunicate, till he had the advice and assistance of the Arch-Bishop, and the rest of his Brethren.

The CXXXVth, is sent to Pope Paschal, by a Knight, who came from the Siege of Jerusalem: This Knight had caus'd a Priest of Bonneval to be Gilt, for detecting his Servants in a Robbery; for this unparalleld presumption, Ivo had cashier'd him and enjoin'd him a severe penance for Fourteen Years; to which he readily submitted; but, his Enemies taking advantage of his misfortunes, and Beginning to be very troublesome to him, the Knight begs leave of Ivo to permit him to use his Arms again, in his own defence; Ivo, upon great intercession made for him, recommends him to the Popes mercy for absolution.

The CXXXVIth Letter is to Adela, Countess of Chartres, telling her that, if his inclinations were for War and broils, he had the offer of such potent succours, as might Enable him to create her great disturbance; but, Peace he had always desir'd, and thought it had been firmly sealed between them, till he had the News of her Son William's rash Oath, to ruin him and his Church; that, out of respect to her, he had, hitherto, forbore to Excommunicate him, and hoped she would contrive some means to prevent all such irregularities for the future.

The CXXXVIIth is to the Chapter of Beauvais, concerning one of their Canons, who was prosecuted by an Action of Law in the King's Court of Justice: Ivo minds them, that by the orders of the Church, no Clergyman is to be Cited before any but the Ecclesiastical Judges, and that if they have Courage enough, they ought to endure any thing rather than the loss of their Rights and Privileges; but if they cannot resolve to suffer in defence of them, he can only advise them to submit to what they cannot remedy, and assist them by his Prayers, for their prudent Behaviour and good Success.

The CXXXVIIIth Letter, to Volgrin and Steven, Arch-Deacons of Paris, is occasion'd by the great contests among the Clergy of that City, about the Election of a Bishop: Ivo declares, he will never consent to any Election that is not made by the unanimous consent of the Clergy, and People, and Confirmed by the Metropolitan and his Suffragans: he admonishes them not to be sway'd by hatred or Ambition, and wonders at their consenting to a hearing of this cause before the King.

In The CXXXIXth, he puts Daimbert, Arch-Bishop of Sens, in mind, that the contest, about the Election of a Bishop of Paris, ought to be determined by him in Consistory, and that he should Convene the Bishops his Suffragans, for that purpose, when and where he pleas'd.

In The CXLth, he Asserts, that no Man ought to Scruple assisting at Divine Service, or receiving the Sacrament from the hands of a Priest suspected of Scandal, or notorious for an ill Life.

In The CXLIth, he assures Richard, Bishop of Albane and Legat of the Holy See, that he should as heartily rejoyce at King Philip's abolition, as he had griev'd at his being Excommunicate, if it might be for the Honour of God and of the Holy See, to grant it; that, though he somewhat doubts of the Sincerity of the King's Conversion, yet he will not oppose his being Absolv'd; but advises that the Ceremony be perform'd as publickly, and Solemnly as is possible, and rather at any other place than at Sens: He tells him, moreover, he would willingly appear at the Council he Summons him to, if he will obtain for him the King's Passport, without which he dares not venture abroad, his Majesty having been incens'd against him for these Ten Years past. This Letter was written in the Year 1104.

The CXLIId is a Letter of Thanks to Mathilda, Queen of England, for the Bells she had given to the Church of Chartres, and her promise of repairing and New-Adorning that Church.

The CXLIId carries Ivo's acknowledgments, to Robert Earl of Meulan, for the kind reception he gave to Richard Abbot of Preaux, and Prays him to hasten the Restitution of the goods of his Monastery.

The CXLIVth informs Pope Paschal of what was done in the Assembly of Bishops, call'd together at Baugency, by his Legat, Girard, Bishop of Albane, to be witnesses of the Separation of King Philip and Berrade. He tells him, they were both ready to Swear, upon the Holy Evangelists, that they would Forbear all Carnal knowledge of each other; the Legate would have had the Bishops have given judgment upon them, but they declin'd it, and so the whole came to Nothing: Ivo therefore, prays the Pope to put an End to this matter and dispense with the King as far as he can. He acquaints the Pope, also, that Gualon not finding it possible to get possession of the Bishoprick of Beauvais, because of King Loth's Oath against admitting him, he hopes he may be Transfer'd to the See of Paris, to which he has been also Elected by the Clergy and People of that City.

In The CXLVth, he intreats Manasses Arch-Bishop of Rheims, to determine, as speedily as may be, whether Gualon shall continue Bishop of Beauvais, or not.

In The CXLVth, he acquaints Daimbert, Arch-Bishop of Sens, that the Clergy and People of Paris have unanimously Elected Gualon, for their Bishop, and that since no Bishop can be Translated to another See without Leave from his Metropolitan, and the Popes Dispensation, he prays him to use his interest at Rome, to obtain one for Gualon.

In The CXLVIIth, he intercedes with Pope Paschal to dispense with the Oath taken by the Chapter of Chartres, not to admit into their Fraternity, the Sons of such as had been Servants to any one, so that they may hereafter be allow'd to admit the Sons of any of the Earl of Chartres Domesticks, or the Officers of the King's Revenues; and assures his Holiness that without abating of the Rigour of that Oath, the Church of Chartres could never enjoy any Peace.

In The CXLVIIIth, to Hildebert, Bishop of Mans, he determines, that a certain Man who (as he writes) had promised Marriage to his Concubine in her Sickness, was bound by the Law of God, to acknowledge her, afterwards for his Wife.

In The CXLIXth, he exhorts William Arch-Bishop of Rouen, to Expel out of the Diocess of Lisieux the Sons of Count Ranulf Flambard, who had seiz'd upon it, and to substitute in their place the Arch-Deacon of Eureux.

In the CLth, he excuses himself to Pope Paschal, for not coming to the Council held by him in the Month of March, of which he had not Notice time enough before hand.

In The CLth, he complains to Walter Bishop of Beauvais, of his having Consecrated Odo, Abbot of St. Quintin, in that City, without his consent, and contrary to the Opinion and desires of the Fraternity of that House.

In The CLId, he Stirs up Ledger, Arch-Bishop of Bourges, to Vindicate a certain Earl of his Country, who had formerly shewn himself his true Friend, from the abuses he suffers under.

In the CLIIId, he Earnestly exhorts William, Arch-Bishop of Rouen, and Gilbert Bishop of Eureux, to drive out of the Bishoprick of Lisieux, Ranulf, Bishop of Durham, in England, and his two Sons, who had possess'd themselves of that Diocess.

In The CLIVth, he advises Robert Earl of Meulan, to petition the King of England not to countenance the usurpations of Ranulf.

In the CLVth, to Odo, Arch-Deacon of Orleans, Ivo Treats of this Question; if a Woman who has committed Fornication, and is great with Child may Marry? and concludes that, in strictness, no great Bellied Woman, ought to have Carnal knowledge of any Man; but considering the infirmity of the Flesh, St. Paul advises Men to use their own Wives, for avoiding Fornication, although they are with Child; and therefore, by consequence, a Man may Marry a Woman in that condition.

In the CLVIth, to Ulric, he solves another difficulty, viz, if, in Confession to a Priest, a man have own'd himself guilty of a Crime deserving Excommunication, the Priest ought publickly to refuse him the Communion of the Church? to which Ivo answers, That unless the fault be publickly Known, the Priest is not to take Notice of it, before others, but only to abhor it in his own heart, and to give publick Notice to his People, in general Terms, that those who are guilty of such Crimes are already Excommunicate in the sight of God.

In the CLVIIth, he gives Pope Pascal an Account of what had hapned in the Diocess of Lisieux; that, after *Ranulf Flambar*d was driven out, who had kept it several Years by violence, William, Arch-Deacon of Eureux, was Canonically Elected Bishop, who deferring being Consecrated, upon Account of his Metropolitan's (the Arch-Bishop of Rouen's) being under Suspension, *Flambar*d had prevail'd with the Duke of Normandy to put one of his Clergy into that See. Ivo having, thereupon, Counsell'd William to appeal, in person, to the Pope, intreats his Holiness to Confirm his Election, and to Consecrate him at Rome.

In the CLVIIIth, he acquaints Hugh, Arch-Bishop of Lions, that King Philip and his Son are resolv'd to make void the Marriage of Constance, the King's Daughter, and Hugh Earl of Troyes, because of their being too nearly Related, and desires the Arch-Bishop to send speedily to all the Bishops, summon'd to Court on this occasion, the Genealogy of both Families.

In the CLIXth, he writes to Pope Paschal, that, when any complain to him of Judgments given against them in the Court of Rome, he advises them to have recourse again to the Holy See, for relief, not thinking it fit to remove into any other Court a Cause that has been determin'd there: This Method he has perswaded the Monks of St. Maur des Fosses to take, who had been forc'd by the Council of Tours, held, by Pope Urban, to Surrender to the Earl of Angers the Jurisdiction they had held for 300 Years, over the Monastery of St. Maur de Glanfeuil; and prays the Pope to examine, again, the Rights of their pretensions.

The CLXth, to Odo, Abbot of Jumieges, prays him to receive kindly a Monk who had left his Monastery, and desires to be admitted into it again.

The CLXIth, to the Provost of the Church of Rheims, asserts, that, a Man, who promises Marriage to a Woman, and afterward Marries another, ought to be Divorc'd and return to his first Engagement.

In the CLXIIth, he prays John Bishop of Orleans, to degrade, in as publick and severe a manner as may be, a certain Priest, who profanely Treated the Sacraments of the Church, before a Womans Statue.

In the CLXIIIth, he perswades Geofry, Abbot of Vendôme, not to suffer one of his Monks to hold a Benefice he was possess'd of.

In the CLXIVth, Ivo reprimands Geofry, Abbot of Blois, for repenting of his having resign'd his Abbey into the hands of the Pope's Legate, and giving his voice for Maurice to succeed him.

The CLXVth, is a Letter of Thanks and Friend-ship, to Sampson Bishop of Worcester.

The CLXVIth, is to Humbald, Bishop of Auxerre, acquainting him that Hugh le Blanc having made his complaint to Bruno, Bishop of Signi, that Pontius, Nephew to the Bishop of Troyes, had Married his Daughter Mathilda, by Force, who had been promised by her Parents to Galeran, the King's Chamberlain, and that the Legate having given Orders to the Bishop of Paris to cite Pontius and Mathilda before him, to answer for themselves, that Bishop had Summon'd them to appear before a Council held by him, for that purpose, at Paris: There, Mathilda affirm'd that Pontius Married her without her consent, or that of her Parents; Pontius could not answer any thing in his own Defence, but stole out of Court: Then, Mathilda brought Ten witnesses to Swear she had been espoused to another Man, and was Married to Pontius against her will; upon which the Bishops declar'd the Marriage Null, and that she was free to Marry any other Man. Ivo acquaints the Bishop of Auxerre with these particulars, understanding that one of his Diocess had a mind to Marry her, which he assures him he may doe without Scruple. This Letter was written in the Year, 1106.

In the CLXVIIth, he writes to the Bishop of Mans, to hinder the Marriage of one who had already Engag'd himself to another Woman.

In the CLXVIIIth Letter, to Daimbert, Arch-Bishop of Sens, he speaks of the difference that had been between the Viscount of Chartres and Count Rotroc, about a Farm, in the Diocess of Chartres: The former of them had given it to Ivo, Lord of Courbeville, whom the party of Rotroc seiz'd and kept prisoner, though he were one of those appointed to go to the Holy Land: The Viscount of Chartres having complain'd of this matter to the Pope, his Holiness appointed the Arch-Bishop of Sens, the Bishops of Chartres and Orleans, Commissioners to settle it.

Ivo Bishop of Chartres, after he has, by this Letter, instructed Daimbert in the merits of the cause advises him to take care how he proceeds in it, and to consider if it will be most advisable for them to Excommunicate Rotroc, or to cite both parties before them: Daimbert is of opinion that they are oblig'd, by the Popes Letter to them, immediately to Excommunicate Rotroc; but Ivo, thinking this too hard measure, consults Gualon, Bishop of Paris, about it, in the 169th Letter; and in the 170th Letter, tells Daimbert, again, that he cannot joyn in so unjust an action, as cutting off one from the Communion of the Church, before he be found, upon fair Tryal, to deserve it, especially, since Rotroc is willing to stand to the Examination and Sentence of their Court, which his Adversaries decline doing as much as they can. In his Letter, also, he determines that a Woman that Marries her Husband's Murderer ought not to be separated from him, if she can justify her self from having a hand in the Murder, and the Man can offer reasonable proof, that he had never Carnal knowledge of her during her Husband's Life, nor contriv'd his Death, to have the enjoyment of her to himself.

In the CLXXIst Letter, he tells Daimbert, Arch-Bishop of Sens, that he scarce knows how to advise him to deal with some he had Excommunicated for stealing the goods of the Church, and violating the observation of Holy-Days; if he receive them to the Communion again, before they have made restitution, 'twill be directly contrary to the Laws; if he persist in keeping them out, he must, of necessity, incur the King's displeasure: And though, if he have Courage enough, he ought to see that the Rigour of discipline be observ'd; yet, because such severity may occasion dismal inconveniences, he advises him to use moderation; chiefly because the administration of territorial Affairs naturally belongs to Kings, who are not, unadvisedly, to be exasperated, if they sometimes go beyond the bounds of their Authority, but must be left to God's Judgment, when they will not yield to the humble admonitions and Remonstrances of the Clergy. for his part, Ivo protests, that were he oblig'd, in obedience to his Superiors, to readmit an Excommunicate person in to the Church, without penance or satisfaction, he would do it by some such Form as this; "Do not deceive your Self; I admit you into the visible Church, notwithstanding the Crimes you are guilty of; but I cannot open to you the Gates of the Kingdom of Heaven, and therefore I absolve you, no farther than I have power to do it; those of more Courage and Piety, may find out better methods in such cases. This seems to me proper enough; not that I hereby prescribe to others, but to prevent farther mischiefs to the Church, think it best to submit, thus far, to the necessity of the Times.

The CLXXIId Letter contains a judgment given by Ivo, in Favour of the Monks of St. Laurner at Blois, against the Abbot and Monks of Vendime concerning a Chappel, near Baugency, which he adjudges to belong to the Jurisdiction of the former, notwithstanding the Abbot of Vendime's having appeal'd to the Holy See.

In the CLXXIIId, he relates to Pope Paschal, what had pass'd at the Tryal of Rotroc, who, he tells him, has now appeal'd to his Holiness.

In the CLXXIVth, he assures Mathilda, Queen of England, that he will pray for the Soul of her Brother (Edgar, King of Scotland, who died, without issue, in the Year 1107.) for though he doubts not but his Soul is in Abraham's bosom; yet since we cannot be certain of the State of Souls in the other World, it is a piece of commendable Devotion to pray even for those in Heaven, that their happiness may be augmented; and for those in Purgatory, that their sins may be forgiven them.

In the CLXXVth, he excuses himself to Pope Paschal, for not appearing at the Council he cites him to, (held at Troyes, Anno 1107.) by reason of his being very much indispos'd; but tells his Holiness, he has sent his three Arch-Deacons in his stead.

In the CLXXVth, to the same Pope, he prays him not to oblige Volgrin Chancellor of the Church of Chartres to accept of the Bishoprick of Dol, to which he was Elected by the Deputies of that Church in the Council of Troyes; and.

In the CLXXVIIth Letter, he acquaints the Clergy of Dol, that Volgrin will not accept of that Bishoprick.

In the CLXXVIIIth, he Counsels Geofry, Bishop of Beauvais, to punish one of his Clergy, who had admitted to Divine Service and consoorted with an Excommunicated person.

In the CLXXIXth, to Adela, Countess of Chartres, he complains of her denying the Clergy of his Church the privileges of Travelling the Roads and of buying Bread and Wine, and threatens her, in case she do not Revoke the Orders she has publish'd to this Effect, that the whole Clergy of the Province shall daily curse her at the high Altar.

The CLXXXth Letter gives Ledger, Arch-Bishop of Bourges, advice to abate sometimes the Rigour of justice; and not to be so wholly govern'd by some of his Clergy, as not to doe any thing but according to their Pleasures, even in judicial matters; as hapned lately, in the case of Arnoul of Viersen, who was so exasperated by his hard usage, that he was forc'd to appeal to Rome, upon the very first hearing before them.

The CLXXXIst is to Richard, Bishop of Albane, the Popes Legate, upon a dispute between the Monks of Vezelay and those of St. Lucian at Beauvais, about a Church they both of them laid claim to.

The CLXXXIId is to Daimbert, Arch-Bishop of Sens, concerning a difference between Ivo and the Chapter of Chartres, who had oppos'd and violently affronted him, for conferring the Office of Sub-Dean upon Fulk: The Arch-Bishop is agreed upon to be Judge between them, and Ivo prays him to appoint the day and place, where their cause shall be heard, which he wishes may be at Chartres.

In the CLXXXIII, to William, Bishop of Paris, he asserts, that if a Man challenge a Woman for his Wife, upon pretence that her Father promis'd her to him, he must bring witnesses of such promise, and that the Tryal by single combat is not to be allowed in cases of this Nature.

The CLXXXIVth, to Walter, Library-Keeper of Beauvais, maintains, that all Actions about Goods belonging to the Church are to be brought before Ecclesiastical Judges.

In the CLXXXVth, he gives answer to what William, Arch-Bishop of Rouen had written him about one who had gotten himself Ordain'd Sub-Deacon, before he had pass'd the inferior degrees of Holy Orders: In strictness of Law, Ivo acknowledges, that he should not be permitted to exercise the functions of the Order he has obtain'd, nor to Rise to the higher Orders; however, if his Life and Conversation be unexceptionable and the good of the Church require it, he thinks the Arch-Bishop may give him the Clerical Benediction, and let him assist at Ordinations, not to be Re-Ordain'd, but to Confirm him in his Orders.

In the CLXXXVth Letter, he Answers several Questions propos'd to him by Laurence, a Monk of the Monastery of Charity: 1. He asserts that we are oblig'd to avoid only those that are Excommunicated for the most notorious and abominable faults; 2. That of such we are not to receive any thing, but in extream necessity, nor, are we to give them any thing but for their relief, in utmost want and misery; 3. That those of the Clergy who buy of Lay-men, goods that formerly belong'd to the Church, or receive such from them by way of Gift, are much to blame, if they do it with any other design but of restoring them to the Church: 4. That, they who, in private Confession, discover themselves to be guilty of the greatest crimes are not, therefore, to be Excommunicated, nor put to publick penance, as publick offenders; however, they are to be admonish'd to abstain from the Sacrament, and from the Functions of their Orders, if they are Ecclesiasticks: 5. That the Sacraments are not the less profitable for being administred by wicked Priests, nor (6.) by Simoniackal ones, or such as are Married: 7. That the People ought not to abandon their Prelate, nor fail in their obedience to him, though in many respects blameable, till he is publickly Condemn'd or Excommunicated: 8. That Confession of common and small sins may be made to any Christian, but that great faults are to be confess'd only to those who have the power of binding and loosing: 9. That one may entertain an Excommunicated Person, provided he doe not Eat with him, nor salute him.

In the CLXXXVIIth, he admonishes the Countess of Chartres, to leave troubling the Abbot and Monks of Bonneval on Account of the murder of Hugh the Black.

In the CLXXXVIIIth, to Ralph, Arch-Bishop of Rheims, he delivers his opinion, That a Woman who is deliver'd of a Child within two or three Months after her Marriage, is not to be divorced from her Husband.

The CLXXXIXth contains Ivo's answer to the complaints of the Arch-Bishop and Clergy of Rheims, against the Arch-Bishop of Sens, for having Consecrated King Louis le Gros: Ivo remonstrates that the Consecration could not be longer defer'd, that it could not be perform'd at Rheims, because Ralph was not then fully possess'd of that Archbishoprick, and the City of Rheims was under an Interdict; that, besides, he knows no Law that Orders that Office to be perform'd there, but can prove that several of the Kings of France have been Consecrated elsewhere, and by the Bishops of other Cities.

In the CXCIth, Ivo gives Pope Paschal an Account of the Accommodation agreed to between the King and Ralph Arch-Bishop of Rheims, on condition that Ralph take an Oath of homage to the King for his Archbishoprick: This he says they were oblig'd to consent to, not as a thing necessary in it self, but to procure Peace, and prevent farther distraction in the Nation.

In the CXCIth, he intercedes with Hugh Abbot of Cluny in behalf of one of his Monastery, whom he had degraded, upon an accusation brought against him of having procur'd abortion to a Woman great with Child, before he took the vow of a Monk upon him. Ivo thinks his punishment too severe; and that though the fact were clearly prov'd against him, as it is not, he should not suffer for ever, for a fault he may have long since repented of.

In the CXCIId, to the Monks of Colombs, near Nogent le Roi, he dissuades them from hearkning to the advice somebody had been giving them of quitting their Monastery, because their Superiors had taken away some Tithes, belonging to the Bishop's Jurisdiction; he shews them, that they ought rather to remain in subjection to their Superiors, and live upon such Tithes as the Church shall in Charity allow to the Monasteries, as she does to Hospitals, than turn Sarabaites and live upon the goods of the poor, or the gain of usury: nevertheless, he blames the Abbots and Superiors of Monasteries for buying Tithes of Lay-men for their own uses, to the damage of the Church, though this be no reason for the Monks to withdraw themselves from the Monasteries and the Subjection they have sworn to them: he approves well enough of the Lives of such Anchorets as, after having been train'd up in Monasteries, retire wholly into Solitudes; but highly blames those who make it their business to run from Town to Town to be admir'd at themselves, and proudly despise all that are not of their profession, desiring to be thought Masters, before they have been Scholars.

In the CXCIId, he advises Geofrey, Bishop of Beauvais, not to infringe the Privileges granted to the Monastery of St. Quintin, by the Bishops his predecessors, and confirm'd to them by the Authorities of the Holy See and the King's Majesty.

In the CXCIvth, he sends Notice to Hugh Dean of Orleans, and Volgrin, his Arch-Deacon, that he has Excommunicated Chenard, belonging to his Diocese, and therefore, according to the direction of the Canon, they are not to entertain him.

The CXCVth, is a very severe Answer to a displeasing Letter he had received from Geofrey, Abbot of Vendome, with whom, for the future, he renounces all correspondence, till he behave himself better.

In the CXCVIth, to King Louis le Gros, he begs that Prince not to order process against the Abbot of St. Denys for what he is charg'd with by a certain Monk, who having own'd himself a Criminal; his Testimony against the innocence of others is not to be receiv'd.

In the CXCVIIth to William Abbot of Marmoutier, he agrees with him that a Priest, who, to fright his Enemies, set fire to his own house, and thereby unhappily Burnt a Neighbours Child, ought to undergoe the penalties appointed by the Canons.

The CXCVIIIth, the CXCIxth, and the CCIt Letters are about a difference, between Gislebert, Nephew to the Arch-Bishop of Tours, and Geofrey Canon of that Church, concerning the Government of Sycurre, the determination of which matter the Pope had put into the hands of Ivo Bishop of Chartres, and the Bishops of Paris and Soissons: By the two first Letters, he cites Gislebert, to appear before them and by the last, he acquaints the Pope, that, upon his refusing to own their Authority he had sent Geofrey to his Holiness for justice.

In the CCth Letter, he admonishes Daimbert, Arch-Bishop of Sens, to correct two Scandalous practices in his Church; one, of the Chaunter's holding another preferment, contrary to his Oath; the other, in one of the Chapter's keeping in his house two Women of very ill fame.

The CCId Letter is a notable instance of the Liberty us'd by Ivo, in dealing with the greatest Princes King Louis had sent to him for some Outlandish Furs; Ivo tells him, 'tis not decent for a King to ask such vanities of a Bishop, nor is he bound to obey any such Orders from a King; that he could not believe, at first, the Letter came from his Majesty, and sends this Answer, that he may not any more, make such requests to him, or any other Bishop, if he desire they should retain a due esteem for his Majesty.

In the CCIII^d, to Lisard, Bishop of Soissons, he shews him, from good Authority, that he has a Right to demand of the Arch-Deacons of his Diocese, part of the profits due to the Bishop, which they have taken upon them to receive for themselves, both before and since his accession to the Bishoprick.

By the CCIVth, he informs Pope Paschal, that he had Excommunicated Guy of Puisset, for his Sacrilegious and outrageous attempts against the Church of Chartres, and petitions his Holiness to Confirm the Excommunication, and to Order the Arch-Bishop of Sens and the Bishops of Paris and Orleans, to publish it in their Churches; he informs the Pope, likewise, of a difference between the Dean and Sub-Dean of Chartres, and prays him to compose it.

The CCVth Letter is written to a Knight, who suspected his Wife to have been with Child by another man, because he had been absent from her seven days longer than is usual between the times of conception and bringing forth, and because the person whom he suspected of being too familiar with her had been Burnt in passing the Tryal of Ordeal: As to the computation of Time, Ivo tells him, that ought not to sway him, since many Women goe much longer with Child, and, for the Tryal by fire, no heed is to be given to it, so that these two Reasons prove nothing against the honesty of his Wife, whose Oath and the good word of her Neighbours and Acquaintance ought fully to suffice in Vindication of her.

In the CCVIth Letter, to Hildebert, Bishop of Mans, he Examines, by what Method an Ecclesiastick accus'd of Crimes or Mildemeanors is to purge himself; and says that, heretofore, his single Oath was sufficient, but that for better Security, the Oaths of six or seven other Clergymen have been requir'd, together with that of the party's.

The CCVIIth is a Letter of Thanks to the Bishop of Worcester.

In the CCVIIIth Letter, Ivo reproves Geofrey, Abbot of Vendome, that, having quitted that place and retir'd into a private Cell, he entertains there Monks that are disobedient to and abuse their Abbot, and that he hinders those who hold Estates of the Abbot from doing homage to him.

In the CCIXth he represents to Hugh, Earl of Troyes, that the Consultation intended to be held at Sens about the validity of the King's Marriage with the Marquess Boniface's Daughter, the Earls Kinswoman, will neither be honourable, nor of any advantage to her: It will be to no purpose, because the Marriage will certainly be declar'd Null by the Bishops and Lords of the Realm; nor will it be for her honour, because it will occasion the illegitimacy of her Birth to be talk'd of; so that, Ivo advises the Earl to hinder, if he can, all debates about that matter.

In the CCXth he writes Pope Paschal word that Odo, Bishop of Cambray, complains of his Holiness, for turning out of the Arch-Deaconry of his Church, one who was a zealous friend of the Holy See, and putting in one who is an Enemy to it.

In the CCXIth, to Ralph, Arch-Bishop of Rheims, he deduces the Genealogies of the Earl of Flanders, and the Daughter of the Earl of Rennes, to shew they are nearly Related.

The CCXIIth to Geofrey Bishop of Beauvais, is about the validity of a Donation granted to the Monastery of St. Simphorien.

In the CCXIIIth, to John Bishop of Orleans, he proves that the Regular Clergy may have Cure of Souls and Parishes committed to them.

In the CCXIVth, to Bruno, Arch-Bishop of Treves, he bemoans the sad State of Religion, under the unhappy divisions between the Church and the Civil Government.

The CCXVth is a Letter of compliment and friendship, to Thomas, Arch-Bishop of York.

In the CCXVIth, and CCXVIIth Letters, he give Richard, Bishop of Albane, Legate of the Holy See, an account of the dispute between the Monks of Bonneval and those of Blois, which he tells him he had us'd his best endeavours to accommodate, but could not yet effect it.

In the CCXVIIIth, he writes, to Gualon, Bishop of Paris, that the Canon of that Church, who had lately been Married, ought to loose his preferment and be degraded from being a Clergy-man, but that his Marriage must remain good and valid.

In the CCXIXth, he justifies himself, to Pope Paschal, for having divided part of a Prebend of his Church among the Canons, by daily distributions, for the Encouragement of such as assisted, constantly, in performing Divine Service.

In the CCXXth, to Hildebert, Bishop of Mans, he shews, that when an appeal is made from one Judge to another, the party concern'd is, within five days after he appeals, to get a Letter from the first Judge to the other he appeals to, who is not else oblig'd to take cognizance of the Matter. He asserts, also, in this Letter, that it is not in the power of any Bishop, to give up the Estate of a Religious Society to the sole disposal of the Abbot.

In the CCXXIst Letter, to John Bishop of Orleans, concerning a free-man's having Married a Slave, without knowing her to be so; Ivo says that, by the Civil Law, the Marriage is void, and he may quit her and marry another Woman; but that, by the Laws of God and of Nature, they ought to keep together, or at least, if he put her away he may not marry again.

In the CCXXII^d, to the Clergy of Autun, he inquires, if a Woman that has been guilty of Adultery, must necessarily be Divorc'd from her husband, and concludes that in strictness, she ought; but, by the wisdom of the Gospel, such a Temper was prescrib'd as may reconcile her to her husband.

In the CCXXIII^d, to Owen, Bishop of Eureux, he persuades him to Excommunicate and deny Christian Burial, to such as embezzil the Patrimony of the Church.

In the CCXXIVth, he tells Guy, Abbot of Molème, that one of his Monks having been with him and acknowledged with great Sorrow, that he took Orders for the sake of Temporal gain only, though by the Rigour of the Canons he ought for ever to be turn'd out of the Clergy, yet having express'd true Repentance for his Sin, he thinks he may be permitted to retain his Orders, and to Exercise the Functions of them.

In the CCXXVth, to Daimbert, Arch-Bishop of Sens, he delivers his judgment, that a certain person who came and confess'd that, before he was Married, he had Carnal knowledge of his Wife's Sister, ought to be deem'd ever after, infamous, and his evidence not to be heard against any man; that he ought also to be Divorc'd from his Wife and live the rest of his Life unmarried; but that his Wife should have her Portion back again.

CCXXVth, he requests Bernier, Abbot of Bonneval, to receive kindly one of his Monks, who was sorry for having left his Monastery, and beg'd leave to come into it again.

The CCXXVIIth is a Letter of Condolence to Pope Paschal; and acquaints him that being desirous of bestowing a Prebend, in his Church, upon Guarin, he is oppos'd therein by the Dean and Chapter.

In the CCXXVIIIth, to Gombier, a Priest, Ivo answers a Scruple he had propos'd to him, viz. How to reconcile these words of the Prophet Ezekiel, (At what time-soever a sinner shall Repent, and turn from the Evil of his ways, he shall save his Soul alive, or be forgiven,) with the Sentence and discipline of the Ecclesiastical Canons, which suspends, for some time, even penitents from the Sacrament of the Lords Supper? and how it comes to pass, that those whom Christ, who is the head, immediately releases, the Church who is the body should detain under the Penalty of sin: This difficulty, Ivo says, 'tis Easie to solve, if we consider the manner of God's remitting sins and the frailty of Mankind; that God, who knows the heart, forgives the sin as soon as he sees the heart is converted, but that the Church, which knows not the inward thoughts of a Man, cannot absolve a sinner till his Conversion be made evident by Publick Signs of it.

In the CCXXIXth, to Lisard, Bishop of Soissons, he declares that a Man who defames a Married Woman, to any of her Relations, by saying he had Carnal knowledge of her before her Marriage, ought not to be admitted in Court as an evidence against her, because he is criminal himself by his own Confession.

In the CCXXXth, to Hildebert, Bishop of Mans, he asserts that a Jewish Woman who turns Christian may not quit her husband, nor Marry another, at least unless her husband were her near Relation.

In the CCXXXIst, to Pontius, Abbot of Cluny, after giving some mystical reasons of the Elevation of the Chalice and the Host and the Signs of the Cross made upon those occasions, he delivers his opinion that a Monk who was forc'd to make himself an Eunuch, to prevent Epileptick fits he was subject to, may notwithstanding be allow'd to take Orders.

In the CCXXXIId, to Hildebert, Bishop of Mans, he maintains that a Man who had been too familiar with his Wife's Mother before his Marriage, ought not to be Divorc'd from his Wife, but upon good proof of his having been carnally joyn'd to the Mother.

In the CCXXXIIId, to Henry Abbot of St. John d' Angeli, he declares that he adheres to the opinion of the Popes, Gregory and Urban, touching Investitures given by Lay-men, and believes that they who allow them the power of bestowing Church-preferments are Schismatics; nor is he afraid of hereby offending Pope Paschal, who has own'd in several Letters to him that what he had done with Relation to the Investitures, he had been constrain'd to do by the violence of others, but was still in his heart of another opinion.

In the CCXXXIVth, he perswades William, Abbot of Marmoutier, to end his quarrels with Ralph, Arch-Bishop of Tours; and in the CCXXXVth, he tells that Arch-Bishop, he is glad that the Bishops of Mans and Angers Labour to procure Peace between him and the Abbot.

The CCXXXVIth Letter is written in the Name of Daimbert, Arch-Bishop of Sens, and his Suffragans, to John, Arch-Bishop of Lions, who had summon'd them to a Council, call'd at Anse, near Lions, to consult about matters of Faith and the dispute of Investitures. They assure him, though they have a great respect for him, yet they will not go beyond the limits set them by their Ancestors, and that the Holy Fathers allow'd no Authority to the Bishop of the Chief See to call the other Bishops to any Council, out of their peculiar Provinces, unless by the Express command of the Holy See, or that, upon some Controversy, which could not be Terminated within the Province, any of the Bishops of it should appeal to the Primate. As to the matter of Investitures, propos'd to be Treated of in this Council, they tell him it cannot be done without discovering the nakedness of their Father the Pope; and besides, 'twould be needless to have any thing prov'd against persons they dare not pass Sentence upon; that the Pope may be excus'd for granting Investiture since he did it only by force and in cases of necessity; that 'tis foolishly done of some to bestow the name of heresie upon Investitures, since heresie can be only in matters of Faith, not in the Practice and Discipline of the Church; or at most, those only can be reckon'd guilty of error who suppose some Sacrament or Grace conferr'd by the Investiture, if ever any were so weak as to think so; that however, Investitures are an Invasion upon the Rights and Liberties of the Churches, and ought to be abolish'd in all places, where it may be Effected without endangering a Schism.

The CCXXXVIIth is the Arch-Bishop of Lions's answer to the foregoing Letter, wherein he protests he did not mean to force them out of their Province, to a Council, but only desir'd to Confer with them, and ask their advices about the State of the Church; nor but that the Church of Lions has such Authority over the other Churches of France: As to the persons he would have Treated about, he says, there is not one of them but ought to submit to the pleasure of a Council, even Kings and Emperors being subject to the Authority of the Bishops; that he did not design to uncover, but to hide the nakedness of their Father the Pope; that no dangers nor obstacles ought to hinder them from cou-rageously defending the cause of the Church; that those who approve of Investitures remaining in the hands of the Laity are Hereticks in their hearts; that he will not usurp any undue Authority over the Diocess of Sens, but prays them to remember, 'twas always Subject to the Primacy of the Arch-Bishop of Lions.

A New Ecclesiastical History

In the CCXXXVIIIth Letter, to Pope Paschal, Ivo endeavours to dissuade him from constituting a Bishop over the Church of Tournay, and exempting it from the Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Noyon, it has been under these 400 Years; least his Holiness, by so doing, create a misunderstanding between the King and the Clergy, and raise such a Schism as hapned in Germany.

In the CCXXXIXth, he Compliments King Loüis le Gros, upon his intended Marriage with a Niece of the Earl of Flanders.

In the CCXLth, he warns a certain Monk of the Scandal he occasions by his too great familiarity with a Nun.

In the CCXLIth he writes to Humbaud, Bishop of Auxerre, not to suffer a Cause, already determin'd in the Ecclesiastical Courts, to be brought again before the Earl, or any Secular Judge.

In the CCXLIIth, to Owen, Bishop of Eureux, he explains himself concerning his having given his opinion that a Free-man, who had Married a Slave, without knowing her to be such, ought to be Divorc'd from her; and adds that this is not dissolving a Lawful Marriage, but only declaring that 'tis unlawful for them to live together any longer, their Marriage being Null by Law.

In the CCXLIIIth, to Gualon, Bishop of Paris, he says that a Marriage concluded on by the Parents, between two Children in their Cradles, is of no force.

The CCXLIVth is written to Pope Paschal, in favour of Hubert, Bishop of Senlis, accus'd by some of his Clergy, to the Metropolitan, of selling Holy Orders. He had met with hard usage from the Bishops of his own Province, and therefore appeals to the Pope, to whom Ivo recommends his Case.

The CCXLVth is to Hugh, Earl of Troyes, who having Listd himself for the Holy Land, design'd to put away his Wife and live in Celibacy. Ivo commends his Resolution, but advises him to do it with his Wife's consent and to lead a Regular Life.

In the CCXLVIth to Lisiard, Bishop of Soissons, he declares that 'tis not allowable for a Man to Marry two Sisters, successively, though the Marriage with the former of them were not consummated.

In the CCXLVIIth, to John Bishop of Orleans, Ivo highly blames him that, upon a quarrel between the Earl of Orleans and Ralph Lord of Baugency, he and his Church had consented that they should decide it by single Combat: And,

In the CCXLVIIIth, he advises the latter to carry himself respectfully towards the Earl of Orleans.

In the CCXLIXth, to Gilbert, Arch-Deacon of Paris, he affirms, that those who had been assistant and consenting to an Adultery, cannot be receiv'd as witnesses against the Adulterers.

In the CCLIth to Manasses, Bishop of Meaux, he tells him, he did well to refuse administering the Vaticum (or last Sacrament) to a dying person, who was troubled with a constant vomiting.

In the CCLIIth, he writes to Ralph, Arch-Bishop of Rheims, that he thinks it unreasonable that a Woman suspected of Adultery by her husband, should undergo the Tryal of Ordeal, but that it is sufficient for her to purge her self upon Oath.

In the CCLXIIth, to Pontius, Abbot of Cluny, he shews him the reason, why in the Consecration of the Cup, at the Lord's Supper, the words [Mystery of Faith] are added, which were not us'd by our Saviour, at the Institution of this Sacrament? and says, (among other things) that this is done because we judge of the greatness of the Mystery contained in it not by the Senses but by Faith.

In the CCLXXVth, he informs Conon, the Pope's Legate, that he has acquainted Count Theobald with the Sentence of Excommunication he had published against all that had a hand in taking the Earl of Nevers, and which would have its course against him, if he did not set the Earl at Liberty, by a time therein prefix'd him: He says the Count was somewhat surpriz'd that the King had refer'd this matter to the Ecclesiastical Judicature; since he is very ready to appear before the King's Judges, and doubts not but he can make it appear to them that not he but the Earl of Nevers is to blame, and offers, if they shall require it, to deliver him up to them.

The Last is a Letter to the Abbot of the Monastery of Marmoutier, written in very pressing Terms, to persuade him and his Monks to stand to the Arbitration made by himself and the Earl of Chartres, of the difference between them and the Church of Chartres.

A New Ecclesiastical History

Of the Pannormia of Ivo.

Ivo, Bishop of Chartres, has left us two Collections of the Ecclesiastical Canons; one of them intitled Pannormia, which makes but a small Volume; the other pretty large commonly known by the Name of the Decretal; the former in Eight Books, the Decretum is divided into seventeen. The same Preface is prefix'd to both of them.

The Pannormia is suppos'd by some to have been written by Hugh Bishop of Châlons: and indeed, Vincent, Bishop of Beauvais, mentions an abridgment of the Decretum of Ivo, drawn by him: but that must be different from this we are speaking of, which is not an Epiome of any other Book, but an Original work. In all the Manuscripts, that can be found, it bears the Name of Ivo's Pannormia; particularly, in that in the Library of St. Victor, which was written before the time Hugh Bishop of Châlons liv'd in; which is an evident proof that the Pannormia cannot be his. The Decrees of Innocent II, who was Pope since Ivo's death, though added in the Editions, are not in the antient Manuscript, nor in several others, as has been observ'd by Antonius Augustinus. The Pannormia was compos'd before the Decretal.

Of the Decretum of Ivo.

The Decretum is a Collection of Rules and Constitutions in Church-Affairs, taken out of the Letters of the Popes, the Antient Canons and Councils, the writings of the Fathers of the Church and the Laws of Catholick Princes. In the Preface, Ivo gives notice, that he has rang'd them under general heads, or Titles, for the easier finding out any Canon the Reader has occasion to consult. And admonishes that if one Canon shall seem to have a different meaning from that of another, we are not presently to conclude they are contradictory; but to remember that some are to be understood according to the Rigour of their import, others are to be taken with allowances; for that all Ecclesiastical Discipline aiming only at that Edification which is founded upon Charity, every Rule and Order of the Church is intended for the same End; upon which Account, the Spiritual Physicians, the Guides of Souls, Accommodate their Remedies and Prescriptions to the quality of the distempers and the condition of their patients: that moreover, we are to distinguish between what is laid down by way of advice, and what is deliver'd as a precept or command, what is forbid from what is permitted or tolerated only: and among those things that are commanded or forbidden, we must carefully consider that some of them are so, by an Eternal and Immutable Law; others, by the Laws of Men, which may be either changed, repealed, or dispensed with: Of all which distinctions, exceptions, restrictions and allowances he gives very pertinent instances and illustrations out of the Writings of the Fathers.

There is also a short Chronicle, of the Kings of France, from Phaymond to Philip the first, reckoned by some, to be written by Ivo, Bishop of Chartres; but neither does this seem to be his, nor another much larger (ascrib'd to him by some) from Nimus King of Assyria, to Louis le Debonnaire, which was written by Hugo Floriacensis.

The Pannormia of Ivo, Bishop of Chartres, was printed at Basil, in 1499. and at Louvain in 1557.

The Decretum was printed at Louvain, in 1561. And at Paris, in 1647, with the Letters and Sermons correctly published by Father Fronton, a Regular Canon of St. Genevieve: In which Edition are added the Learned Notes of Juretus Canon of Langres, and of Sonchet Canon of Chartres upon the Letters of our Bishop.

CHAP. II.

The History of the Church of Rome under the Popedom of Paschal II. Gelasius II. and Calixtus II. Containing the Rise, Progress, and Conclusion of the Contests between the Holy See and the Empire, about the Right of Investitures.

Paschal II. call'd, before he was Pope, Rainier, was a Tuscan, the Son of Crescentius and Alsatia. He embrac'd the Monastick Life, and practis'd it in the Abbey of Cluny, under the Abbot Hugh. He was Created Cardinal Priest of St. Clement, by Gregory VII. and made Abbot of the Monastery of St. Stephen, and St. Lawrence of Rome. After the Death of Urban II. the Cardinals cast their Eyes upon him to advance him to the Papal Chair. When he had intimation of this, he absconded for some time; but being afterwards discovered, he was Proclaimed Pope by all the Cardinals, with the loud Acclamations of the People, and Consecrated the 14th day of August, in the Year 1099.

The first thing he did was entirely to drive out the Anti-pope Guibert. He declar'd War against him, and forc'd him to fly to the Mountains of Abruzzo, where he Died, in the Year 1100. His Death did not put an end to the Schism which had lasted 20 Years already; for after him came three more Anti-popes, who succeeded one after another, but fell within a short time. The first was Albert of Atella, whom Richard Duke of Campania, the great supporter of Guibert, caus'd to be Elected in his stead. At the end of four Months he was taken by Pope Paschal's Friends, and shut up in the Monastery of St. Lawrence. After this the people of Cava a small Town near Palestrina, undertook to bestow the Pontificate on a Roman nam'd Theodoric, who enjoy'd the Title of Pope only three Months, and thought himself very happy in relinquishing it and becoming an Anchorer. Maginulphus who was Elected at Ravenna, by the name of Silvester IV. seem'd to have a greater interest; interest, but he Dy'd within a short time after. By this means Paschal being freed from all his Rivals, retook Castellano and Benevento from the Prince of Capua, and the Town of Cava, on which Peter Collona Abbot of Farfa had seized, and driven Stephen Corso out of Rome, who having seiz'd upon St. Paul's Church, annoy'd the Romans by his continual Incurfions.

The Designs of Paschal II. against the Emperor Henry. Having thus quieted Italy, his designs were aim'd against the Emperor Henry. Conrad the Son of that Emperor, who was Governor of Italy, Dying in the Year 1101. Henry had a design of passing into Italy, going to Rome, and holding a Council there the beginning of the Year 1102. to adjust the differences that had been between him and the Holy See. The Pope made no open opposition to it, nay, he invited the Emperor thither: But so farasmuch as they could not trust each other, the Emperor would not venture to rely on the Italians, and Paschal was not very sorry that Henry did not come into Italy.

The Council of Rome under Paschal II. against the Emperor Henry. However, he held a very large Council at Rome about the end of Lent, where, Henry not appearing in Person, nor having sent any Ambassadors thither, was Excommunicated with all his Adherents. And because several maintain'd that there ought to be no regard had to such kind of Anathema's, the Pope in this Council drew up a Form in these Terms: "I Anathematize all Herefie, and chiefly that which disturbs the State of the present Church, which teaches and maintains that "no regard is to be had to Anathema's, and that one may lawfully condemn the Ecclesiastical Sancti"ons. I promise to obey Pope Paschal and his Successors; I approve and condemn what the Ho"ly Catholick Church approves and condemns. The Pope exacted this Oath of all that assisted at the Council, and on Holy-Thursday published the Excommunication against Henry, drawn up in these Words: "Whereas Henry has not ceased from rending the garment of Jesus Christ, that is, has not "ceas'd from ravaging the Church by Fire and Sword, from dishonouring it by his Perjuries, In"continence, and Homicides; he has been Excommunicated and Condemn'd for his Contumacy and "Disobedience, by Pope Gregory of Blessed Memory, and by our Predecessor, Urban II. and we also "have anathematiz'd him for ever in our last Synod by the Judgment of the whole Church, which "we desire may be notified to the whole World, and especially to the people residing beyond the Moun"tains, that they may have no hand in his Iniquity.

The Rebellion of Henry V. against his Father. Henry to avoid the stroke of this Excommunication, about the end of that Year order'd publication to be made that he intended to resign the Empire to his Son Henry, and to Travel to the Holy-Land. He not only caus'd this to be published by Bishop Eginard, but likewise engag'd himself by a Vow to undertake this Journey. This proposal engag'd the affection of the Princes and Clergy of the Empire to him; and several of his Subjects made preparations to accompany him in this Expedition. But when they perceiv'd that he had no design to perform his Vow, they began to change their inclination towards him; which gave his Son Henry an occasion of Rebelling against him, when by his Father's stay he saw his hopes of very suddenly enjoying the Empire frustrated. Having enter'd upon this Design by the wicked Counsels of three great Lords, he left his Father at Mentz, where he had spent the Christmas Holy-days in the Year 1104. and withdrew to Bavaria, Religion being the cloak to cover this unnatural Disloyalty. He began by anathematizing the Herefie of his Father, and by promising Obedience to the Pope. The Nobles of Austria, Germany, and the Eastern parts of France declaring for him, he enter'd into Saxony, where he was very well received; and having spent the Easter Holy-days at Quiedlingburg, he was acknowledg'd Emperor by all the Towns of that Country. Rothard Arch-Bishop of Mentz, and Gebehard Bishop of Constance, the Pope's Vicars in Germany entred into this Confederacy, and advis'd young Henry to reconcile all Saxony to the Holy See.

The Assembly of Northusa in the Year 1105. Young Henry to establish his Power appointed a general Assembly of the Bishops and Clergy to be held on the 29th of May, in the Year 1105. at Northusa, a Royal Seat; wherein, they made several Orders with respect to the Discipline of the Church. They reform'd upon the Spot what they thought they might safely do; and what appear'd to be of the most consequence they refer'd to the determination of the Holy See. They therein condemn'd the Herefie of the Simoniacal, and that of the Nicolaitans, namely of such Clerks as would not live in Celibacy. They therein fix'd the Summer Ember-week, which was to be the Whitsun-week; and order'd that those persons who had been Consecrated by false Bishops should be reconcil'd the next Ember-week. Henry V. would not appear at that Council till after he had been invited thither; and when he came he seem'd to behave himself with a great deal of Modesty, Humility, and Wisdom. He declar'd to them, that he did not covet his Father's Throne, and was ready to resign it to him, if he would but submit to St. Peter and his Successors. The Bishops of Hildesheim, Paderborne, and Halberstat, throwing themselves at the Feet of the Arch-Bishop of Mentz their Metropolitan, declar'd, that they would submit to the Holy See; whereupon their Cause was referred to be tried by the Pope.

The War between the two Henries. No sooner did this Assembly break up, but Henry V. march'd towards Mentz at the Head of some Troops, in order to render himself master of that City, and to re-establish the Arch-Bishop thereof. The Emperor his Father being within the place, Henry would not venture to invest it, but drew his Forces off to Wirsburgh, which he took by surprize, drove out thence Bishop Erlong, and put Robert in his place. Afterwards he invested the Castle of Nuremberg, which Surrender'd to him at the end of two Months; and being come to Ratisbonn, he was set upon by his Father who defeated him and retook that City. Young Henry without being shocked at this Overthrow rally'd up more Forces, and having been joyn'd by the Saxons, he encamp'd over against his Father's Army, being separated from each other only by the River Regen. After several slight skirmishes, Young Henry found a way of winning over the Princes and Great Men who were in his Father's Army. They would not fight, so that the Emperor was forc'd to fly, and left his Son Master of the Field, who seiz'd on his Father's Treasures that were at Spires.

About the end of the Year it was agreed that a Convention should be held at Mentz, to adjust the difference then on foot between the two Emperors. The Father came upon the Rhine with an intention of being there; but the Son being afraid he should not obtain all that he desir'd from this Convention, had recourse to Fraud and Treachery. He waited upon his Father, protested to him that he was very sorry for what had pass'd, accompanied him towards Mentz: but in the Road some body acquainted the Old Emperor that a very great number of Lords of Suabia and Saxony his Enemies were Arriv'd there: Upon this, his Son shew'd him that it would not be safe to trust himself in their hands, and perswaded him to retire to the Castle of Binghen near Mentz. He no sooner enter'd the place, but the Gates were shut upon him, where he was kept close Prisoner. Afterwards they sent to him requiring him to deliver up the Ensigns of his Imperial Dignity, that they might forthwith be confer'd on his Son Henry. The Bishops of Albany and Constance, the Pope's Legates in this Assembly, repeated the Excommunication issued out against him. At last, they took him out of the Castle of Binghen, and carry'd him to Ingelheim, where they forc'd him to renounce the Empire, to confess that he had been in fault, and on his Knees to ask Absolution of the Bishop of Albany, who deny'd it him, and referr'd him to the Pope. Young Henry was Crown'd Emperor, and acknowledg'd as such by the Assembly of Mentz. He dispatched Six Bishops in the Quality of Deputies to Rome with several persons of Quality, to obtain a Confirmation of all that had been done at Northusa and Mentz.

However; Old Henry having made his Escape from Ingelheim, was receiv'd by Henry de Limbourg, Henry IV. Duke of the Lower Lorrain, and by Obert Bishop of Liege who held out several places upon the Rhine retires to for him. The City of Liege was the place he made choice of for his Residence, from whence he wrote Letters to the King of France, to his Son, to the Bishops, and to the Princes of Saxony and Germany. Wherein he makes loud Complaints of the manner wherein he had been us'd, and protests against all that they had forc'd him to do by constraint. In the last Letters, he declar'd that he was ready to pay all manner of Respect to the Pope, to regulate all the Affairs of the Empire by the Advice of Henry Abbot of Clugny, and appeals to the Pope's Determination of all that had been done against him in Germany.

His Son caus'd an Answer to be return'd to him in the Name of the Lords, to this Effect; "That the miseries which he had brought upon both the Church and State had oblig'd them to depose him, and set up his Son on the Throne in his stead: That he had acknowledg'd himself that he was unworthy of the Empire, and had resign'd it into his Son's hands: That the promises he at present made signified nothing, since they could not tell how to give any Credit to them: That however, that he might have no reason to complain, they would consent to have the business examin'd over again in an Assembly of the Lords and Commons."

Notwithstanding this Young Henry pursued his Father, and after he had been beaten off from the Bridge of Vifer, he invest'd Cologne, designing afterwards to march to Liege. But the Besieged held out more vigorously than he expected; and after two Months Siege, he was ready to break up, when he received the News of his Father's Death at Liege, the 7th of August, in the Year 1106. The people of Liege obtain'd their Pardon, upon Condition, that they would dig up the Body of the Late Emperor, which was carry'd to Spires, and put into a Sepulchre of Stone, where it remained without the Church unburied for five Years together: The Pope's Partisans were of Opinion, that since he Died Excommunicated, they could not give him Ecclesiastical Burial. Guibert the Antipope was us'd after the same manner, whom they dug up Six Years after his Burial, and cast his Bones to the Common-Shore to insult over his Memory.

After the Death of the Emperor Henry IV. those Princes and people who had continu'd firm to his Interests were oblig'd to submit to the New Emperor. The Pope was invited into Germany, and left Rome with that Design. In the way, on the 19th of October, in the Year 1106. he held a Council at Guastalla, a Town of Lombardy, situated on the Po, therein to regulate what concern'd the Churches of Germany and Lombardy, which had been engag'd in the Schism. He therein declar'd that the Bishops, the Priests, and the other Clerks who had been Ordain'd during the Schism, should still keep their Orders, provided, they had not procur'd them by Simony or by force, nor were conscious to themselves of being guilty of any other Crimes. He therein renew'd the Decrees of his Predecessors against Investitures, and prohibited the Alienation of the Church Revenues. He took away from the Metropolis of Ravenna the Towns of Emilia, that is, Placenza, Parma, Reggio, Modena, and Bologna, to punish it for its Rebellion.

The Decree against Investitures was dislike'd by the Emperor, whereupon Paschal instead of going to Mentz, as he had design'd, retir'd into France; and after he had spent the Christmas Holy-days in the Abbey of Clugny, he went to implore the Protection of King Philip. However, the German Nobles and Bishops being conven'd at Mentz, resolv'd upon sending Deputies to the Pope, to let him know that the power of Creating Bishops had been granted by the Holy See to Charlemagne and his Successors; and that therefore he could not divest that Prince of it. These Deputies enter'd into a Conference with the Pope at Chalons, and the Arch-Bishop of Treves being their Prolocutor, after he had told the Pope that the Emperor wish'd him all manner of Prosperity, and profer'd to serve him to the utmost of his Power so long as it did not prejudice the Rights of the Empire, he declar'd that from the time of St. Gregory the Great, the Emperor had notice given him of the person to be chosen; that after he had given his Consent, the Election was publicly made; that then he who was Elected was Consecrated; and that after the Consecration he waited upon the Emperor, to receive from him the Investiture for the Royalties, by the Ring and Pastoral Staff, by which at the same time he did Homage and swore Allegiance to the Emperor: That this custom seem'd to be very reasonable, because without it the

rence about

The Pope reply'd by the Bishop of Placenza, that the Church being redeem'd by the Blood of Jesus Christ was free, and therefore ought not to be put into Bondage: That if it could not chuse its Prelates without the Consent of the Emperor, it would become his Vassal; and that if these Prelates after their Election were oblig'd to receive the Investiture from him by the Ring and Pastoral Staff, this would be an Usurpation on the Prerogative of God himself: That lastly, it was unbecoming and beneath the Sacerdotal Order and Unction, that Hands Consecrated by the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ should be put into Hands stain'd with Blood-shed.

The Emperor's Deputies withdrew, being very much dissatisfied at this reply, threatening to put an end to this Debate at Rome, with their Swords in their Hands. The Pope would willingly have renew'd the Business with Adelbert the Emperor's Chancellor; but they could not come to an agreement in any one point, and the Emperor's Deputies return'd back into Germany.

*The Council of Troyes
1107.*

The Pope on his part Assembled a Council at Troyes in Campaigne, about Ascension-day, in the Year 1107. wherein after he had made several Institutions about Church Discipline, he propos'd to renew the Decrees of his Predecessors against Laicks concerning themselves with Ecclesiastical Dignities: The Emperor who had spent the Easter Holy-days at Mentz, made his approaches towards the Council, and sent thither his Ambassadors to acquaint them that the Popes had formerly granted to Charlemagne, the Right of making Bishops; and that if they would not consent thereto, to declare that he would prevent the determining of that Affair in a strange Countrey. Upon this remonstrance the Council granted the Emperor a Years time, that he himself might come in person to Rome, there to plead the Cause in a general Council which should determine it.

The Emperor's Journey into Italy.

The Emperor put off his Journey till such time as he had fully regulated the Affairs of the Empire; after which, in the beginning of the Year 1110. he held a Convention at Ratisbone, wherein he declar'd that he had resolv'd to go to Rome, there to receive the Imperial Crown, and to adjust the differences betwixt the Pope and him. He order'd the Princes of the Empire to prepare to wait upon him, and to raise an Army by August. At that time he set out according to his former resolution. His Army consisting of 30000 Horse, was divided into two Bodies; He put himself at the Head of the one at Yveca, and the other stay'd for him at Novara, and joyn'd him near Milan, where he was Crown'd King of Lombardy, by Arch-Bishop Chrysolaus. Afterwards he cross'd the Po and came to Placenza, where and at Parma he stay'd for some time, whilst he sent his Deputies to adjust matters with the Princess Mabildis, whom he continu'd in her Dominions, upon Condition, that she should not oppose his passage. The Season being very far gone, he lost a great many Sumpter Horses in crossing the Appennine Mountains, which oblig'd him to stay some time at Florence, where he spent the Christmas Holy days. From thence he marched to Sutri, after he had in his Passage demolish'd the Town of Arezzo, which oppos'd his March.

*The Treaty between the Pope
Emperor.*

The Ambassadors which he had sent to the Pope, waited upon him at this place, with the Legates of his Holiness; and they agreed that the Pope should Crown Henry, and that this Prince should allow the Churches their Liberty, and grant no more Investitures to Bishops, upon condition that he should retain the Duchies, Counties, Marquissates, Territories, the Rights of Money, Justice, and Marches, the Revenues, Fiefs, and other Estates which they held of the Empire. This agreement seem'd at first sight to be very advantageous to the Church; but in reality stripp'd the Bishops of their Estates and Dignities, for a Chimerical Honour, and reduced them to extrem Povertry. The Emperor foreseeing that one of these two things would happen, either that this Agreement should be Executed, and he be a great gainer thereby; or that if the Pope could not prevail upon the Bishops of Germany to quit their pretensions to those great Estates, he should re-enter upon the Rights of Investitures, made no scruple to ratify this Treaty, upon condition that the Pope would prevail upon the Bishops to approve thereof. The Pope for his part, who lost nothing by it, and was satisfied that by this means he should humble the Bishops of Germany, was likewise very well pleas'd with this Treaty. Whereupon it was sign'd and sworn to, and Hostages exchange'd on both sides.

The Pope and Cardinals apprehended by the Emperor's Order.

After the Conclusion of this Treaty, the Emperor march'd towards Rome, and on the 11th of February in the Year M CXI, arriv'd at the Town Leonina, where he was receiv'd by the Clergy and Laity, who came to wait upon him, and Conducted him with loud Acclamations to St. Peter's Palace, where he met with the Pope and the Cardinals who attended his coming on the Top of the stairs. He kiss'd the feet of his Holiness, and afterwards his forehead, Eyes and Mouth, and went into the Church on the Pope's Right hand, who celebrated Mass. When they came to the Ceremony of the Coronation, the Pope ask'd the Emperor whether he was willing to observe the Treaty to which they had agreed, and remit his Right of Investitures: The Emperor reply'd that he was ready to do it, provided the Bishops of Germany would Consent thereto; and that it was requisite to know their Sentiments of the matter. The Bishops of Germany oppos'd it all they could, and complain'd that the Pope was minded to dispose of that which did not belong to him. The Pope in vain remonstrated to them that these Estates were committed to them by way of Trust, and that they needed not scruple to resign them back to the Emperor; for they would never consent to so disadvantageous a Proposition. Upon these debates, Henry summon'd the Pope to Crown him, and upon his Refusing to do it, order'd his Guards to apprehend him and several Cardinals. The News of this being nois'd about the City, the Romans ran to their Arms, animated thereto by the Cardinals of Frescate and Ostia, kill'd several German stragling in the City, and set upon the Emperor's Forces very vigorously. The Engagement was very obstinate on both sides, the Emperor was in great danger of his Life, but at last repuls'd the Romans, and march'd out of the City two days after, carrying along with him the Pope and Cardinals Prisoners.

He quartered near two Months about Rome, till at last the Pope to put an End to the War which was ready to break out, and to get his Liberty, resolv'd to grant him the Right of Investitures and to Crown him. Being thus agreed with the Emperor, they recenter'd Rome the thirteenth of April, and coming to St. Peter's Palace, the Emperor receiv'd the Imperial Crown at the hands of the Pope. They say that the Pope communicated to him a moiety of the Host which he had Consecrated, protesting that he gave it him as a Seal and Pledge of the Peace which he had made with him, and of the Concord that was between them; and that whoever of them should break this Concord or Violate this Peace, should have no part or portion in the Kingdom of Jesus Christ. The Pope likewise granted him a Bull of Confirmation of the Right of Investitures, importing that he granted and confirm'd the Privilege which the Emperors his Predecessors had of giving Investitures by the Ring and Crozier to the Bishops and Abbots of his Dominions Elected without Simony or Violence: That they should not be consecrated till after they had receiv'd Investiture, excepting such as were us'd to be invest'd by the Arch-Bishops or the Pope. This Concession is founded on these two Reasons; First, because the Predecessors of Henry had considerably enriched the Churches, by the Revenues of the Crown which they had bestowed on them: and Secondly because it was necessary that the Dissentions and Disturbances which might happen upon Elections, might be appeas'd by the Royal Authority. Lastly the Pope in this Bull denounc'd an Anathema against those who should oppose this Concession.

The Emperor having thus compas'd his design, departed from Rome being attended by the Pope. They parted very good Friends in appearance, by shewing to each other a Reciprocal Good Will and Affection. The Pope returned to Rome, and the Emperor as he went through Lombardy, took an Oath of Fidelity from all the Towns, and arriv'd at Spire August IV. Where he interr'd his Fathers Corps with great Magnificence, according to the Leave he had from the Pope, upon the Testimony given that he dy'd a Penitent.

Notwithstanding this, Pope Paschal at his Return, found a great many Cardinals offended that he had granted the Right of Investitures to the Emperor, and he excus'd himself as well as he could, upon the Account of the Extremity he was in, and the Miseries which threatn'd Rome, if he had not made this Condescension. These Reasons did not satisfy the more Resolute, who took an occasion from the Pope's going into the Country, to call an Assembly, wherein they cancell'd all that the Pope had done, renew'd and confirm'd the Decrees of his Predecessors against Investitures. The Pope having heard of it sent them Word, that though their intention might be good, yet their way of Proceeding was not to be tolerated: That he hop'd for the future to make amends for what he had done amiss, only to divert the Ruin of Rome and all the Country; but that they ought to have patience, and to take care that the Zeal they have for the Welfare of the Church does not prove prejudicial to it.

Bruno Bishop of Signi, Abbot of Mount Cassin, was one of those who was the freest in speaking against Investitures; and who solicited the Pope most to revoke what he had done, and to Anathematize the Emperor. The Cardinals who had been taken Prisoners with the Pope, were divided in their Sentiments; some were for what he had done, others disapprov'd it. The Pope offended that this Division rose so high, and fearing it would spread farther if the Monks of Mount Cassin follow'd their Abbot's Sentiments, order'd Bruno to retire to his Bishoprick, and another Abbot to be Elected in his Room. This Question was likewise debated out of Italy, and we are inform'd that John Arch-Bishop of Lions, would have call'd a Council to condemn what the Pope had done, and that Ivo of Chartres endeavour'd to dissuade him from it. Some maintain'd that one could not approve of Investitures without being guilty of Heresy; others believ'd that they might be tolerated, though they were irregular, and a third openly stood up in their Vindication. Pope Paschal was very sorry that he had deviated from the Decrees of his Predecessors, and desir'd nothing more than to revoke what he had done; but durst not undertake it on his own head after the Oath which he had taken, and the solemn Bull he had granted.

To wind himself out of this Difficulty, he assembled a Council of one hundred Bishops or thereabouts in the Lateran Church in March 1112. The chief Institution of which was the Repealing the Right of Investitures. For after they had renew'd against the Clerks, the Favourers of Guibert the Anti-pope, the Interdiction pronounced against them, the fifth day of the Session the Pope shew'd in what manner He and the Cardinals had been apprehended by King Henry, and how contrary to his Resolution he had been forc'd to grant to that Prince the Investitures for to obtain his Freedom, the Peace of the Church and the People: That he had taken an Oath that he would give him no farther disturbance about Investitures, and that he would pronounce no Anathema against his person: That though the King had not observ'd the Conditions of that Oath, yet he was resolv'd to stand to what he had done; that however he acknowledg'd that he had done amiss, and desir'd it should be redress'd, so that the Church might come to no prejudice. To clear himself the more fully from all Suspicion of Heresy, the next day he made a Profession of Faith, wherein he declar'd that he embrac'd the Faith and Doctrine contain'd in the Holy Scriptures, in the four General Councils, and in the Decrees of the Popes his Successors, especially those of Gregory 7. and Urban 2. that he approv'd of what those Pope approv'd, and that he condemn'd what they had condemn'd. After this Declaration, Gerard Bishop of Angoulême read a paper, importing that all those who were then present at that Council condemn'd, declar'd Null, and absolutely cancell'd the Privilege, or rather Præilege extorted from Pope Paschal, by the Compulsion of Henry, particularly that which imply'd that those who should be Canonically Elected by the Clergy and People, could not be Consecrated till such time as they had Received Investiture from the King. This Sentence was approv'd by all the Prelates of the Council, consisting of twelve Arch-Bishops, an hundred and fourteen Bishops, and twenty three Cardinals, Priests and Deacons.

The Cardinals disapprov'd by the Cardinals.

The Council of Lateran in the Year 1112.

The Decrees against Henry upon the account of Investitures.

There was nothing done in this Council against the Person of the Emperor Henry, but Guy Arch-Bishop of Vienna the Pope's Legat, a Man very zealous for promoting the interests of the Holy See, call'd a Council together in September, wherein he not only cancell'd the privilege of Investitures, as had been before done in the Lateran Council; but farther declar'd, that it was Heresie to receive Investiture at the hand of any Laicks, and Excommunicated the Emperor Henry. He sent the Pope word of what he had done in that Council, and desir'd that he would be pleas'd to confirm it. The Pope who had already declar'd against what himself had done, made no scruple to grant his Request. Cardinal Conon, Bishop of Palestrina, and Legate of the Holy See in the East, thunder'd out Excommunications against Henry, as well in a Council held at Jerusalem, as in those he held at his return, in the Years 1114, and 1115. at Beauvais, at Rheims, at Cologne, and at Châlons. Thierry Cardinal and Legate of the Holy See appointed a Council to be held at Cologne in the Christmas Holy-days, 1115. and set out with an intention of being there; but he dy'd by the way, however, the Council thunder'd out an Excommunication against the Emperor Henry.

The Emperor Henry V's. second Journey into Italy.

That Prince perceiving himself to be thus frustrated of the hopes which he had conceiv'd of quietly enjoying the Investitures, resolv'd upon marching a Second time into Italy, and the rather because his Presence there was requisite for the taking possession of the Dominions of the Princess Matilda, who dy'd the 24th of July 1115. Thereupon having enter'd into Lombardy, he made a stay near the River Po, to take possession of the Estates left him by the Death of that Princess; and in the mean time sent the Abbot of Clugny, and several other Deputies to the Pope, to endeavour an Accommodation with the Holy See.

The Lateran Council in the Year 1116.

The Pope held at that time a Second Council in the Lateran, which commenc'd the 6th of March; the three first Sessions whereof were wholly taken up in discussing the private Affairs of some Bishops. Several of those who assisted in this Council complained that they spent too much time on such Affairs as were of little or no consequence to the Church, and required that they might enter immediately upon the Debate of that for which they were more especially assembled, that they might know what the Pope's sentiments were, and what they ought to teach when they were return'd to their Diocesses. Upon this Remonstrance the Pope declar'd, that he freely acknowledg'd, that designing to put a stop to the Robberies, Burnings, Murders, and other Crimes which were daily committed; he had done amiss in granting the privilege of Investitures which now he condemn'd with an Eternal Anathema, and desir'd they would do the same. All who were there present, cry'd out, Let it be so, Let it be so. Bruno of Signi immediately said, "Let us give God thanks for that Pope Paschal President of this Council has in our hearing condemn'd this wicked Privilege so full of Injustice and Heresie. Moreover, a Bishop averr'd, that since this Privilege was Heresie, he who had granted it by consequence was an Heretic. This discourse mov'd Cardinal John Cajetan, who applying himself to that Bishop, How dare you (says he) in our presence call the Pope Heretic? The Writing indeed which he granted was bad, but not Heretical. Another added, that strictly speaking, it could not be call'd bad, because it had been done to deliver the people of God: which according to the Gospel was a good Work. The Pope who was out of patience to hear himself accus'd of Heresie, caus'd silence to be made, and then with a loud Voice express'd himself thus. "Hark ye my Lords and Brethren; † let the whole World know that the Church of Rome has never been guilty of Heresie, and that it has excommunicated them all: That the Arian Heresie which lasted for 300 Years together was at last condemn'd at Rome: That the Heresies of Eutychius and Sabellius were there likewise Condemn'd: That Photinus and the other Hereticks

"receiv'd their Condemnation at Rome: That lastly, 'tis for this Church the Son of God pray'd just before his Passion, when he said, Peter, I have pray'd for thee that thy Faith fail not. And thus ended the third Session. At the fourth, which was held on Thursday, the Pope was not present, because he was taken up in giving Audience about the Emperor's Affairs to the Abbot of Clugny, to John Catejan, and to Peter Leo, Prefect of the City of Rome, and to the other Favourers of Henry.

The fifth Session on Friday, began with the Disputes between John Cajetan and the other Defenders of the Emperor Henry, and Conon of Palestrina, who was absolutely for Excommunicating him. The Pope to pacify them, said, that the Church in the Primitive times flourish'd by its Martyrs, and by the Piety of its Professors; that afterwards, when Emperors and Kings were Converted to the Faith, they Honour'd the Church by granting it Demeans, Revenues, and Temporal Rights and Dignities: That it was reasonable she should enjoy the Benevolence of Princes, and bestow those Goods on her Sons as she judg'd most convenient. He afterwards repealed the Privilege of Investitures, and renew'd the Decrees of Gregory VII. but would pronounce nothing in particular against Henry's Person. However, he confirm'd what Cardinal Conon of Palestrina had done against that Prince in Syria, in Greece, in Hungary, in Saxony, in Lorrain, and in France. This was pass'd by the majority of Voices.

The next day the Pope discuss'd in the Council the Contest between Grosolanus, or Chrysolanus and Jordanes, pretenders to the Arch-Bishoprick of Milan; and after he had observ'd that the Translations of Bishops were never allow'd, but in case of necessity, or for the Churches greater benefit, he declar'd that of Grosolanus Null, which had been more prejudicial than advantageous to the Church. Afterwards he granted indulgences of forty days, to those who would visit the Sepulchres of the Apostles, and dissolv'd the Council by giving his Blessing to the Prelates.

Henry enters Rome, Paschal withdraws.

The Emperor Henry having heard of the proceedings of this Council, thought it requisite that he himself should appear personally at Rome, to prevent the Consequences of the Excommunication, and maintain the Privilege which the Pope had granted him. He thereupon order'd his Army to advance towards that City. The Pope not venturing to stay his coming, retir'd to Mount Cassin, and from thence for the greater security went into Apulia. The Emperor came to Rome and enter'd it without any opposition.

position, and caus'd himself to be Crown'd a Second time, by Maurice Burdin Arch-Bishop of Brague. This Arch-Bishop was Limosin, who went into Spain to wait upon Bernard Arch-Bishop of Toledo, who made him Arch-Deacon of his Church, from whence he was prefer'd to the Bishoprick of Conimbra, and afterwards to the Arch-Bishoprick of Brague. He was come to Rome to defend the Rights of his Church against the Arch-Bishop of Toledo, and stay'd there two Years. The Emperor spent the Easter Holy-days at Rome, but was forc'd by the excessive hotness of the Season to draw off towards Tuscany, from whence he sent Ambassador: to the Pope to promise him all manner of satisfaction, provided, he would but absolve him, from the Excommunication. The Pope return'd him this Answer that for his part he had not Excommunicated him, because he had engag'd himself upon Oath to do no such thing; but that he could not take off the Excommunication which others had denounc'd against him, till he had heard what they and he had to say for themselves in a Synod. In the mean time, the Pope return'd towards Rome with the Norman Troops of Apulia, and fell Sick at Anagnia. Being recover'd of his illness, he went and spent the Christmas Holy-days at Palestrina, and from thence advanc'd towards Rome. Rome and enter'd it; and as he was studying to bring his Enemies to submit, he Died two days after his return, in January 1118. Pascchal re- turns to Rome.

After his Death, the Cardinals met in a Monastery of the Benedictines of Rome call'd the Palladium, near to the Palace of Franchipani, and six days after Elect'd John Cajetan the Chancellor, who was call'd Gelasus II. and Proclaim'd Pope. Cincius of Franchipani being offended that they had not made choice of a Cardinal whom he had propos'd, enter'd the Monastery in a forcible manner, with Armed Men, fell upon the Pope, abus'd him, and carry'd him away Prisoner to his Palace. The Romans could not endure this Affront; the chief among them met, and sent to demand the Pope from Cincius, and the common people rose up in Arms to set him at liberty. Upon this, Cincius was forc'd to deliver him. He was put in possession of the Papal Chair, which he enjoy'd very peaceably till the Arrival of the Emperor, who being inform'd that Gelasus would not confirm the privilege of Investitures, march'd directly with his Army to Rome. The Pope made his Escape by Sea to Cajeta, where he was Consecrated by the Bishop of Ostia, in the presence of William Duke of Apulia, and Robert Prince of Capua. After his Consecration he came to Capua, where he heard that the Emperor had caus'd Maurice Burdin Arch-Bishop of Brague to be Proclaim'd Pope, under the Name of Gregory VIII. In the mean time Gelasus rais'd Forces, William of Apulia came in to his Assistance; they march'd towards the Territories of Rome, where the Emperor invest'd a place of some strength, who hearing that Forces were coming to its relief, rais'd the Siege immediately, and retir'd into Germany. The Pope retook several places in the Countrey, and enter'd privately into Rome; but his Enemies there being more powerful than himself, after he had settled his Affairs in a good posture, he went into France, and retir'd to Clugny, the usual Sanctuary of the Popes, where he Dy'd of a Pleurisie on the 29th of January, in the Year 1119. after he had nominated Cardinal Guy Arch-Bishop of Vienna for his Successor, upon the refusal of Conon Bishop of Palestrina. Gelasus II. Elect'd Pope.

This Choice was approv'd of by all the Cardinals then present at Clugny when the Pope Dy'd: They unanimously Elect'd Guy who was Nam'd Calixtus II. and their Election being confirm'd by the Cardinals who were at Rome, he was Consecrated by the Bishop of Ostia. The Elect'd Pope.

The Emperor Henry, who had been Excommunicated afresh by Conon in two Councils held in Germany, to skreen himself from these proceedings and to restore peace to Germany, held a Convention at Tri- bur, wherein it was propos'd to put an end to the difference between him and the Pope, by way of Accommodation. He promis'd to do it, and to go to the Council which the Pope had appointed to be held at Rheims on the 18th of October. In the mean time to prepare matters for the Peace, William of Champeaux Bishop of Chalons, and Pontius Abbot of Clugny, went to Strasburg to begin the Treaty. The Emperor demanded how he might put an end to this Affair without losing any thing of his Prerogative; to which the Bishop of Chalons reply'd, That if he were sincere in his desires of the Peace, it was requisite he should remit the Investitures, but that he would not thereby diminish the least of his Prerogative; because then the Case would be the same as it was in France, where, though the Bishops neither before nor after Consecration received their Investiture from the King, yet they were not thereby dispens'd from discharging their Duties to him, whether in paying Taxes, or contributing towards the Soldierly, or any other Dues whatsoever. The Emperor said, that he desired nothing more, provided, the Pope would do him Justice, and restore to his Subjects the Lands which they had lost during the War. These two Deputies having gain'd this Concession from the Emperor, went to wait upon the Pope who was hard by Paris, and propos'd the Business to him. He immediately sent the Cardinal Bishop of Ostia, and another Cardinal to finish the Treaty with him. They met the Emperor between Metz and Verdun, and agreed with him in Writing about the same things; and for a compleat consummation of this Affair, the Emperor promis'd to meet the Pope at Mouzon on the 24th of October. The Con- ference be- tween the Emperor and Wil- liam of Cham- peaux con- cerning In- vestitures.

The Council of Rheims open'd on the 21st of October. The Pope and Lewis King of France were personally present at it, and it consisted of fifteen Arch-Bishops, above 200 Bishops of France, Spain, Germany, and England, and a great many Abbots and other Ecclesiasticks. The Pope made a Dis- course on the Gospel for the Day, and Conon made another upon the Pastoral Care. In this Council, King Lewis prefer'd several Complaints against Henry King of England. Geoffrey Arch-Bishop of Roan undertook to answer him, but was forc'd to be silent by the Noise that arose in the Assembly. Afterwards Hildegarda Countess of Poitiers appear'd in the Council, and complain'd that her Husband had left her and marry'd another Woman. The Bishop of Saintes, and other Prelates of Aquitain undertook the Defence of their Prince, and excus'd him for not appearing because he was sick. The Pope accepted of this Excuse, and put off the Tryal of this Cause till another time. The Contest which afterwards was started between Audin Bishop of Eureux, and Amaury who had turn'd him out of that Bishoprick, rais'd a great Heat between the French and the Normans. The Pope to lay it, The Coun- cil of Rheims in the Year 1119.

A New Ecclesiastical History

it, made a Discourse on the Advantages of Peace and Unity, and declar'd that the Emperor had propos'd an Accommodation, and that he was to meet him at Mouzon to put an End to it; that he desir'd the Prelates to stay till his Return which should be very speedy. The Cardinals who had waited upon the Emperor, the Bishop of Chalons, and the Abbot of Clugny, gave an Account of their Negotiation to the Council.

The Negotiation between the Pope and the Emperor.

On the morrow the Pope took his Leave of the Assembly, recommended them to put up their Prayers and Wishes for the Peace, and the next day set out for Mouzon. He arriv'd there on the Thursday, and after he had conferr'd with the Prelates whom he had brought along with him, and read over again the Projects of the Accommodation, he sent the Deputies who had already commenc'd this Negotiation to the Emperor. That Prince at first deny'd that he had made any such promise; afterwards they debated how the Pope should receive him in giving him Absolution, but could come to no agreement. On the morrow the Emperor desir'd farther time, and the Pope perceiving that he sought to procrastinate the Business, retir'd to a Castle belonging to the Count of Troyes with an Intention of returning back again. The Emperor desir'd time till Munday, but the Pope would not grant it; and after he had order'd him to be told that if he were sincerely intent upon Peace, he was ready to grant it him either in or after the Council. He set out on Sunday Morning, and return'd with all expedition to Rheims. The next day being fatigued by his Journey, he could not stay long in the Council, he only gave them an Account of his Proceedings at Mouzon. On Tuesday he was not there at all, but on Wednesday he appear'd. At first they debated of a great many private matters, and afterwards the Pope publish'd five Canons.

The first was against the Simonical, who either bought or sold any Ecclesiastical Goods.

The second was against Investitures.

The Third against those who either seiz'd or detain'd the Revenues of Churches.

The Fourth against those who left them to their Heirs by way of Succession, and against the Priests who exacted Money for the Administration of the Sacraments, or for Burial.

And the fifth against the Priests, Deacons and Sub-deacons who had Wives or Concubines.

The Canon concerning Investitures made a great Noise in the Council. It was drawn up in these Terms: We absolutely forbid the receiving the Investiture of Churches or any other Ecclesiastical things from the hands of Laicks. Several were of opinion that this Canon thus express'd took away from the Ecclesiasticks the Tithes and Benefices which they held or receiv'd from Laicks, so that the Contest arising upon this Article, hinder'd the Council from determining any thing about it that day. On the Morrow the Pope remov'd this Difficulty by mending the Canon and drawing it up in these Terms. We absolutely forbid the receiving the Investiture of Bishopsricks and Abbeys from the hands of Laicks. Afterwards they brought in 427 Candles, which were given to the Assistants, who rose up and held them Lighted whilst the Pope solemnly Excommunicated the Emperor Henry, the Anti-pope Burdin and all their Adherents; He likewise declar'd all the Emperor's Subjects dissolv'd from their Oath of Allegiance to him, and forbad them to obey him, till he return'd to his Duty, and had made the Church satisfaction. Thus the Council broke up.

Calixtus II. is receiv'd into Rome and Burdin shamefully divested.

The next year Calixtus went into Italy, with a Design of going to Rome. He was joyfully receiv'd every where, and enter'd Rome as in Triumph. The Anti-pope Burdin being drove out of that City retir'd to Sutri, from whence he made several Excursions, to the very Gates of Rome. Calixtus to rid himself of this Enemy, went into Apulia to desire assistance from Duke William, and having rais'd a Considerable Army, he march'd to invest Sutri. The Inhabitants of this City perceiving they should be taken by Storm, seiz'd upon Burdin, and deliver'd him up to the Normans, who by way of derision cloath'd him with a Goat's-Skin, made in the form of a Cope, set him on a white Camel, with his face towards the Tail which serv'd him for a Bridle, and in this manner led him through the whole City, heaping affronts upon him. Afterwards he was shut up in a Castle, and confin'd in a Monastery of Cava, where he spent the rest of his days in a forc'd Penance.

The Treaty between Calixtus II. and Henry V.

After this Victory the Pope becoming absolute Master of Rome, where he caus'd the Forts of the Franchipani and of the other Favourers of the Emperor to be raz'd, sent an Ambassy to Adalbert Archbishop of Metz, a profess'd Enemy to the Emperor, and solicited him to stir up Saxony against that Prince. This Enterprize succeeded, and within a short time all Saxony revolted, and rais'd an Army against Henry, who likewise for his part rais'd some Forces: So that there would have been a bloody War in Germany; if the Lords on both sides had not agreed upon a Treaty of Peace, by which they agreed to restore to the Emperor what belong'd to him; that he should likewise restore to the Churches the Revenues which had been taken away from them; and send Deputies to Rome, to make up an Accommodation with the Pope. This Treaty was concluded at Wirtzburg in the year 1121. Bruno Bishop of Spires and Arnulphus Abbot of Fulda were chosen for this Deputation. They came to Rome, where they Negotiated this accommodation; and being agreed about it, the Pope sent Lambert Cardinal Bishop of Ostia, and two other Cardinals, who met with the Emperor Henry at Wormes in September 1122. and there concluded the Treaty between the Pope and Him. The Emperor remitted the Right of Investiture, which was given by the Ring and Crozier; and engag'd himself to leave to all the Churches within his Dominions, the Liberty of Elections and Consecrations; to restore to the Church of Rome all the Revenues which had been taken away from it since the Beginning of this Contest, whether under his Reign, or during the Reign of his Father; to restore likewise to other Churches, Princes and private persons as well Ecclesiasticks as Laicks all the Revenues which have been taken away from them; to Live in peace with the Church of Rome, and assist it, whenever it should have occasion. The Pope on his part granted to the Emperor that the Elections of Bishops and Abbots within the Kingdom of Germany should be made in his presence, without Simony and Force, upon Condition that in Case of any contest, he should favour him, who should be approv'd by the Metropolitan and the Bishops of the Province. He consented that the person who should be Elected, should receive the Royalties from the Emperor by the Sceptre, except of such things as belong'd to the Church of Rome, and should faithfully perform what he was bound to by Virtue of those Royalties: That the Prelates of the other States of the Empire, should likewise receive the Royalties at the Emperor's hands, within six Months after their Consecration. He likewise oblig'd himself to assist the Emperor on all occasions, and lastly granted absolution to him and all his Adherents. These Articles of Peace were solemnly publish'd in the Emperor's Camp, and within a short time that Prince was receiv'd into the Communion of the Church by the Pope's Legates, who carry'd this Treaty to Rome, where it was confirm'd in the general Council of the Lateran, held in the Year 1123. and publish'd in Rome. Thus ended the Quarrel about Investiture, which Lasted six and fifty Years, and which had caus'd so much disturbance to the Church and Empire. We shall farther illustrate this by some Reflexions on the Original and Use of Investitures.

Metre-

The Word Investiture signifies the Grant of any Fief, Territory, Dignity, Place of Trust, or Privilege, made by a Lord to his Vassal or Client, or by a Prince to his Subject, upon condition that he prove Faithfull to him, and do him all the Service and Duty requir'd of him. This Investiture was perform'd with certain Ceremonies, by putting into the person's hands to whom it was granted something as a Symbol or Sign of the Donation then made, such as a piece of Turf, a Staff, Green Boughs, the Ornaments or the Habits of the Dignity or Place of Trust, or other such like Tokens, which had resemblance to, or denoted the thing given. The Christian Church, which in the Primitive times had no other Goods than those of the Voluntary Oblations of the Faithful, or the Revenues of such Estates as had been bestow'd upon it by private persons, began in the time of Pepin, and Charlemagne to be possess'd of a great many Fiefs, with which those Princes enrich'd it. This render'd the Bishops and Abbots more considerable in the State, and engag'd them to take an Oath of Fealty and Homage to their Prince for the Fiefs which they held of him, to supply him with a Certain Number of Soldiers for the Wars, to go themselves thither in person, to concern themselves with the Affairs of the State, and to discharge the other Duties to which they were bound by virtue of the Fiefs and Dignities which they enjoy'd. According to Ancient Custom, after the death of those who had those Fiefs, the Lord of the Manner enter'd into the Possession of them and held them, till such time as the Heir or successor were invested anew, and had taken the Oath of Fealty and Homage. Upon this Account after the Death of a Bishop, the Princes and Lords enter'd into the Possession of his Fiefs, and held them till such time as the person elected in his stead had receiv'd Investiture from them, and had taken the Oath of Homage and Fealty. In process of time this Prerogative extended to all the other Revenues left by the Bishop, and the Princes granted indifferently the Investiture of all the Revenues of the Bishoprick to the person who was elected Canonically before he was Consecrated, but they never pretended by this Ceremony to confer any Spiritual Power or Mission to the Bishops. Some are of Opinion that this Right of Investiture was granted to Charlemagne by Pope Adrian, as 'tis related by Gratian Distinct. 63. Ch. Adrianus, which is taken out of the Chronicon of Sigebert of Gembloirs, wherein 'tis said that that Pope in a Council held at Rome in the Year 774. granted to Charlemagne the Right of Electing Popes, and order'd that all Arch-Bishops and Bishops within his Dominions should receive Investiture at his hands before they were Consecrated. But most of the Learned are perswaded that this matter of Fact is forged, because neither Eginard who wrote the Life of Charlemagne, nor any other Contemporary Author, make any mention either of this Grant, or of Charlemagne's, going to Rome this Year. This Constitution notwithstanding is cited by Leo viij. who renew'd it in favour of Otho 1. both with respect to the Election of the Pope, and to the Investiture of Bishops. But tho' we cannot found the Original of Investitures upon Gratian's Chapter intitled Adrianus, which is at least doubtful, yet we may be certain that this Custom commenc'd a long time before Otho, and soon after Charlemagne, and that it was observ'd not only by the Emperors, but likewise by the Kings of France and England, and by most of the other Christian Princes.

We are not certain what Ceremony was us'd at first in the Investiture of Bishops and Abbots; but 'tis very probable that they made use of the Crozier, or the Ring, the Marks and Tokens of their Dignity; as the Custom was with regard to secular Offices. We find in the Author of the Life of St. Romanus Arch-Bishop of Roan, that when this Saint, was Elected, the Great men about Court unanimously advis'd the King to approve his Election, and that that Prince ('twas Clovis 2. or his Father Dagobert) having conven'd the Bishops and Abbots, gave him the Pastoral Rod, in consequence whereof he was Consecrated. The Author of the Life of Aldric Bishop of Mans, tells us that after the Election of that Bishop made in the Year 832. Lewis the Gentle having taken the Pastoral Rod from the hands of Landrannus Arch-Bishop of Tours, the Metropolitan of Mans, gave it to Aldric, and in giving it to him, committed to him the Care and management of that Bishoprick. Glaber in the Life of King Robert, relates that that Prince desiring to gratify an Abbot who had presented him with a fine Horse, demanded the Crozier of him, and that having put it into the hand of our Saviour's Statue, bad the Abbot take it again, and by Virtue thereof to enjoy his Dignity, without any manner of Dependence. We find that in the tenth Century, this Custom was become Common in Germany, and that those who were instituted into Bishopricks, carry'd the Pastoral Rod, and the other Ensigns of their Dignity, even before they were Consecrated. Ivo of Chartres takes notice that the King had inducted him into his Bishoprick, by giving him the Pastoral Rod. However this Ceremony was not so general nor so necessary, but it was sometimes omitted, or supply'd by some other. Investiture might be given by Writing, or by word of Mouth, or even by a dumb sign. Several Authors tell us that the Emperor Henry II. confer'd the Bishoprick of Paderborne on Meinvercus, by presenting him with one of his Gloves. Let this Account be how it will, 'tis certain that 'tis a thing thing very indifferent with what Ceremony, or after what manner the Investiture was conferr'd. Yet there can be no question made but that commonly in granting the Investitures of Bishopricks and Abbeyes they made use of the Pastoral Staff, to which they afterwards join'd the Ring, because these were the Tokens and Ensigns of the Episcopal Dignity.

The Original and Progress of Investitures.

The Ceremonies us'd in Investitures.

The Beginning of the Contest about Investitures. When this quarrel about Investitures first began, it was not the Ceremony, but the thing it self which rais'd the Heat; and Gregory VII. in prohibiting Investitures, not only oppos'd those which were perform'd by the Pastoral Rod and Ring, but in general all manner of Investitures of Benefices granted by Laicks. The principal reason that induced him to prohibit them was, that it very much hinder'd the Liberty of Elections, and render'd Princes the Masters and sole Disposers of all Benefices. For when a person canonically Elected could not enjoy his Benefice, nor be Consecrated till he had receiv'd Investiture from his Prince, it was unavoidably requisite before they proceeded to an Election to know whether the Person they had an Eye to were agreeable to the Prince or no; and in case they Elected one who was not so, the Election would be Invalid. By this means it absolutely depended on the Will of the Prince to confer Bishopricks and Abbeyes on whomsoever he pleas'd. Oftentimes he granted them as a Reward for some Service done, or to the man who was the highest bidder. This was that Abuse which mov'd Gregory VII. absolutely to prohibit all Investitures of Benefices; and he carry'd it so high, as to forbid Bishops taking an Oath of Homage and Fealty to their Princes. Victor III. and Urban II. his Immediate Successors prohibited likewise in general all manner of Investitures. Ivo of Chartres tells us that Urban only forbad Princes the Corporal Investiture: but that he never prohibited them from concerning them with an Election to which they had a Right, as being Heads of the People, and that he had not taken away from them the Right of Concession. However that Pope in the Council of Clermont absolutely prohibited all Investitures, and even the Bishop's Oath of Fealty to their Prince.

The State of the Contest in the time of Paschal II. It was in the time of Pope Paschal II. that they began to have a more particular design upon the Ceremony of granting them by the Rod and Ring; and hence they rais'd a fresh Argument against Investitures, by looking upon those Ornaments as tokens of the Ecclesiastical Power appertaining to the Altar; from whence 'twas Concluded that the Prince in making use of this Ceremony seem'd to confer the Ecclesiastical Power. 'Tis thus that Paschal explain'd himself in the Conference which he held at Chalons with the Emperor's Deputies; and 'tis chiefly upon this Reason those men argu'd, who look'd upon Investitures as an Heresy worse than Simony. The Princes on their side urg'd to no purpose, that they did not pretend by this Ceremony to bestow any Spiritual Power: That their Intention was only to invest the Bishops, as they did the other Lords, with the Temporalities which belong'd to the Church by the Grants of Princes. But the Enemies to this Right to render it the more odious would perswade us that this Ceremony had another meaning. The Accommodation which was set on foot between Pope Paschal II. and the Emperor Henry V. entirely remov'd the Difficulty: For it took away from the Bishops all the Fiefs and other Temporalities which they possess'd by the Donation of the Emperors since Charlemagne, which were the only Ones for which the Princes could justly demand the Right of Investitures; but it divested the Churches of great, real and solid Goods, for a chimerical, fanciful Independance: The Bishops likewise did not relish this Accommodation, and so it came to nothing. The forc'd Concession of Investitures made by Pope Paschal was resent'd by some as an Heresy, and consider'd by others as a Dangerous Relaxation. There were some who would have it pals for a necessary Toleration, and others for a thing reasonable and Lawful.

The State of the Question under Calixtus II. In the Beginning of the Popedom of Calixtus II. the Difficulty seem'd to be reduc'd to the Ceremony of Investiture with the Ring and Rod: At least those who were concern'd in the Negotiation thought so. Henry V. was very ready to renounce this, provide it did not prejudice his Prerogative; and if the Bishops and Abbots would hold their Fiefs and Royalties of him; take to him the Oaths of Allegiance, and pay him all the Dues to which they were oblig'd by virtue of the Estates which they possess'd. But the Pope always insist'd upon a General Prohibition of Receiving any manner of Investiture or Ecclesiastical Benefices at the hands of Laicks; to which the Emperor would never consent. The French themselves would not admit this Prohibition to extend to Bishopricks and Abbeyes.

Remarks upon the Treaty concluded between Calixtus II. and Henry V. In short the last Accommodation made between Pope Calixtus and Henry was a great deal more Advantageous to the Princes than the Ecclesiasticks. For the Princes pretended to these three things. (1.) That no Election of Bishops or Abbots ought to be made without their Consent. (2.) That the Person Elected ought to receive Investiture with the Pastoral Rod and Ring before he was Consecrated. (3.) That he was oblig'd to take an Oath of Fealty to them, and do them Homage for the Fiefs and Royalties which were dependent on them. Now by this Treaty it was granted to them (1.) That the Elections of Bishops and Abbots should be made in their Presence and Consequently with their Consent. (2.) That in Germany the Bishop Elected shall be invested with the Royalties (that is all the Estates which he holds of the Crown, by the Sceptre, before his Consecration; and in the other States within six Months after his Consecration. (3.) It preserves to them all the Dues and Services to which the Bishops were oblig'd by Virtue of their Fiefs and Royalties. So that all the Alteration it made to the ancient Custom of the Emperors consisted (1.) In that it took away the Ceremony of Investiture by the Pastoral Rod and Ring, and order'd that it should be done with the Sceptre. (2.) That it restrain'd this Ceremony precisely to the Royalties, that is, to such Fiefs and other Estates which the Bishops held of the Crown. (3.) In that it permitted the Consecration of Bishops out of Germany before they had receiv'd Investiture, yet upon condition that they should receive it within six Months after.

The Treaty made between Pope Calixtus II. and the Emperor Henry V. was executed on both sides. The Execution of Lotharius, Henry's Successor, in the time of the Schism which was between Pope Innocent II. and his Adversary Peter de Leon, thought he had a favourable opportunity of re-entering upon the Right of Investiture. He made this Proposal in the Conference which he had with Pope Innocent at Liege, letting him know that he would not acknowledge him but upon this Condition. This very much startled the Roman Prelates, but Saint Bernard perswaded that Prince not to insist on this Pretension, and things remain'd in the same state wherein they were before.

This is what relates to the Empire: As to France the Kings had never any Contest with the Popes about Investitures: They enjoy'd them quietly even in the time of Gregory VII. who was not indeed pleas'd at it, but durst not fall out with France upon that Subject. Under the succeeding Popes the Kings of France left off giving Investiture by the Pastoral Rod and Ring, and were pleas'd to confer it by a Writing or by Word of Mouth; so that the Popes whose chief design was to abolish that External Ceremony, left them in the quiet enjoyment of their Prerogative.

This Affair made a greater Noise in England than in France: For S. Anselm willing to be conformable to the Decrees of the Popes against Investitures, refus'd to pay Homage and Fealty to the Kings. This Contest lasted a great many years, and neither the Popes, nor the Kings of England would yield the point: But at last they both conform'd themselves to the Regulation of Calixtus II.

The Right of Investitures was not the Peculiar Prerogative of Emperors and Kings; but Dukes, Counts and other Lords who had Bishopricks or Abbeys in their States, possessing Fiefs or Revenues in their Dominions, did likewise enjoy the same Right. Thus it appears by a Letter wrote by Gregory VII. to Radulphus Arch-Bishop of Tours, that the Counts of Bretagne had been in possession of the Right of granting Investitures to Bishops, since that Pope commends them for having receded from that Custom which they had so long enjoy'd, in compliance to the Holy See. Saint Anselm tells us likewise that Robert Count of Flanders had been us'd to invest the Abbots after their Election. Ivo of Chartres in several places takes notice, that Robert Duke of Normandy granted Investiture to the Bishops and Abbots of that Province. The Counts of Champagne, Anjou and Savoy had the same Custom, and even the petty Lords assum'd this Privilege to themselves: As the Lord of Rotrou, whom we find in the Charulary of St. Denys of Nogent, to have granted to Hubert the Investiture of that Abbey with the Crozier, so that when Gregory VII. and the other Popes condemn'd Investitures, this did not only Extend to Emperors and Kings, but likewise to Dukes Marquises, Counts, and in general to every Lay Person whether Man or Woman.

The Lateran Council which approv'd of the Treaty about Investitures, made between Pope Calixtus and the Emperor Henry, is that which is call'd the first general Lateran Council. It was held in March A. D. 1123. and compos'd of three hundred Prelates or thereabouts, according to the Testimony of Sugerus Abbot of Saint Denys, who was present at the Council, a more creditable Witness than the Abbot of Usserger, who reckons four hundred Twenty Six; and than Pandulphus who tells us of almost a Thousand. There were two and Twenty Canons made in this Council.

The First renews the Canons made against the Simoniackal, and ordains that all those who shall have obtain'd any Ecclesiastical Dignity for Money, shall be turn'd out of it.

The Second forbids the bestowing the Dignities of a Provost, Arch-Priest or Dean on any but Priests, or that of Arch-deacon on any other but Deacons.

The Third renews the Prohibitions made by the Laws of the Church against Clerks having Wives or Concubines, or to live with Women, excepting such as are exempted in the Canon of the Council of Nice.

The Fourth Imports that the Laicks, how pious soever they may be, shall not have the Disposal of the Revenues of the Church, and that this shall be Peculiar to Bishops, and declares those Princes and Laicks who shall attribute it to themselves Sacrilegious.

The Fifth renews the Prohibition of Marriages among Relations.

The Sixth declares the Ordinations made by the Arch-Heretic Burdin after his Condemnation, and those that had been made by the false Bishops whom he had ordain'd, to be Null and Void.

The Seventh Prohibits Arch-deacons, Arch-Priests, Provosts and Deans from giving any Benefices having the Charge of Souls, or Prebends, without the Consent and Approbation of the Bishop.

The Eighth pronounces an Anathema against any Person whatsoever who shall seize upon the Town of Benevento.

The Ninth renews the Prohibitions made in the Canons, against admitting those who had been Excommunicated by their Bishop to the Communion.

The Tenth prohibits the Consecrating of a Bishop, who has not been Elected Canonically.

The Eleventh grants remission of Sins to those who go to Jerusalem to aid the Christians against the Infidels, puts their Persons, their Families, and their Estates under the Protection of the Holy See; prohibits the offering any Violence to them under the Pain of Excommunication; and enjoins all those, who were Cross'd to go into the Holy Land, or into Spain, and who having chang'd their Minds, had laid aside their Cross, to take it up again, and go that expedition within a year under the Pain of Excommunication.

The Twelfth abolishes the Custom of seizing on the Estates of those who dy'd without Heirs.

The Thirteenth Orders that they shall be declar'd Excommunicated who shall violate the Truce enjoy'd for Certain Days.

The Fourteenth prohibits Laicks from seizing on any Oblations made to Churches, and from inclosing any Churches within the Bounds of Castles.

The Fifteenth is against Counterfeit Coiners.

The Sixteenth Excommunicates those who Rob or exact any Tribute from the Pilgrims who go to Rome or to any other Places of Devotion.

The Seventeenth prohibits Abbots and Monks, from admitting Sinners to Publick Penance, from visiting the Sick, from performing the Extream Unction, and from singing Solemn and publick Masses, and enjoyns them to receive from their Bishop the holy Chrism, the holy Oyls, and Ordination.

The Eighteenth enjoyns that the Curats shall be Established by the Bishops, and that no person shall receive a Church or Tenths from the hand of Laykes without the Consent of the Bishop.

The Nineteenth imports that the Monasteries shall continue to pay the Bishops the Services and Duties which they have paid them since the time of Gregory VII. and it takes away from Abbots and Monks the Right of claiming the Possession of Thirty years, in order to hold those Churches which belong to the Bishops.

The Twentieth provides for the Security of the Church Revenues.

The Twenty first does again prohibit Priests, Deacons, Sub-Deacons and Monks from having Wives or Concubines, and Declares the Marriages which they have contracted, Null. This is the Canon which expressly pronounces the Nullity of the Marriages of such Persons as are in holy Orders.

The Twenty second declares the Alienations of Church Revenues made by Bishops, Abbots, or any other Ecclesiasticks Null, and Void.

This is the Summary of what we have left of the general Lateran Council, held under Pope Calixtus II. who dy'd the Year after. To compleat the History of those three Popes already mention'd, we have nothing more to do, than to give you an Extract of the Letters which they wrote.

The Letters of Paschal II. Paschal II. was he who wrote most; of which a Collection is made of an hundred and seven, without reckoning the Fragments of several others which are to be met with in Gratian, and in the other Collectors of Canons.

In the First he congratulates those Persons of the Croisade in the Holy Land, for the Victories they had gain'd.

In the Second he confirms the Establishment of a new Monastery in the Diocess of Chalons, and the Treaty which had been made between the Religious of that Monastery and those of Molême by the Arch-Bishop of Lions according to the order he had receiv'd from Urban II.

In the Third he commends Saint Anselm Arch-Bishop of Canterbury for the Stedfastness he shew'd in standing up for the Rights of the Church.

In the Fourth directed to Bernard Arch-Bishop of Toledo, he confirm'd the Primacy of that Church.

The Fifth and Sixth are not two distinct Letters. The former of the two is only a fragment of the latter, whose inscription has been chang'd: It is directed to an Arch-Bishop of Poland, who scrupled to take an Oath to the Pope, in receiving the Pall. He therein magnifies the Dignity and Authority of the Church of Rome, and the Necessity of the Pall.

The Seventh is directed to Robert Count of Flanders, whom he commends for having executed his Orders touching the Church of Cambray; and whom he exhorts to persecute the Emperor Henry IV. and the Inhabitants of Liege, to whom that Prince was retir'd.

The Clergy of Liege having procur'd a Copy of this Letter return'd a very smart reply to it: Wherein they made it appear how contrary that Order which the Pope gave in this Letter of making War against them, was to the Spirit of the Church, and to the Charity which the Pope, the Common Father of all the Faithful, ought to bear towards all the Churches. They say that they could not tell how to believe that the Pope had approv'd of the Destruction of the Church of Cambray, and the Outrages which had been there committed, had they not learn'd from his own Mouth, that all this was done by his Order; without mentioning the dividing of that Bishoprick into two, and the Expulsion of Gautier who was Bishop thereof. They make mention of several Instances to prove that one ought not to make use of the Sword, or engage in a War to put the Sentences of Excommunication in Execution: That moreover they have done nothing which deserv'd either Death or Excommunication: That they were Excommunicated only because they had paid to their Lawful Sovereign the Respect which they ow'd him, according as they were oblig'd by the Law of God: That they are not Simoniackal, but on the Contrary avoid those who are so, and that they have no less abhorrence to those who pretending to give Ecclesiastical Graces for nothing, sell them under a pretence of Charity: That in fact they had not been Excommunicated by their Arch-Bishop, and that they suppos'd they had not been Excommunicated by the Pope, since he could not do it without hearing them first. That no one could say that they were Excommunicated, because they Communicated with their Bishop, who would not fail in his Duty towards his Prince, since therein that Prelate had done his Duty, and had greater Reason to fear the Curse which God had pronounc'd against those who obey'd not his Commandments, than that which some Popes have within a while invented against those who would not be Rebels to their Lawful Prince: That the Holy Fathers inform us that Kings ought not to be Excommunicated, or at least but very rarely: That according to Ancient Custom they stand to the Decisions of their Metropolitan and of their Provincial Synod, and they did not recognize those Legates à Latere, who ran from place to place to enrich themselves, and who reform'd neither Manners nor Discipline, but were the Cause of rising Churches and of the Wars: That they liv'd as Regular Clerks, according to the Rule of the Canon. Lastly, they inveigh'd against the Memory of Gregory VII. who was the first that stirr'd up the People against their Emperor, and was for extending the Spiritual Power of binding and unbinding even to Temporalities; which they prov'd to be contrary to the Maxims and Practice of the Popes his Predecessors.

The Eighth Letter of Paschal is directed to the Clergy and People of Bamberg, to whom he recommends Orto their Bishop Elect.

By the Ninth directed to Henry King of England he exhorts that Prince to renounce his Right of Investitures.

By the Tenth he advises Didacus Bishop of Compostella, to take care that his Clergy live regularly, to hinder forbidden Marriages, and not to suffer the Monks to live with the Nuns.

The Eleventh is the Bull of Canonization of Peter Bishop of Anagnia, by which he orders that his Feast should be celebrated on the third of August.

In the Twelfth directed to Gebehard Bishop of Constance, and to Oderick Bishop of Passaw, he determines that those who unwillingly converse with Excommunicated persons by necessity or in duty, are not liable to Excommunication.

By the thirteenth he cites the Laity and Clergy of Augsburgh, who accus'd their Bishop; and

By The fourteenth congratulates their being reconcil'd to him.

By the fifteenth he advises the Clergy and Laity of Arles to Elect another Arch-Bishop in the place of Gibbeline, who had been made Patriarch of Jerusalem.

In the sixteenth he congratulates S. Anselm for his being reconcil'd to the King of England, and grants him a Power of absolving those who had opposed the Decrees of the Holy See about the Investitures of Benefices granted by Laicks, or who had done Homage to the King for Ecclesiastical Preferments.

In the Seventeenth he advises Gerard Arch-Bishop of York to submit to the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury.

By the Eighteenth he writes to Baldwin King of Jerusalem, to subject all the Churches which shall be conquer'd by him to the Church of Jerusalem as their Metropolitan.

In the Nineteenth he grants this Privilege to Gibeline Patriarch of Jerusalem.

In the Twentieth, he declares to Bernard Patriarch of Antioch, that he did not thereby intend to prejudice his Rights.

In the Twenty first he orders Urraca, the Daughter of the King of Castile, to part from Alphonso King of Arragon her Kinsman in the third Degree.

The Twenty second is the Draught of a Bull which he had thought of making, according to the first agreement which he had made with the Emperor Henry V. whereby he enjoyns the Bishops and Abbots of Germany to abandon all the Fiefs and other Estates which they held of the Empire, upon Condition that the Emperor should make no pretension to the Estates which had not been bestow'd on the Church by the Emperor.

The Twenty third is written to John Cardinal Bishop of Frescati, to Leo of Verceil, and to other Cardinals, who were met at Rome to Cancel the Decree of Pope Paschal, whereby he had granted the Right of Investiture to the Emperor Henry.

In the Twenty fourth directed to Guy Arch-Bishop of Vienna, he himself cancels this Decree, and declares the Concession null and void.

In the Twenty fifth he advertises the Clergy of Augsburgh, that he had interdicted their Bishop five Years ago, upon the Complaints that had been prefer'd against him; and that since that Bishop never appear'd to clear himself of the Crimes laid to his Charge, he thought it not convenient to take off the Interdiction pronounc'd against him.

In the Twenty sixth, he refers this Affair to the Determination of Arnulphus Arch-Bishop of Mentz.

The Twenty seventh directed to the Chapter of Augsburgh does not at all agree with the two former: For he therein excuses the Bishop of Augsburgh, and refers his Affair to Guy Bishop of Coire; which has made Baronius suppose that it was surreptitious.

In the Twenty Ninth written to the Patriarch of Antioch, he renews the Declaration which he had formerly made; that by the Letter which he had written in favour of the Patriarch of Jerusalem, he did not pretend to prejudice the Rights of the Church of Antioch. He wrote the same thing to Baldwin King of Jerusalem by the Twenty Ninth.

In the Thirtieth he wrote word to Henry King of England that he would not meddle with the Rights and Privileges of the Church of Canterbury.

In the Thirty first directed to the same Prince he complains of their having turn'd Turstin Arch-Bishop of York out of his Church, without having observ'd any forms of Justice.

In the Thirty second written to Pontius Abbot of Cluny, he orders that in the Communion they should give the Bread and Wine apart, which was contrary to the Custom of Cluny, where sometimes they dip'd the Host in the Wine. However he excepts Infants and Infirm persons.

In the Thirty third he sent word to Daimbert Arch-Bishop of Sens, that he had Consecrated him who had been Elected Bishop of Paris without prejudicing the Rights of the Church of Sens.

By the Thirty fourth directed to Lambert Bishop of Arras, he confirms the Disunion which had been made by his Predecessor Urban II. of the Bishoprick of Arras, from that of Cambray; gives two Arch-Deaconries to the former, and orders it should enjoy all the Territories which depended on it formerly.

By the Thirty fifth he wrote word to the Bishops of the Provinces of Rheims, Sens, and Tours, that he had commission'd them with Lambert Bishop of Arras, to give King Philip Absolution, in case he would sincerely part with Berrarda. To this Letter is annex'd the Oath which that Prince and Berrarda took at Paris in the Year 1104. in the presence of those Bishops, to have nothing more to do with each other.

In the Thirty sixth he Commissions Daimbert Arch-Bishop of Sens to try the Difference which was between the Abbot of Vezelay and the Abbot of Flavigny.

The Thirty seventh is the Bull of the Legation of Gerard Bishop of Angoulême, in the Provinces of Bourges, Bordeaux, Auché, Tours and Bretagne.

In the Thirty eighth directed to Norigand Bishop of Autun, he confirms his Election, and orders that he shall freely enjoy all the Revenues of his Church.

The next written to Stephen Bishop of Autun contains some thing like the former.

The Six next Letters are directed to Saint Anselm Arch-Bishop of Canterbury. In the forty second he answers to several questions which that Arch-Bishop had proposed, especially about the Investitures of Churches, and he therein determines that a Bishop may receive Ecclesiastical Revenues from the hands of Laicks, who bestow them on the Church, provided it were within his own Diocess, but that he ought not to receive those which are in another Diocess, and that Abbots ought not to receive them but from the hands of Bishops: That one might not receive a Church from the King, as a Recompence of those Ecclesiastical Revenues which he had seiz'd upon: That an Ecclesiastick ought not to pay Homage to a Lay Prince: That the Sons of Priests may be admitted into Holy Orders: That it was better in case of extremity one should receive the Viaticum from the hands of a Married Priest, rather than not receive it at all.

In the forty sixth, he wrote word to the Clergy of Terrouane, that they ought not to suffer any Marry'd Clergy amongst them.

The forty seventh is a Privilege granted to the Monastery of St. Sophia near Benevento.

The forty eighth directed to Richard Arch-Bishop of Narbonne, is a confirmation of the Revenues and Privileges appertaining to that Arch-Bishoprick, with Prohibitions against making any attempts on them.

In the forty ninth he prohibits two Abbots from admitting into Communion two persons Excommunicated by the Arch-Bishop of Narbonne.

In the fiftieth directed to Rbotard Arch-Bishop of Mentz, he wrote against the Investitures of Churches, which Princes made with the Pastoral Rod and Ring. He therein renews the Decree of the Council of Placenza under Urban II. against the Clerks Ordain'd during the Schism, and refers to a Council to determine how they ought to proceed against Excommunicate and Schismatical persons who had procur'd themselves to be Ordain'd Bishops.

The fifty first is a Privilege granted to the Abbey of Vezelay.

The five next Letters are written in favour of that Abbey.

The fifty seventh and eighth confirm the re-establishment of the Bishop of Arras.

In the two next he nominates Umpires to decide the difference between the Clergy of Arras and the Monks of St. Vaast.

The next Letters to the seventy sixth are particularly in favour of the Abbey of Cluny. He grants that Abbot a Power of wearing the Mitre and the Crozier, and the Pontifical Habits: but forbids him to cause the Holy Chrism to be Consecrated in his Abbey.

In the seventy sixth he commends Orbo Bishop of Bamberg, for not accepting of that Bishoprick from the hands of the Emperor.

In the seventy seventh, he recommends to the Clergy of Paris, Gualon their Bishop, and exhorts them to joyn with him in the recovery and preservation of the Revenues of their Church. He therein prohibits the Great Prebendaries from exacting Homage from the Demi-Prebendaries.

The four next are directed to Guy Arch-Bishop of Vienna, Legate of the Holy See: In the first he confirms to him his Privileges: In the second and third he orders him to determine the difference which was between the Canons of Besancon and those of St. Stephen in the same City: And in the last he confirms what that Arch-Bishop had done in the Council of Vienna. The Contest between the Canons of St. John and St. Stephen of Besancon was about the Right of the Cathedral. The Pope had refer'd the Determination thereof to William the Predecessor of Guy; afterwards the Cause was heard at Rome: The Pope there order'd that in case the Canons of St. Stephen could prove that they had been in quiet possession of the right of the Cathedral for thirty years past, they should enjoy it without any more dispute. It was upon this and several other differences that their Cause was refer'd to the Arch-Bishop of Besancon, who having call'd a Council at Tornus, in the Year 1115. found that the Canons of St. Stephen produc'd very sorry Witneses to prove their Possession, and thereupon adjudg'd the Right to the Chapter of St. John. Pope Paschal was not satisfied with this Sentence, as appears by his third Letter written to Guy; but Calixtus II. confirm'd the Judgment of the Council of Tornus. But this did not put an end to the Dispute, till Cardinal Hugh united those two Churches by a Treaty concluded between them, An. Dom. 1253.

In the eighty fourth, he confirms the Limits granted to the Citadel of Velitra by Gregory VII.

In the eighty fifth, he wrote word to William Arch-Bishop of Melphi, that he put down the Bishoprick established in the Burrough of Lavella, and confirms the Privileges of the Church of Melphi.

In the eighty sixth directed to Guy Bishop of Pavia, he confirm'd the Rights and Privileges of the Church of Pavia.

Most of the following Letters are confirmations of Privileges.

The ninety sixth, ninety seventh, ninety ninth, the hundredth, hundredth and first and second are written to Henry King of England, and to St. Anselm about Investitures, and about the Prohibition made against admitting the Sons of Priests into Orders.

The next Letters are likewise directed to the same Persons, and have regard to the Affairs of England; such as the Institution of the Bishoprick of Ely, and the Translation of Radulphus from the Bishoprick of Rocheſter to the Arch-Bishoprick of Canterbury. In the ninety eighth directed to Osborn Bishop of Exon, he determines that he ought to allow the Monks to have a Church-yard within their Monastery to Bury their Dead.

These Letters are followed by several fragments of other Letters Attributed to this Pope, in the Collection of Gratian, several of which are against the Laicks who were for conferring the Investiture of Churches, Churches, or seiz'd on their Revenues; others about Tenths; some whereby the Monks were prohibited from claiming the Rights which belong'd to Bishops, or from exempting themselves from their Jurisdiction; and others against Marriages between Relations.

Pope Gelasius II. being but a short time on the Chair, wrote but a very few Letters.

In the first directed to all the Prelates of the Kingdom of France, he gives them to understand that the Emperor being unexpectedly come to Rome had drove him thence, and that afterwards he threatned to do him all the mischief he could, if he would not grant him what he desir'd. That he had return'd this Answer to him, that he was ready to determine the difference which was between the Church and the Empire, at Milan or at Cremona, about St. Luke's-day, by those whom God had appointed to be Judges in the Church: That notwithstanding this proposal, he had set on the Chair Maurice Arch-Bishop of Brague, Excommunicated by his Predecessor Pope Paschal: That thanks be to God the Emperor had not been favour'd by any of the Romans in this his proceeding; but only by those of the Faction of Guibert. He exhorts the Prelates of that Kingdom to find out ways of vindicating the Honour of the Church.

The Letters of Gelasius
II.

The second directed to Bernard of Toledo, is upon the same Subject.

In the third he exhorts the Clergy and Laity of Rome to have no Correspondence with Maurice the Intruder, who was both Perjur'd and Excommunicated.

In the fourth, he Congratulates Gautier Arch-Bishop of Ravenna, his being advanc'd to that Arch-Bishoprick, and the re-union which he had procur'd between that Church and the Holy See; in pursuance whereof, he restores to the Arch-Bishoprick of Ravenna all the Bishopricks of Emilia, which had been taken away from it during the Schism, and granted him the Pall.

In the fifth he recommends to the Christians who were at the Siege of Saragossa to receive him whom he had Consecrated Arch-Bishop of that City, and grants Indulgences to all who should Die in that Expedition.

The sixth and seventh are Privileges granted to the Abbey of Cluny.

Calixtus II. wrote more Letters.

By the first he informs Adalbert Arch-Bishop of Mentz of his Election to the Popedom.

The second is a confirmation of the Constitutions of the Order of Cisterciens.

The third is a Confirmation of the Privileges, Rights, and Revenues of the Church of Vienna.

The fourth is written to the Bishops of France, about the taking of Maurice Burdin.

The fifth is a Congratulatory Letter to the Emperor Henry V. upon the Conclusion of the Treaty which he had made with the Holy See about Investitures.

By the sixth he confirms the Privileges of the Church of Brague.

By the seventh and eighth those of the Church of Bamberg.

By the ninth and tenth those of the Abbey of Vendome.

In the eleventh, he refers to the Bishop of Langres a difference which was between the Monastery of St. Peter the Lively of Sens, and the Abbots of Molesm, and of St. Remy of Rheims.

The next are written in favour of the Chapter of St. John of Besançon, to whom he adjudg'd the Right of the Cathedral.

The four next are Privileges granted to the Abbey of Tornus.

The twenty first and second are other Privileges granted to the Abbey of Cluny.

The twenty third is a Letter of Compliment to King Lewis the Gross, to whom he recommends his Legat.

The twenty fourth is directed to Gerbert Bishop of Paris: He therein orders that all the Churches and Abbeys of his Diocese shall be subject to him, and that the Canon of his Church who had been made a Bishop, shall no longer hold his Prebend.

In the twenty fifth, he permits a certain Lord of Germany to found a Monastery; upon Condition, that the Revenues which he bestow'd should be under the Protection of the Holy See, to which that Monastery should give every fourth Year an Albe and some white Vestments; and that neither he nor his Successors should have any thing to do with what related to the Monastery.

In the twenty sixth and seventh, he approves the Institution of the Regular Canons in the Churches of Benriad and Berchgetesgaden.

By the twenty eighth, he Establishes Gerard Bishop of Angoulême, his Legat in the Provinces of Bourges, Bordeaux, Auche, Tours, and Bretagne.

In the twenty ninth directed to the Bishops of Orleans and Paris, he confirms the Prohibitions made by his Legat against Celebrating Divine Service, where-ever William the Son of Count Robert, who had Marry'd the Daughter of the Count Angers his Kinsman, should be.

In the thirtieth directed to Pontius Abbot of Aniana, he adjudg'd to that Abbot a Priory, which was Contested between him and the Arch-Bishop of Arles; and the Monks of the Abbey of la Chaise-Dieu.

In the thirty first and second, he order'd that those who pillag'd the Revenues of the Village of Mongodin, belonging to the Chapter of Masçon, shall be Excommunicated.

In the four next, he confirms the Primacy of the Arch-Bishoprick of Toledo.

To these Letters is annex'd a Letter of Lewis the Gross, directed to that Pope, as an Answer to that which he had sent into France upon the taking of Burdin; wherein, after he had declar'd to him the Joy he conceiv'd at this Success, he returns him thanks for having superseded for a while the Sentence pass'd against the Arch-Bishop of Sens, in favour of the Arch-Bishop of Lions, and desires he would be pleas'd wholly to revoke it, observing to him that he had laid this business very much to heart; and would expose himself and his Kingdom to the utmost dangers, rather than put up such an Affront. He puts his Holiness in mind of the great services which the Kings of France had always done to the Holy

Holy See, and of those which in a particular manner he had done for him by being present at the Council of Rheims, wherein he had more regard to the Honour of the Holy See than to his own Interest. He conjur'd him as an acknowledgment of those good turns, that he would be pleas'd to preserve the Church of Sens in its Ancient Liberry, which could not be taken away from it by a Privilege granted by Stealth, and without his knowledge, to the Arch-Bishop of Lions.

The four Sermons upon St. James attributed to Calixtus II. Publish'd by Mariana, and inserted in the Bibliotheca Patrum, are supposititious pieces, and unworthy of that Pope.

C H A P. III.

The History and Letters of the Popes, Honorius II. Innocent II. Celestine II. Lucius II. and Eugenius III.

Honorius II. P O P E Calixtus being Dead, Leo Franchipani forbid the Cardinals to proceed to a New Election till three days after, under pretence, that they might have time sufficient to deliberate on the Choice they were to make, and to consult the Canons, relating to Elections thereupon. Franchipani's design was to get Lambert Bishop of Ostia Elected; the People were for the Cardinal of St. Stephen, whom Franchipani seem'd also to favour: But, the Cardinals casting an eye upon Thibaud, Priest and Cardinal of St. Anastasius, gave their Votes for him, and would have Proclaim'd him Pope under the Name of Celestine II. When in the mean time Leo Franchipani, observing the People were against this Election, propos'd to them the aforesaid Lambert; who was soon after Proclaim'd by the common suffrage of the Clergy and People, was Clothed in his Pontifical Habit, and Nam'd Honorius II. Nevertheless, the better to gain the Cardinal's Approbation, in few days after he threw off his Papal Ornaments in their presence; which won so extremely upon them, that they were soon brought to acknowledge him and confirm his Election. He Govern'd Peaceably and Prudently the Holy See for five Years and two Months. In the Year 1125, he Excommunicated Frederic and Conrade, Nephews to the Emperor Henry V. who would have seiz'd upon the Empire, and who made War upon Lotharius. In 1127 he declar'd War himself against Roger Count of Sicily, who pretended to have a right to the Dutchies of Calabria and Apulia Independant from the Pope. The Year after he Excommunicated this Prince, and Dy'd the 14th of February, in the Year 1130.

Innocent II. After the Death of Honorius II. the Cardinals that were then present, on the same day Elected Gregory Cardinal of St. Angelo, who was then Nam'd Innocent II. At the same time Cardinal Peter of Leon, formerly a Monk of the Abbey of Cluny, caus'd himself to be Elected, under the Name of Anacletus, by another Faction of Cardinals. The Party of Cardinal Peter was by much the stronger, which oblig'd those that were for Innocent to retire to strong Holds, and afterwards to fly with that Pope to the City of Pisa. This occasion'd Innocent to come into France, where an Assembly of Prelates was held on his account at Etampes, in the Year 1130. to which St. Bernard was sent. He spoke very notably in favour of Innocent, and his Opinion was follow'd by the whole Council. This Pope being thus acknowledg'd by France went immediately thither, and was splendidly receiv'd at Orleans by King Lewis the Gros, and several Bishops that came to wait on that Prince. From thence he set forwards to Chartres, where Henry I. King of England acknowledg'd him likewise. He had not long after the Approbation and Consent of the Emperor Lotharius, whom he went to meet at Liege in the beginning of the following Year. This Prince receiv'd him very honourably, but however he would needs make use of this occasion to get the Investitures restor'd. This very much surpriz'd the Romans, and St. Bernard labour'd all he could to dissuade the Emperor from insisting on such a Demand.

At the breaking up of this Conference, the Pope held a Council at Rheims, at which he Crown'd King Lewis the Younger, in the Room of his Brother Philip, then lately dead. After this Council was over he made some short stay at Auxerre and thence return'd into Italy, having first comply'd with Lotharius, who thereupon promis'd to march to Rome and Re-Establish him in the Papal Chair. Upon this Lotharius kept punctually to his word; came to Rome; put Innocent in possession of the Palace of Lateran, and in recompence was Crown'd Emperor by this Pope in the Year 1133. But, notwithstanding, all this; Peter of Leon and his Party, being become Masters of all the Strong Holds in and about Rome, and Lotharius likewise being Oblig'd to Return home, Innocent was constrain'd to retire a Second time to Pisa, where he call'd a Council in the Year 1134. The Church of Milan soon came under the Obedience of Innocent II. thro' the perswasion of St. Bernard and the Legates which this Pope had sent thither. But the Province of Guienne declar'd for Peter of Leon thro' the Subtily of Gerard Bishop of Angoulesme, who had perswaded William Duke of this Province that this was the Rightful Pope, and who for recompence was made Legate in conjunction with Giles Cardinal Bishop of Frescati: These condemn'd William Bishop of Poitiers, caus'd him to be driven out of his Diocess and placed another in his Room. They likewise dispossels'd the Bishop of Limoges and instated Ranulphus of Duras in his See. Hereupon St. Bernard and Geoffrey Bishop of Chartres, went to Guienne and conferring with the Duke at Pontigni, easily inclin'd him to own Innocent for Pope, But whereas he would by no means consent to the Re-establishment of the Bishops that had been suspended, St. Bernard to surmount his Obstinacy, took the blessed Sacrament and carrying it to the Place where the Duke was, conjur'd him in the Name of Jesus, and with such terrible words that the frightened Duke fell flat upon the Ground and was forc'd to be reconcil'd to the Bishop of Poitiers.

The

The Bishop of Angoulême, who had also possess'd himself of the Arch-Bishoprick of Bordeaux, dy'd some small time after, whereby the Schism was entirely suppress'd in Guienne. Roger Duke of Sicily was now the only Prince that continu'd in the Interest of Peter of Leon, and this by reason that he had receiv'd the Title of King from him, and moreover was in possession of that part of the Patrimony of St. Peter which lay in the Province of Benevento which he had no mind to restore to the Holy See. Yet Duke Ranulphus having defeated him in a signal Battle, prevented his attempting any thing against Pope Innocent. Peter of Leon dy'd in the Year 1138. A little while after his death, those of his Party plac'd in his stead the Cardinal Gregory to whom they gave the name of Victor, but this Person finding his side too weak to hold out against Innocent, came and publicly surrender'd his Pretensions to him in the Year 1139. Afterwards Innocent held a Council at Lateran, in which the Favourers of Peter of Leon were solemnly condemn'd, and the Ordinations made by this Pope declar'd Null and Void. Some time after Innocent was taken by Duke Roger which occasion'd the Agreement afterwards made between them. This Pope dy'd the 24 of September in the Year 1143. The same day Guy a Priest and Cardinal of St. Mark was chosen Pope by the Cardinals, and proclaim'd under the name of Celestine II. He had no Competitors in his Election, but his Pontificate was of no long continuance, for Celestine he dy'd 5 Months and a few days after, on the Eighth of March in the Year 1144. He was succeeded by Gerard Cardinal of the Holy-Cross, who took the name of Lucius II, whose Pontificate was very much molested by the War with Roger Duke of Sicily, with whom nevertheless he at length made a Truce, and by the Revolt of some Italians who had a mind to Assert the Authority of their Senators that were Assembled in the Capitol. This Pope dy'd of Grief as some will have it, but as others say, he was kill'd by the fall of a Stone about the End of the first Year of his Pontificate, the 26th of February in the Year 1145.

Bernard, Native of Pisa, Abbot of St. Anastasius and Disciple of St. Bernard was chosen in his place by the Cardinals under the Name of Eugenius III. This Pope the People would have Oblig'd before his Consecration to have confirm'd the Sovereignty of the Senators, to avoid doing which he retir'd to the Monastery of Forfu where he was proclaim'd and Consecrated Pope. Some time after his Consecration he retir'd to Rome, where he liv'd for a while in a strong hold; but at length, not thinking himself in sufficient Security, he retir'd to Viterbe. He was no sooner gone but Jordanes, who had taken upon him the Quality of a Patrician, made himself master of Rome, Pillag'd all the Cardinals and Great Mens House that would not submit to his Government, Built divers Citadels in the City, and also made one of the Church of St. Peter. Against him, Eugenius pronounc'd the severest Anathemas and by the Assistance of the Militia of Tivoli forc'd the Italians to make Peace, to abolish the Dignity of Patricius, and to receive a Præfekt and Senators which he should depute to govern them in his Absence. This Agreement being Concluded, he return'd to Rome, and kept the Feast of Christmas there; but the Romans being unmindful of the Articles of the Peace, and given to Rebel, Eugenius was forc'd to get away secretly to Tivoli, whence he retir'd to Pisa and from thence into France in the Year 1147. He was there kindly receiv'd by King Lewis and had several Councils in favour of the Croissade, and continu'd above a Year in that Country. He return'd into Italy towards the End of the Year 1148. where after having undergone divers fatigues of War, he at length became Master of the Church of St. Peter in the Year 1150. He dy'd at Tivoli the Ninth of July in the Year 1153. His Body was carry'd to Rome and Interr'd in St. Peter's Church.

The Letters of these Popes contain nothing very remarkable.

Honorius II. has writ but very few.

His first was upon occasion of the Death of Pontius a Monk of Cluny who dy'd out of his Abbey. He gives Peter the Venerable Abbot of Cluny, to Understand that he had bury'd him in holy Ground out of respect to that Abbey whereof he had formerly been Monk.

And by the Tenth, he enjoyns St. Bernard to warn the said Count from exacting any thing from the aforesaid Abbey.

The Letters of Eugenius III. are in a far greater number.

Eugenius
III.

THE First Address'd to Lewis King of France, is an exhortation to the Croisade, to encourage the re-taking the City of Edesse, with all others that had been Conquer'd, and in a word, to defend the Holy-Land from Invasion. He therein confirms all the Privileges granted to the Knights of the Cross.

Cross by his Predecessor Urban, and moreover puts their Wives, Children and Estates under protection of the Churches and Bishops; then he prohibits any Process being issu'd out in prejudice of the said Knights till they were either Dead or return'd from their Voyage. Next, his Will is, that they be paid Interest for the Money they had, Permits them to Mortgage their Estates to the Churches without equity of Redemption; warns them not to be at a needless charge about unprofitable Equipage, but to lay the most part out in Arms, Horses and other Instruments of War. And lastly, he grants them Remission and Absolution of all their Sins, which they shall have Confessed with an humble and contrite Heart.

By the Second directed to Thibaud, Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, he Commands and Provides that the Bishop of St. David's shall be subject to the See of Canterbury, and likewise requires the two said Bishops's Attendance at Rome the Year following, on St. Luke's day, that he may Judge farther of the matter.

He therein also speaks of the Excommunication of the Duke of Lorrain, and of a favour which this Abbot had request'd of him for a certain Church.

The Thirteenth is likewise written to Sugerus: He therein exhorts him to place the Monks of St. Martin in the Fields, in the Church of St. Genevieve; and accordingly gives the Canons of the said Church notice thereof in the Letter following. But however, having afterwards alter'd his mind, he orders in the Fifteenth the Regular Canons to be receiv'd in stead of the Monks, which was speedily obey'd by Sugerus, as he gives his Holiness to understand, and which the Pope approves of by the Sixteenth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth, and Twentieth Letters, all written to Sugerus.

The Seventeenth is writ to the same, relating to him that had been chosen Bishop of Arras, notwithstanding an Appeal made to the Holy See.

In the Twenty first, he gives this Abbot to understand that Lewis King of France is return'd from the Holy-Land, and Arriv'd in Sicily.

In the Twenty Second, he exhorts the said Abbot to govern the Kingdom of France with Fidelity during the King's Absence. And moreover, acquaints him that he has written a Letter to the Arch-Bishops, and Bishops of that Kingdom, by which, he Commands them to Excommunicate all those that disturb the publick Tranquility, and likewise Commands the said Abbot to convene the Prelates of the Kingdom to provide whatever shall be necessary for the good of the State.

The Twenty third is the same mention'd before, written to the Arch-Bishops and Bishops of France.

The Twenty fourth relates to a particular Affair of two Priests of Meaux accus'd by Gesslin whose cause he refers to Sugerus.

By the Twenty fifth, Twenty sixth, and Thirtieth, he also refers to Sugerus the Judgment pronounc'd against a Priest of the Diocess of Sens who had been depriv'd of his Benefice by the Arch-Deacon for having refus'd to give him such Sums as he demand'd.

By the Twenty seventh, he also refers to the said Abbot the difference between Fosselin Canon of Meaux and another Ecclesiastick.

By the Twenty eighth, he exhorts the same Abbots to redeem the Treasure of St. Genevieve which had been pawn'd.

In the Twenty ninth, he speaks to him concerning the Croisade of King Lewis.

In the Thirty first, he desires him to relieve the Church of St. Medard of Soissons, from which Count of Soissons demand'd a great Sum.

In the Thirty second, he thanks him for his Care of the Churches of the East, and moreover recommends to him the re-establishment of Religion in the Church of Campiegn.

The Thirty third is Address'd to Stephen King of England, whom he desires not to use the Bishop of London ill, though he had refus'd to take the Oath of Fidelity to him. He recommends the same matter to Maud Queen of England by the Thirty fourth Letter.

The following Letters to the Sixtieth, concern the differences which Pontius Abbot of Vezelay had with Count Nevers, and the Bishop of Autun, concerning the Immunities and Privileges of his Abbey. Eugenius III. takes this Abbot's part very strongly, and writes in favour of him, to several Princes and Bishops.

The Sixty first is written to Eberhard Bishop of Bamberg, whom he Commands to retain the Regular Canons Establish'd in the Church of Hildesheim by Gebehard Bishop of Eichstat, and to drive out the Secular Canons which the Arch-Bishop of Mayence had introduc'd there. He writes about this matter to the said Arch-Bishop in the following Letter.

The Sixty third is the Title of the Re-Establishment of the Bishoprick of Tournay written to the Clergy and People of that City, by which he gives them to understand that he has ordain'd for their Bishop, Anselm Abbot of St. Vincent of Laon, enjoining them to receive him, and consequently promises to dispense with their Oath of Fidelity which they should have taken to the Bishop of Noyons. By the following Letter he acquaints Lewis VII. King of France with the Re-Establishing of this Bishoprick and recommends to him the Person that he had Ordain'd Bishop of Tournay.

The Three following Letters are written to Moses Arch-Bishop of Ravenna concerning him that had been Elected Bishop of Placenza, and who ought to have been Consecrated by this Arch-Bishop his Metropolitan.

In the Sixty eighth he severely reprimands Samson Arch-Bishop of Rheims for having Crown'd the King of France in the City of Bourges to the Prejudice of the Arch-Bishop of that City, whereupon he Orders him to restore to the Church of Bourges the Offerings and Gifts which he had receiv'd upon that Occasion, Interdicts him the Pallium, and moreover Cites him to Rome together with the other Bishops who had Assisted at that Coronation.

The Sixty ninth contains his Grant and Confirmation of the Arch-Bishop of Bourges his Primacy over the Provinces of Bourges and Bourdeaux.

By the following Letter he commands the Bishop of Saintes to permit a new Church to be Built at Rochelelle.

The Seventy first is a Confirmation of the Constitutions and Privileges and of the Order of White Friars.

The Seventy Second with the following till you come to the 83 and last, are Address'd to the Bishops of Spain Relating to the Primacy of Toledo.

There are also three Letters of Eugenius III. wherein he commands the Abbots of St. Pont, and de Grace to present to the Arch-Bishop of Narbonne the Priests which they have a mind to place in Curacies belonging to them, to the End that they might receive their Orders from him and pay him accordingly their First Fruits and Oblations.

Monfieur Baluze in his II Tome of Miscellanies, has given us a Letter of this Pope's written to the Bishops of Reggio and Foro-Julio, whereby he forbids the said Bishops to exact any thing from the Church of Baryole, since it was under protection of the Holy Sec. He also Excommunicates the Bishops of these Diocesses for having Interr'd Excommunicated persons in Consecrated Ground.

There is also a Privilege in favour of the Bishops of the Province of Bourges, whereby Eugenius confirm'd the Liberty granted them by the Kings of France, and which had been approv'd by the Popes, Innocent and Lucius, which was that they might be Elected without being Oblig'd to do Fealty or Homage to the Papal-Chair.

The Letters of Anacletus II. the Anti-Pope.

To the Letters of these Popes we may here Add those of Anacletus II. the Anti-Pope, which have been lately publish'd by Christianus Lupus, at the End of his Collection of Letters printed at Louvain in the Year 1682. They are in all 38, whereof the most considerable have been written about his Election, which he maintains to have perform'd according to Custom; and with the Unanimous Consent of the Clergy of Rome. He there Accuses Aimeric Chancellor of the Church of Rome to have been the Cause of his Adversaries being Elected, and of the Troubles which Ensue'd. These Letters are writ in a good stile, and with some sort of Elegance and Force.

CHAP. IV.

The Life of St. Bernard together with his Works.

The Life of Bernard.

Saint Bernard was Born in the Year 1091. at Fontaine a Village of Burgundy whereof his Father, call'd Feschelin, was Lord. His Mother, nam'd Alethe Daughter to Count Montbart, had 7 Children, six Boys and one Girl, all which she Educated very discreetly and piously. St. Bernard was very much inclin'd to Virtue from his Infancy, and took betimes a resolution to retire from the World. He also engag'd all his Brothers and several Friends in the same Resolutions, who after they had liv'd for some time retir'd in their own houses, in the year 1113. met together and went to Cisteaux, there to enter into a Monastical Life. This Monastery is Situated in the Diocess of Chalons about Five Leagues from Dijon. It had been Built about 15 Years before, in 1098. by Robert Abbot of Molefine who retreated thither with about one and Twenty Monks, who all embrac'd an Austere and Rigid Life. But in the Year following Robert being Oblig'd by the Pope's Order to return to Molefine, Alberick Prior of Cisteaux, was made Abbot who dying in 1109. Steven Hardingue became the Third Abbot. He Govern'd this Monastery, reduc'd to a small Number of Monks by reason of the Austere of their Lives, when St. Bernard and 30 of his Companions came into it. This extremely augmented the Zeal of this Order which then began to encrease; for the first year after the Abby of la Trête, first Daughter of Cisteaux, was founded near la Grone in the Diocess of Chalons. The year following there was another Establish'd at Pontigni four Leagues from Auxerre, and in the year year 1115. those of Clairvaux and Morimond were founded in the Diocess of Langres. Abbot Stephen sent St. Bernard and his Brothers to that of Clairvaux. He chose, although he was very Young, to govern this Monastery. He was Consecrated Abbot by William de Champeaux Bishop of Chalons, by reason of the Vacancy of the Episcopal See of Langres. The Reputation of St. Bernard's singular Piety, and the strict Manner of living in his Monastery, drew People from all parts to be Admitted of it. Insomuch that in a little time several Monks went out thence to Establish themselves in other Monasteries where they liv'd according to the same Rule. That of the Three Fountains was first founded in the Diocess of Chalons in the year 1118. That of Fontenay a little while after in the Diocess of Autun in the Year 1121. Next there was one Establish'd at Foigny in the Diocess of Laon, and that of Igny in the Diocess of Rheims, and Lastly the fourth Off-spring of Clairvaux was founded in the year 1127. All these Monasteries had for their first founders the Monks of Clairvaux, who were all Abbots successively. But St. Bernard had a general supervisorship over all the rest. The Learning and Virtues of this Saint were too bright to continue long hid within the Walls of a Cloyster, for they quickly render'd him so famous in the Church that nothing of Moment pass'd there wherein he was not Employ'd. He was call'd to the Councils of Troyes and Chalons, held by Matthew Cardinal Bishop of Albani: The first in the year 1128. and the second in 1129. The Schism and Factions which hapned in the Church of Rome after the Death of Pope Honorius II. between Innocent and Peter of Leon, gave a great deal of Trouble to St. Bernard who was the principal Defender of Innocent for eight years together. The King of France before he would declare for either of these Competitors assembled a Convocation of his Prelates at Etampes to examine which of the two had the greater Right. To this Assembly St. Bernard was call'd, and the sole Decision of so important a matter refer'd to his Judgment. Whereupon he gave his Opinion for Innocent II. and all the Assembly acquiesced in it. This Pope being thus acknowledg'd by France, posited thither with all imaginable diligence, and St. Bernard waited on him all along during his stay there. He carry'd him from Orleans to Chartres where he perswaded Henry King of England to Acknowledge him. From thence he follow'd this Pope into Germany, and was present at the Conference his Holyness had with the Emperor at Liege. He there spoke with a great deal of freedom to this Prince, perswading him to alter his resolutions of requiring the Pope to re-establish Investitures. At his Return from Liege, His Holyness held a Council at Rheims in the year 1131. which when ended he retir'd to Auxerre, after having Visited Cluny and Clairvaux, which did not go in Procession before him clad in splendid Ornaments, but cloath'd in Course Cloath, carrying a homely Crucifix and singing leisurely and modestly Hymns and Anthems. The year following St. Bernard accompany'd the Pope into Italy, and brought over to him both the Pisatines and Genoeses. At length he came with him to Rome, whence he was not long after sent into Germany, to make Peace between Conrade and Lotharius. Having happily Negotiated this Affair he was recall'd to Pisa, whither the Pope was forc'd to retire a second time. St. Bernard Assisted at the Council which his Holyness held in this City in the Year 1134, after the Conclusion of which the Pope sent him to Milan to reconcile the Milaneze to the Church of Rome. He sent also along with him two Cardinals in quality of Legates, Guy Bishop of Pisa, and Matthew Bishop of Albani, and this to the end that they might purge the City of Milan of the Schism which Anselm a favourer of Peter of Leon had spread there, and bring back all that were stray'd from the Church of Rome. St. Bernard took also along with him Geoffrey Bishop of Chartres to Advise with upon occasion. The Milaneze who had long desir'd St. Bernard should come among them, met him before he came to the City, and receiv'd him with all imaginable Respect and Honour, so that by his means the Church of Milan was soon brought over to the Obedience of the See of Rome. After this St. Bernard return'd into France, but he was no sooner got there, but he was forc'd to leave his Monastery to go to Guienne with the Pope's Legate, to reduce the Duke of that Province to the Obedience of the Holy See, and to re-establish the Bishops of Poitiers and Limoges who had been Expuls'd. He Overcame the Obstnacy of this Prince by an Action of surprizing Boldness, for when he saw the Dukes resolution, not to restore the Bishop of Poitiers, was inflexible, he went to perform the Divine Office, and as soon as the Consecration was over, he plac'd the Wafer upon the Chalice, walk'd out of the Church and with Eyes full of fury and a terrible Meen he accosted the Duke after this manner. Hitherto (Quoth He) *We have Pray'd and Pray'd, and you have still slighted us. Several Servants of God who were present at the Assembly, have Join'd their Prayers with ours, yet you have never minded them. Now therefore the Son of God, who is the Lord and Head of that Church which you persecute, is come in Person, to See if you will Repent. Here is your Judge at whose name every Knee bends both in Heaven, Earth and Hell. Here is the Just revenger of your Crimes into whose hands this Obstinate Spirit of yours shall one day fall. Will you despise and flout at him? Will you be able, think you, to slight him as you have done us his Servants? Will you. Here the Duke not being able to hear any more, fell down in a Swoun; whereupon St. Bernard took him up and commanded him forthwith to be reconcil'd to the Bishop of Poitiers, which the poor Astonish'd Prince immediately condescended to; so that the Bishop was quickly after restor'd and all Schism abolish'd in that Province. In the year 1137. he was recall'd into Italy by the Pope to quell the remaining Party of Peter of Leon. He went thither and after having brought over several to Pope Innocent's side, he was deputed to Roger Duke of Sicily, who was then the only Prince that continu'd to support Peter of Leon, there to Defend his Matter Innocent against Cardinal Peter of Pisa who was to Oppose him. He enter'd into a Conference with this Cardinal, and soon made him change his Opinion and Party. After Peter of Leon's Death, the Person that was intended to succeed him in his attempt, came to beg of St. Bernard that he would Intercede to Pope Innocent for his Pardon. Peace by these means being restor'd to the Church of Rome, and Schism entirely extirpated, St. Bernard return'd to his Monastery of Clairvaux, and after his arrival sent the Pope some of his Monks to Inhabit the Monastery of St. Anastasius newly re-built. One of these call'd *Bernard ward, formerly Official of the Church of Pisa, was chosen for their Abbot, who afterwards came to be Pope under the name of Eugenius III. after the Death of Celestine and Lucius, successors to Innocent II. both who liv'd no long time. It was about this time that St. Bernard disputed with Abaelard, a Famous Philosopher of the University of Paris, at the Council of Sens in the year 1140. He had often sent to him privately to correct his Errors, maintain'd in his Books, but this Obstinate Author neglecting so to do, and Appealing to the Arch-Bishop of Sens, St. Bernard was sent to the Council held there, whether he went though against his will. Abaelard not daring to support his Errors, Appeal'd to the Pope, but his Doctrine being condemn'd by this Council, he retir'd to Cluny; where after having renounc'd his sentiments, he Dy'd in the Communion of the Church of Rome. Under the Pontificate of Eugenius III. St. Bernard was desir'd to Preach up the Croisade, at the Request of Lewis the Younger, who had thoughts in his Head to undertake a Voyage into the Holy-Land. St. Bernard acquitted himself in his Duty with so much zeal, that great numbers of people resolv'd to accompany Lewis in that Expedition. He was present at three Councils, held in the Year 1147. at Etampes, Auxerre, and Paris. The same Year he was sent into Aquitaine, by Alberic Cardinal-Bishop of Ostia, to Combat the Heresies which Henry had promulg'd there. He quickly confounded them, as well by his Preaching as a great many Miracles which he perform'd. In the Year 1148. Gilbert of la Porrée, Bishop of Poitiers, being Convinced by St. Bernard at the Council held at Rheims, retracted his Errors, and came over to the Church. At length, St. Bernard having been chosen towards the end of his days, to be Mediator between the people of Mentz and some Neighbouring Princes, after having happily and Prudently concluded all differences between them, on his return, he fell Sick of a weakness in his Stomach, and Dy'd the 20th of August, in the Year 1153. He left near 160 Monasteries of his Order, Founded by his Care. Divers Churches desir'd to have him for their Bishop: Those of Langres and Chalons Courted him excessively; and those of Genea and Milan offered him their Arch-Bishopricks. And lastly, Rheims earnestly requested him for its Pastor, but notwithstanding all these Solicitations, he persevered in his Resolutions never to be Advanc'd to the Episcopacy.

St. Bernard, did not only render himself worthy of Esteem by the Piety of his Life, and his many Illustrious Actions. His Works also speak high in his behalf; in which, he discovers as much Wit and Elegancy, as Knowledge and Piety. We shall proceed to give an exact History and Abridgment of them, as we find them rank'd in the last Edition, Publish'd not long since by Father Mabillon. The First Volume, Contains all his true Works, and begins with the Letters which Compose the first Tome.

The Letters of St. Bern-nard.

The First Letter was written to his Son Robert, to exhort him to return to the Monastery of Clairvaux, which he had left for that of Cluny. The Author of St. Bernard's Life, says, that this Letter was dictated to William, who was afterwards Abbot of Rievaulx, in the middle of a Field while it Rain'd hard, yet the Paper was never wet. This Letter is full of Professions of Love and Charity towards his Son, which shews, how extreamly St. Bernard was griev'd at his Absence. I have long and impatiently expected (says he,) My Dear Son Robert, That God in his Mercy would please to touch thy Heart, and mine at the same time, inspiring thee with a hearty Compunction, and giving me the Pleasure of seeing thy Conversion: But having hitherto been all along frustrated in my hopes, I can no longer conceal my Grief, contain my Sorrow, nor dissemble my Sadness. 'Tis that which obliges me, contrary to the Order that ought to be observed, to call home him who has Offended me; To Court one that has slighted me; To give satisfaction to one that has Affronted me; and in a word, to Beg of him that ought to Petition me. For when a Man is once touched with extream concern, He deliberates not, has no Shame, Consults not his Reason, Thinks not of abasing himself, observes no measure, and his Soul is intirely employed in the Search or recovery of what he has lost or desires. You will tell me perhaps that you have never Offended nor Slighted me, but that it was I only that have abus'd you, and that you left me but to avoid the ill Usage which I made you undergo. I grant it: You had reason, but let us talk no more of what is past, nor enquire into the cause of it; the present time only demands our Consideration. Let me consider then what makes me unhappy, what so discomposes me? Is it not because I have thee no more, because I see thee no more, and because I live altogether without thee, who art only able to give me Life? I ask not why you went away, but I heartily Grieve that you are not return'd. Come but a little and I shall be at quiet. I own it was my fault that you left me; I was perhaps too rigid towards a young tender Youth, and dealt perhaps too hardly by thee, yet still it may be I could excuse my self and say that the follies of unexperienc'd Youth ought to be suppress'd by a severe Discipline, and our first Tears should be corrected by the severest Test of Reason: But I will not insist upon this; I will as I said before, take all upon my self; I only am in the wrong; Pardon me, for I confess it; I will never do the like again: You shall find me quite another Man: Return only and have no more fear of any thing. Others now might lay your Crime home to you; Fright you into thoughts of Guilt; Lay the Contents of your Vow before you; Threaten you with God's Judgments; Condemn your Disobedience, and accuse you of Apostacy; but I had rather bring you over by fair means, and reclaim you with kind Words. St. Bernard next describes after what manner Robert had been seduc'd to Cluny, and how he had been led away by the Conversation which a Prior, who was sent by the Abbot of Cluny, had with him. This Preacher of the New Gospel, (says he,) I suppose, try'd up good Cheer, and Condemn'd Self-denial and Pasmony; and told him, I imagine, that voluntary Poverty was a real Misery, and Fasts, Watchings, Prayer, and Labour a meer Folly. To Idleness, it may be, he gave the Title of Contemplation, and that of Discretion to Gormandizing, Babling, and Niceness. Perhaps he demanded of him if God could ever be Pleas'd with tormenting us; Or, if the Scripture Commanded us any where to Nurther our selves? What Religion there could be in digging of Ground, Cutting of Wood, Carrying of Dung, or the like? Who was the Wise Man, he that hated his own Flesh, or he that cherish'd it? This poor Youth might easily be seduc'd by such insinuating Discourse, and consequently is led to Cluny, where they Shave his Head, Wash his Body, Tear off his coarse and homely Habits, and put on such as were New and more Costly. Next he is led in The Letters of St. Bernard Triumph about the Monastery; every Body Commends him, and Congratulates his coming among them; and, in a Word, he is soon placed above those of a longer standing. But however, they think fit to send to Rome to have what they do Authorized by the Holy See, and that the Pope may the better yield to their Request, they pretend that being a Child he was offer'd by his Parents to their Monastery. No body was then at Rome that could refute this Reason, and therefore his Holiness has pass'd his Judgment in favour of the present, to the prejudice of the absent; by a Privilege too severe he has confirm'd an Absolution too easie; and, in a Word, has forc'd my Son to take up a new Profession and make new Vows. From this allowance of the Pope's, St. Bernard Appeals to the Determination of God, and the Tribunal of Christ, and demands which ought to prevail most, the Vows of a Father for his Son, or those of a Son made for himself, principally when he has enter'd into a Vow of any great importance. For it is certain, that Robert had never been any otherwise than promis'd, and never had been given to the Monastery of Cluny, since his Parents had not requir'd them to receive him, and he had not been offer'd in the presence of Witnesses, neither had his Head been cover'd with the Pallium of the Altar. They likewise gave out that there was a Portion given with him to their Monastery. But (Quoth St. Bernard) If they had a Portion with him, why do they not think themselves oblig'd to keep him as well as the Portion? Is it because they have greater regard to the Money than the Person, and love the Pence better than the Soul? If he has been offer'd to the Monastery, why do they suffer him to live at large in the World, for it is from the World and not from Cluny that you came, Robert, to Cîteaux? You have earnestly entreated and beg'd to be receiv'd into that Brotherhood, but notwithstanding, they delay'd two Years before they would admit you, yet at length you got in, and after having been a Year Probationer, you became Profess'd, and quitted the Secular Habit for the Regular. It is here that St. Bernard severely reproaches him for the breach of his Vows, and for his Ingratitude; and that in making him sensible of the care and pains he had been at in his Education. Afterwards in terms the most moving imaginable, he expresses the Agonies he has endur'd by his Absence. He gives him moreover to understand, that a Lazy and Luxurious Life, which they all lead in the Order of Cluny, is very dangerous to his Salvation, and likewise exhorts him to do his best endeavours to be in a Condition to observe Abstinence, Watching, Fasts, Silence, Labour and other Austerities, practis'd in Clairvaux, and all which the Life he leads in Cluny, will very much disuse him from. This Letter was writ in the Year 1119.

In the Second he Reproves Fulcin a Regular Canon inasmuch that having accepted of the Deanery of Langres at his Uncles request, he thereupon quitted his Cloyster for a secular Life. Altho' St. Bernard had no positive Authority over this young Man, yet his Zeal oblig'd him to rally him severely, and openly to blame the Conduct of his Uncle. He endeavours to convince him, that to convers with the World is dangerous, and therefore the best way to be sav'd were to avoid that. At length he Admonishes him to return to his Cell, and promises he will put up his petitions to God on his behalf. In this Letter there is an Elegant Passage relating to the use of Church-Goods. You may imagine (says he) that what belongs to the Church belongs to you while you Officiate there. But you are mistaken, for tho' it be reasonable that one that Labours at the Altar should live by the Altar, yet must it not be either to promote his Luxury or Pride. In a word whatever extends beyond bare Nourishing, and simple, plain Cloathing, is Sacrilege and Rapine. This Letter was writ in the year 1120.

In the Third, directed to the Canons of Audicour, in the Diocess of Chalons, after having rejected, with a great deal of Humility, the commendations which they gave him, he acquaints them that he has receiv'd, with permission of the Bishop of Chalons, some Regular Canons into his Monastery who had a mind to embrace a Monastick Life.

The Fourth was written about the year 1125. to Arnold Abbot of Morimond about his having quitted his Monastery with six of his Brothers without leave, first Obtain'd from the Abbot of Cîteaux. He had acquainted St. Bernard with what he had done, and beg'd of him not so much as to mention his return to his Monastery. This Letter S. Bernard answers, and tells him that it is not in his power to forbear Advising him to return, and moreover acquaints him that if he had known where to have met him, he would have run into his Arms, thrown himself at his feet, Beg'd, Conjur'd and Endeavour'd both by Tears and Words to have reclaim'd him: But since he had thought fit to deprive him of that pleasure, he earnestly entreats him to hearken to an Absent Friend, that is sorry for his Crime, and cordially concern'd at his Peril. He likewise shews him that it is to be fear'd that his fall may draw others into the same snare, and therefore tho' he has little regard to himself yet ought he to take care of those he has the Charge of. He conjures him to think how much he Exposeth both them and himself, and lastly he Adds that for his part he cannot think he did well to leave his Convent even on a worldly Account, because he did it without the Consent of his Brothers; the Monks, the rest of the Abbots, and without the Permission of his Superior.

That which follows is Address'd to Adam one of the Monks that went away with Abbot Arnold. He Reproaches him for his Inconstancy and Fickleness.

In the Sixth he entreats Brunon, who was afterwards Arch-Bishop of Colen to do all in his power to cause some of these stragling Monks of Morimond that lurked about in his Diocess, to Return to their Cloyster.

Arnold being dead, St. Bernard reinforce'd his Request to Adam, that since his Abbot was dead and he consequently discharg'd of his Obedience, he might make no difficulty to return. And farther upon this Abbots having commanded his Monks to follow him, St. Bernard examines into these cases how far Superiours are to be Obey'd. He lays down for an Unquestionable Maxim that they are not to be Obey'd when they command any thing that is ill, because in that case they cannot be comply'd with without displeasing God. Afterwards he proceeds to reckon up three sorts of things that may be commanded: 1. Absolutely Good, 2. Absolutely bad, and 3. Indifferent, which may be either good or bad according to the several Circumstances and Persons. He observes that the Law of Obedience which relates to men, has regard only to the last of the three for the first may not be Omitted tho' any body commands it. Nor the second permitted tho' a Superiour would have it so, but in the third and last a Superiours Pleasure is to be prefer'd to our own will, and we are to Obey equally what they Command or forbid. Moreover he urges that what had been commanded him by his Abbot to quit his Monastery and go along with him, was among the Number of those things which are forbidden by God, and that even the Pope himself could not have given him permission to have done it, for that the Dispensation which he had Obtain'd was a frivolous Remedy that serv'd rather to palliate a Disease'd Conscience than cure it. We have (say They) Ask'd leave of the Holy See, and we have obtain'd it; but would to God (says Saint Bernard) that you had not Ask'd Leave but rather demanded Counsel; that would have been more for your Good and my satisfaction. But again, why did you Ask this Leave? Was it not because you had a mind to do what you ought not? Now what you ought not to do is ill when done, and you it seems have got a Permission to do so. You will say perhaps that what you Ask'd was only ill where leave had not been Obtain'd, but being once permitted it ceased any longer to be so. But I have already shewn that your Petition was not of this kind, but a Publick Scandal forbidden by the Law of God; so that this Action of yours was not less blameable by being allow'd of by the Pope, who I'm confident would never have consented to your Demands, had he not been either deceiv'd or forc'd by Importunity: After having shewn farther by several Arguments, that it was in vain for this Monk to pretend to Excuse himself on pretence of Obedience to, and Command of his Abbot, he remarks that two things are principally to be observ'd in Monasteries; which are Obedience to their Abbot, and Continuance in the same Place. Here You may Ask me perhaps (says he) how I can reconcile that with the continuance which I vow'd to Cîteaux? I Answer that in truth I was Profess'd at Cîteaux, but that I was sent by my Abbot to the Place where I now reside, without Discord and Scandal, pursuant both to Order and Custom. There is also another Objection rais'd against me. If I condemn (say They) those that have left their Monasteries by the Command of the Abbot, how comes it to pass that I have receiv'd and retain'd such as have done so? The Answer to this is easy, tho' I do not know whether it will please every body. I receive them (contin'd he) because I cannot think it a Crime to Assist them to Observe their Vows in one Place which they could not do in another, and so to recompence the Omission of Residence by a strict Performance of all the Other Precepts of a Monastick Life. But why, says one to me, do you condemn all those that do not live in every particular like your self? No; I do not do so, I know there are many Holy Men that do not live after the same manner with me; I only give a reason why I receive those that desire it of me without blaming those that don't desire it. Excuse the one without Accusing the Other. The Envious only I cannot nor will not Excuse. In respect to others, if there be any that design to practise a Monastick Life in its Purity, but dare not for fear of Scandal, or cannot by reason of some Infirmary, I do not believe they commit any Sin, providing they live soberly, justly, and devoutly in the place where they are; and if they are sometimes Oblig'd to live a little more loosely than our Rules prescribe, they may be Excus'd either by Charity that covers a Multitude of faults; or Humility, which makes them sensible of their own Weakness and Imperfection.

The Eighth Letter of St. Bernard is written to Brunon Arch-Bishop of Colen, who had demanded of him, If he might accept that Arch-Bishoprick. To which he Answers That no Mortal Man ought to resolve that Question; because if God calls one to it no body ought to dissuade one from it, and if God does not call one to it no body ought to Advise one to Accept it, for the Holy-Ghost alone is able to determine who is call'd and who not; that what troubles him more than this is that he made a confession of his Sins to him, but he fears, has not sufficiently repented of them; so that when he considers that he has been call'd from the State of a sinner to that of a most Reverend Minister without Repenting, he hopes he will beg of God a speedy Commiseration and Forgiveness; but yet there is a great deal of difference between Meriting Pardon for Sins, and being advanc'd all of a sudden to so great a Dignity, that it is true St. Matthew was call'd to the Apostleship even in the very Act of his Profession, but nevertheless he thought it Advisable to repent heartily before he Accepted of his Mission. St. Ambrose also was rais'd from a Profession of the Law to that of the Gospel, but he had all along led an Innocent and Inoffensive Life. That the Conversion of St. Paul likewise is a Miracle which cannot be parallell'd. But in fine he says that in this Case he can give no other Answer than that he will pray God to Manifest his pleasure, and that if he doubts of any thing more, he may consult Norbert who being a great Scholar, and always with him may be able to give him due Satisfaction.

Brunon at last resolves to Accept the Arch-Bishoprick of Colen; which St. Bernard having Understood, he writ him the two following Letters by which he exhorts him to do his Duty, and acquit himself in all things as he ought to do. These Letters were writ about the year 1132.

The Eleventh Letter is written to Guigue Prior of the Great Charter-House and to his Monks. He therein Discourses upon Charity and its Effects with its several kinds, and Lastly Asserts that it can have no perfection in this Life.

In the Twelfth writ to the same, he desires their Prayers.

By the Thirteenth he requests of Pope Honorius II. a Confirmation of the Election of Alberic to the Bishoprick of Chalons. This Alberic was Native of Rheims, a fellow-Disciple with Abaelard, and a learned Divine. He was Elected Bishop of Chalons in the year 1126. after the death of Ebalus, but he was never Ordain'd nor Inducted into this Bishoprick. He was Translated in the year 1139 to the Arch-Bishoprick of Bourges. This Letter of St. Bernard's was written soon after the Election of Alberic to the Bishoprick of Chalons. This is the first which he wrote to Pope Honorius II, and yet he did not put his name to it, but subscrib'd himself a Poor Monk and great Sinner.

In the Fourteenth he recommends to the same Pope an Affair of the Church of Dijon.

He recommends also the same thing in the two following Letters, to the Cardinals Haimeric and Peter.

In the Seventeenth he excuses himself to the last of these Cardinals, that he did not come to wait on him, because he had made a Resolution never to stir out of his Monastery. He moreover writ to him, that he knew not what his Eminence meant by the Books he speaks off, and that he knows not what he had ever writ, which could in the least be worthy of his judicious perusal. That some of his Monks indeed might probably have copy'd what they heard him speak, and that he believ'd Gebuin the Chantier and Arch-Deacon of Troyes might likely have a Copy by him; but for his own part, he had none to his knowledge; yet if he ever found any, or writ any thing for the future, which he thought might be agreeable to him, he would certainly send it.

In the following Letter address'd to the same, he enlarges upon the vanity of Humane Praise, and the Esteem which Men have of us. I am proud, (says he) of the good Character you have honoured me with, but my Pride is extremely diminished, when I consider that it is not my Actions, but the Opinion which others have of me, that has procur'd me this Esteem. I am asham'd to be so puff'd up, when I perceive that I am not so much Lov'd and Honour'd for what I am, or for what I am thought to be; for it is not I that am so well belov'd, but a certain Je ne scay quoy which is suppos'd to be in me, and perhaps is not. He shews afterwards that there is nothing in any Creature which deserves perfectly to be Lov'd, and Commended; nevertheless (says he) there is an universal Vanity scatter'd amongst the Generation of Men, which makes all covet to be prais'd, although they are never so blame-worthy. All Commendation bestow'd on us is Flattery, and the Joy we conceive thereupon a fruitless vanity. They that let themselves be Commended are most commonly vain Fools, and such as Commend themselves for the most part are impudent Lyars. Towards the end of this Letter, he promises to send him some of his Works. These Letters are thought to have been written about the Year 1127.

The Two next Letters, are likewise writ to the same Cardinals. He Recommends to them an Affair of the Church of Rheims.

The Twenty First is directed to Matthew, the Pope's Legat in France. In it he excuses himself for not being able to wait on him, by reason of his illness; as also complains of being solicited to come out of his Cloyster to embroil himself with the Affairs of the World. This Letter was written some short time before the Council of Troyes, which was held in the Year 1128.

In the Twenty second, he recommends to Humbaud Arch-Bishop of Lyons, an Affair belonging to the Bishop of Meaux.

In the Twenty Third, he Commends Atton Bishop of Troyes, for having distributed all he had among the Poor, when he once lay sick. Most commonly, (says he,) Wills are not wont to be Executed till after our Deaths, and consequently we then give what we are no longer able to enjoy, but this Person being between the hopes of Life and Fear of Death, gave away all his Goods to the Poor, to the end that his Charity might subsist Eternally, even in despite of his Fate. He afterwards rejoices that this Bishop recover'd from his Disease. These Two last Letters were written about the Year 1128.

In the Twenty Fourth, he Commends Gilbert Bishop of London, for living Poor whilst he enjoy'd so considerable a Benefice. "It is no great wonder (says he,) That Gilbert is a Bishop, but it is somewhat extraordinary that a Bishop of London should live so meanly. The exalted Dignity of his Episcopacy could not augment the Glory of so great a Man, when his humble Poverty has not a little advanc'd him. To undergo want patiently is the effect of an ordinary Virtue, but to court it voluntarily is the Sign of a great Soul.

In the Twenty Fifth, he exhorts Hugh, Arch-Bishop of Roan, to Patience, and to temper his Zeal by Charity. "A Bishop, (says he,) must not only be Patient, that he may not be overcome by Evil, but he must be also a Peace-maker, to surmount the Evil with Good, inasmuch, that he ought to support even the Wicked, and Reform them that he supports. Be you therefore Patient, because you are amongst Wicked Men, and a Peace-maker, that you may be able to govern ill-doers. Let your Charity be full of Zeal, but let your severity be tempered with Reason.

The Twenty Sixth is a Letter to Guy Bishop of Lausanne, which Comprehends in few Words the necessary Qualifications and Virtues requir'd in a Bishop. "You have (says he to him,) undertaken a difficult Task, you need therefore to have force to go through it: You have took upon you to watch over Israel, you ought to have a great deal of Prudence. You expose your self both to Fools and Wise Men, therefore Justice is likewise necessary, and, in a word, you will have occasion for Temperance to moderate your Passion upon the greatest Provocations.

The Twenty Seventh and Twenty Eighth, contain much the like instructions to Arduition Bishop of Geneva.

In the Twenty Ninth, he congratulates Stephen, Bishop of Metz, upon the Peace restored to his Church.

In the Thirtieth he exhorts Alberon of Metz to wait patiently for the execution of an affair which he was treating about with his Bishop. These two Letters were written after the Year 1126.

In the Thirty First he congratulates Hugh Count of Champagne, on his being made a Knight of Jerusalem (of the Cross.) This Count was the first founder of the Abby of Clairvaux, which occasions St. Bernard to say that he can never forget the great Friendship he has for him, on account of his Noble Beneficence to his Monastery.

The Thirty Second is address'd to Joran Abbot of St. Nicaise of Rheims, who complained that the Order of Cisteaux had received into their Fraternity, one of his Monks call'd Dreux. St. Bernard gives him to understand, that he does not approve of such a Proceeding, and that if that Monk had asked his Advice, he should not have counsell'd him to such an Action, and that he would not have receiv'd him himself, had he been Abbot of that Monastery. He likewise acquaints Joran that he partakes of his Concern, and would assist him to his Power; but that he was able to do nothing more, than to write to the Abbot of Cisteaux to restore the said Monk. He moreover counsels him not to take that matter ters of St.

Bernard.

so much to Heart, but to submit freely to the good pleasure of God, and suppress his just Indignation by the example of a certain Saint, who being solicited to look after a stray'd Monk, answer'd, I shall not do it; for if he be a good Christian, wherever he be he is still mine. St. Bernard adds further, that he himself had made use of the Counsel which he gave; for that having had a near Relation receiv'd by the Monastery of Cluny against his Will, though he is sensibly griev'd for his Loss, yet is he resolved to rest satisfy'd, praying both for the Monks that they would restore him, and for the Person himself, that God would give him Grace to return. This shews plainly, that this Letter was written before Robert's return, about the Year 1120.

Although St. Bernard had thus written to the Abbot of St. Nicaise, nevertheless, his Opinion was not that this Monk was oblig'd, to return to his Cloyster, therefore having written before to Hugh, Abbot of Pontigni, that had receiv'd this Monk, that he thought him oblig'd to restore him, he was forc'd to write a second Letter to undeceive him, whereby he signified that it was never his Intention to advise him to give up this Monk, but that on the contrary, he commended what he had done, and likewise congratulated him in it. But having been powerfully solicited by the Arch-bishop of Rheims, and by an Abbot, who was one of that Monks Friends, he could not prevent writing that Letter and requesting what he feared should come to pass. He believed at the same time that he had given some umbrage of his meaning by writing at the end of his Letter, that if he chose rather to suffer Displeasure, than to release this Monk, he might do as he pleas'd, but that for his part, he would have no manner of hand in it. In fine, he tells him, that he did him a great deal of wrong, to suspect that he had a mind to seduce this Monk to his own Monastery.

In the Thirty Fourth, he congratulates this Monk on the Resolution he had taken, and exhorts him to persevere in it.

The Thirty Fifth is address'd to Hugh Farsite, Abbot of St. John of Chartres, whom he desires to recommend the cause of Humbert, to the Count of Chartres. He withal assures him, that he has not burnt the Letter which he sent him, although there were strange Notions in it concerning the Sacraments.

Hereupon this Abbot wrote him an Answer to this effect, That he had forgot that he had given him any cause of Concern, but having sent him a right Orthodox Confession of Faith, St. Bernard makes known to him by the Thirty Sixth Letter, that he esteem'd him a very good Catholick, and that he verily believes he gave wrong Sentiments of his Mind. He counsels him moreover, not to injure the Memory of a Holy Bishop, with whom he never had any difference whilst he liv'd.

In the Thirty Seventh, Thirty Eighth, Thirty Ninth, Forty and Forty First, St. Bernard recommends several things to Thibaud Count of Champagne.

The Forty Second written to Henry Arch-Bishop of Sens, is to be found among St. Bernard's Opuscula.

In the Forty Third and Forty Fourth, he desires that Arch-bishop to do Justice to the Abby of Molesme, concerning what he claim'd from the Church of Sevan, which belonged to that Abby.

The Forty Fifth Letter is written in the name of the Abbot, and the whole Order of Cîteaux to Lewis, the Gross, King of France, concerning his persecuting of Stephen, Bishop of Paris. He makes them speak to this King with a great deal of freedom, and declare that if His Majesty did not think fit to do Justice to this Bishop, they would assuredly write to the Pope about it.

This King not having made satisfaction to the Bishop of Paris, The Arch-Bishop pronounc'd a Suspension against him, but the King having afterwards humbled himself to Pope Honorius II. procur'd it to be taken off, which oblig'd Hugh Abbot of Pontigni, and St. Bernard, to write the Forty Sixth Letter to this Pope, signifying to him, that they were surpriz'd that his Holiness would suffer that Suspension to be taken off, when if it had been continu'd, the King would certainly have done that Bishop Justice, and this because the Constancy and Courage of the Prelates of that Nation had considerably wrought upon the Temper of that Prince.

St. Bernard, caus'd also the same thing to be written to the Pope, by Geoffrey Bishop of Chartres, in whose Name the Forty Seventh Letter was writ. He Acquaints his Holiness that the King having been frighten'd with the Interdict, had promis'd to restore to the said Bishop of Paris, all that he had taken from him, but that since he had obtain'd Absolution, he refus'd to perform his Promise.

In the Forty Eighth, he justifies himself to Haimeric, Chancellor of the Holy See, concerning the Accusations which had been made against him. He desires to know if they are ground'd on the Bishoprick of Verdun, being taken from a Person that was unworthy to enjoy it, or upon Fulbert Abbot of the Holy Sepulchre, at Cambray's being forc'd to yield his Place to Peruin, or by reason that at Laon a place of Debauchery was become one of Devotion, by driving out of the Monastery of St. John Monks which led an Irregular lewd Life, and by putting those of St. Nicaise in their room. He says, if these things are laid to his Charge, he takes it for an Honour, but that to his great Grief he was not the Author of them, and by consequence could neither deserve the Merit nor the Blame. He adds, that the Bishop of Albani was the occasion of the First, the Arch-Bishop of Rheims of the Second, and the Third ought to be Attributed to the same Arch-Bishop, in Conjunction with the Bishop of Laon. All that is to be found fault with in him, he says, is, that he was present when these matters were transacted, when he ought to have been shut up in his Cloyster, and not to have medled in the Affairs of the World. He owns he was there present. "But, (says he,) It was because I was Summon'd and forc'd thither, which if it be displeasing to my Friends, it is less pleasant to me, and would to God I had never gone to any of these sorts of Assemblies. He then earnestly entreats the Chancellor, That since his Endeavours have been esteem'd unacceptable, he might for the future never be Order'd out of his Monastery. "Let these Clamorous and Troublesome Frogs (says he,) for the future be confin'd to their Marshes; Let them no more be heard in Councils, nor seen any more at Court: and let neither Necessity nor Authority drag them out of

of their Solitude. It may be by these means your Friend may avoid the suspicions of being thought bold. For my part I am resolv'd henceforward never to stir abroad unless it be about the Affairs of the Order, and that too only upon Command of the Pope's Legat or my Bishop. — If by your means I can obtain the favour to go no more out of my Cell upon any account whatever, I shall be at rest, and envy no body. But although I am permitted to remain in silence, yet I cannot believe that the Church will ever be at quiet as long as the Court of Rome persists to prejudice the absent, by obliging and humouring the present. This Letter was writ in the Year 1130.

The Forty Ninth and Fiftieth, are Address'd to Pope Honorius II. in the Name of the Abbots of Cisteaux, Pontigni, and Clairvaux, in favour of the Arch-Bishop of Sens, persecuted by King Lewis the Gros. They beg of his Holiness to permit this Arch-Bishop to have recourse to the Holy See for Justice.

In the Fifty First, he recommends the same Affair to Haimeric, Chancellor of the Church of Rome.

In the Fifty Second, Address'd to the same, he says, That the Bishop of Chartres was in the right not to undertake the Voyage to the Holy-Land. He moreover begs of this Chancellor to use his Interest to the Pope that he may be employed no more abroad.

The Two following are Letters of Recommendation, Address'd to Haimeric. These Six Letters were writ about the Year 1127.

In the Fifty Fifth directed to Geofrey, Bishop of Chartres, he prays that Bishop to receive again a Recluse Monk, who had repented of leaving his Cell.

In the Fifty Sixth, he acquaints the same Bishop that he does not know whether Norbert will go to Jerusalem or no. He says, he is not of the Opinion of that Holy-Man, who Affirm'd that Anti-Christ would certainly come before the Century he Lived in was expir'd, and that he should not die before he had seen a general Persecution in the Church. He also recommends to the Bishop of Chartres the Affair of Humbert.

In the Fifty Seventh writ to the same Bishop, he says, that a Vow made to go to Jerusalem ought not to hinder a Man from being receiv'd to make a better Vow.

In the Fifty Eighth writ to Ebalus, Bishop of Chalons, he recommends to him to admit for Prior of the Regular Canons of his City, him whom the said Canons had chosen, being a good and Religious Person; or if they would not do so he propos'd to them another of a Regular and virtuous Life, and not such a one as they would have to favour their Liberrinism.

In the Fifty Ninth, he advises Guilencus Bishop of Langres to deliver up to the Church of St. Stephen of Dijon, some Goods fell to them by the Death of the Arch-Deacon Garnier.

In the Sixtieth Address'd to the same Bishop, he Recommends to him the Care of the Church of Molesme.

By the Sixty First, he sends a Penitent that had Address'd himself to him, to Ricuin Bishop of Toul, he being not us'd to enjoyn Penance to any but such as were under his Care. For (says he,) would it not be an unpardonable rashness in us to intermeddle with the Affairs of Bishops, when we our selves have recourse to them in matters of great difficulty. Ricuin Dy'd in 1128. so that this Letter must necessarily precede that Year.

In the Sixty Second, he desires Henry Bishop of Verdun, to receive a Penitent that had Address'd himself to him.

In the Sixty Third, he assures this Bishop that he has never utter'd any thing to his Prejudice. This Henry is he whom St. Bernard perswades to lay down his Bishoprick, and which is mention'd in the Forty Eighth Letter.

The Sixty Fourth is written to Alexander, Bishop of Lincoln, whose Consent he asks to permit a certain Clerk of his Nam'd Philip, who had left his Cloyster, with design to Travel to Jerusalem, to remain a Monk in his Monastery of Clairvaux, and he farther desires him to pay the said Monk's Debts out of the Revenues of his Prebend.

In the Sixty Fifth written to Aloisus, Abbot of Anchin, in Flanders, he Commends him for being so much concern'd at the Death of a Monk of his call'd Godwin, who Dy'd in his Monastery of Clairvaux. He also excuses himself for having receiv'd him.

In the Sixty Sixth, he entreats Geofrey Abbot of St. Medard of Soissons to make peace with Aloisus.

In the Sixty Seventh, he excuses himself to the Monks of St. Germet de Flay, for having received one of their Fraternity into his Monastery. He tells them that he never heard any thing of them but very lately; That this Monk came to him after he had been an Hermit above Seven Months, and that he had several times refus'd to admit him. Also having ask'd him why he would not return to his Cloyster, that he had answer'd; his Abbot would not have him only in quality of a Monk, but also oblig'd him to serve as Physician. But at length being over-perswaded by his importunities that he had receiv'd him; and as he had not forc'd him to come into his Monastery, so he would not oblige him to go out of it.

These Monks being not well satisfy'd with this Answer, and having writ again to St. Bernard, to this effect; That he did not do well to receive one of their Monks whom they had Excommunicated. He Answers by the following Letter, That if they have Excommunicated him, he understands it was since he admitted him, which was not likewise well done on their part. And since they accus'd this Monk for a Vagabond that could never rest in a place, and who was always disobedient to his Abbot, they ought to rejoice on account of his Conversion, and in regard that he liv'd now in a Monastery where he should perform the strictest Vows. These two Letters are thought to have been written about the Year 1125.

A New Ecclesiastical History

In the Sixty Ninth, he Comforts Guy Abbot of the Three-Fountains, who was extremely concern'd in that being about to Celebrate Mass he hapned to Consecrate a Chalice, in which, there had been nothing but water put, through carelessness, because this Crime was rather the effect of Inadvertency and Negligence than a Design. He nevertheless enjoyns him and the Person that serv'd them at the Altar the Penance of repeating till Easter the Seven Penitential Psalms, as likewise to receive Seven lashes of a Scourge each day. He approves of what he did when he saw there was no Wine in the Chalice, which was to pour a little Wine upon part of the Consecrated Host; because though it was not transfigured by a proper and Solemn Consecration into the Blood of Christ, it was nevertheless become Sacred by the bare contact of his Body. He adds moreover, That there is a certain Writer who maintains that the Sacrifice cannot be Valid, unless there be both Wine, Bread, and Water, in a manner, that if there be but one of these wanting the rest signifie nothing. He says likewise, That in this case every one may do as he pleases, but for his part, if any such Accident should happen to him, he would do the same thing with him to whom he writes, or would begin Mass with these Words. Simili modo postquam carnatum est, &c. and would finish the rest of the Sacrifice, not in the least doubting but that the Bread was Consecrated separately.

In the Seventieth, he Counsels the same Abbot to treat one of his Monks more kindly, and to revoke the several rigorous Judgments he had pass'd against him.

In the Seventy First Address'd to the Monks of this Abbey, he acquaints them that he has not yet had an opportunity to make them a visit, and moreover Condoles them upon the Death of the Abbot Roger.

The Seventy Second is written to Rainaud Abbot of Foigni. He writes to him concerning the Title of Father, which this Abbot had given him, and refuses to accept of any other but Brother.

In the Seventy Third and Seventy Fourth, he comforts and fortifies this Abbot who had been melancholy and seem'd dissatisfy'd with his having been elevated to this Dignity.

In the Seventy Fifth, he dissuades Artaud Abbot of Prully from sending any of his Monks to found a Monastery in Spain.

In the Seventy Sixth, he Counsels the Abbot of the Regular Canons of St. Pierre-Mont, in the Diocess of Toul, to exert all their force in reclaiming one of their Monks who had stray'd into the World, and was there marry'd.

The Seventy Seventh is the 14th of the Opuscula.

In the Seventy Eighth, he Congratulates Sugerus Abbot of St. Denys, for having made a reformation in his Monastery, and quitted the exterior Pride which was in it before. He likewise Commends him for having taken so Pious a Resolution. Towards the end of this Letter, he exclaims against Stephen de Guarlande Deacon, who was then Steward of the King's Household, bore Arms, and enjoy'd divers Benefices. This Letter was writ in the Year 1127.

The Seventy Ninth was written to Luke Abbot of Coucy of the Order of Austin-Friars, in the Diocess of Laon. Whom he advises to send a certain Friar of his who had committed the Sin of the Flesh, to some place far distant from his Cloyster, where he might do Penance.

In the Eightieth, he Comforts Guy, Abbot of Molefm, upon a certain Injury done him; and moreover, exhorts him not to think of Revenge upon that occasion, but to Pardon freely him that did him the wrong.

By the Eighty First, he assures Gerard, Abbot of Poitiers, in the Diocess of Langres, That he never writ any thing to the Count of Nevers in his prejudice, but only for his Churches Benefit, that it might continue in Peace.

In the Eighty Second he dissuades Stephen Abbot of St. John of Chartres, from quitting his Monastery to go on Pilgrimage to Jerusalem.

In the Eighty Third he comforts Simon Abbot of St. Nicholas of the Woods in the Diocess of Laon, about the Persecution which he suffer'd on account of his Monks. We understand by the Letters of Sampson Arch-Bishop of Rheims, and Josselin Bishop of Soissons, to Pope Innocent II. that these Monks were dissatisfy'd with their Abbot by reason that he had restored to the Church of Arras some Curacy which they were in Possession of.

By the following Letter written to the same Abbot, he entreats him to receive and use kindly a certain Monk which he sends him.

The Eighty Fifth Address'd to William Abbot of St. Thierry, is a Christian and Spiritual Compliment to serve for Answer to an Obliging Complaint which this Abbot had made him, who did not believe himself so well lov'd by St. Bernard as he lov'd him.

In the Eighty Sixth he writes to the same Abbot that he sends him a Monk who had stray'd out of his Monastery. He acquaints him that he has reprimanded him severely and desires of him to do as much, and then to send him back to his Abbot with a Letter of Recommendation. He dissuades this Abbot from quitting his Cloyster to turn Hermit.

In the Eighty Seventh he blames the Conduct of Oger, a Regular Canon, who after having laid down a Curacy by the consent of his Bishop, which he had as 'twere extorted from him, on condition that he should remain in his Bishoprick, he Address'd himself to the Metropolitan to Obtain leave to Return to his Abby. Being return'd he entreated St. Bernard to Instruct him how he should live. Whereupon this Saint disapproved altogether of his Conduct, yet would not have him nevertheless charge himself anew with the care of his Curacy. He advises him to be thoroughly Sensible of his fault, for that he considers his Retreat as an Action of no great Virtue. He afterwards gives him a great deal of good Advice in this Letter, and in the three which follow, being all likewise writ to him. He excuses himself in the Eighty ninth for not writing him long Letters, because he is Oblig'd to silence.

Jence, which is interrupted as well as the Tranquility of Mind by Dictating and Composing, and Moreover so far as his Profession is not to Instruct others but bewail his own Sins.

The Ninety First is Address'd to a General Chapter of Benedictine Abbots, Assembled at Soissons for Reformation of their Monasteries. St. Bernard exhorts them earnestly to Labour about it, for fear (says he) "That the World should say, you were met together to no purpose. Do all in your power to render your Actions and Occupations perfect. They cannot be so too much, because a Man cannot be too Just, too Wise nor too Virtuous. Harken not to such as will say: We will not be better than our Fathers, Owning thereby that they are the Off-spring of Luke-warm and Loose People: Or if they pretend to be Children of Saints, let them Imitate their Sanctity and not their Indulgence and Depravity. There is no living in this World without either Advancing or Retreating, Rising or Descending: If a Man has a mind to continue in the same State, he shall presently fall. He that desires not to be better was never really Good; and whoever ceases endeavouring to be good ceases to have any worth."

The Four following Letters are Letters of Compliment, the First is Address'd to Henry King of England, and the others to the Prelates of his Realm.

In the Ninety Six he commends Richard Abbot of Fontaine in the Diocess of York, for having embraced the Order of Cisteaux with 12 of his Monks in the Year 1132.

In the Ninety Seventh he dissuades Duke Conrade from making War upon the Count of Savoy.

In the Ninety Eighth He Answers a question which had been put to him. Why of all the Saints that are in the Old Testament, the Church Observes Feasts for none but the Macchabees? The Answer is that the Church takes Notice of them because they are not unlike our Christian Martyrs, having suffer'd Death for not Abjuring the Law of God.

In the Ninety Ninth he writes to a Monk whose going out of the Monastery he was Jealous of; but having by a Letter Understood the occasion of it, his Suspicions soon vanish.

In the Hundredth he commends the great Charity of a certain Bishop towards the Poor. It is (says he) a thing so well becoming a Bishop; It is a great Ornament to his Function in that not being able to be Poor by reason of his Revenues, he Nevertheless has regard to the Poor and Indigent; for it is not Poverty that is a Virtue, but the Love of the Poor, and the Poor in Goods are not pronounc'd happy by the Gospel, but the Poor in Spirit.

In the Hundred and First, he begs of a Monastery to receive a Monk again that had left them without Permission.

In the Hundred and Second, He Counsels an Abbot to try all means to bring a certain Monk to his Duty, and to expell him if he found him Irreclaimable.

In the Hundred and Third he exhorts a Person to forego the inordinate Love that he had for Riches.

In the Hundred and Fourth he Advises another to quit the World.

The Letters following to the Hundred and Fifteenth, are Exhortations to several Persons to embrace a Monastick Life which he greatly commends.

In the Hundred and Fifteenth he dissuades a Monk from turning Hermit.

The Six following Letters contain only Compliments and Thanks.

The Hundred Twenty Second is a Letter of Hildebert, at that time Arch-Bishop of Tours Address'd to St. Bernard, in which he greatly commends him and begs his Friendship, which Letter St. Bernard Answers after a very Obliging manner in the 123. and in the 124 he Admonishes him to embrace the Interest of Pope Innocent II.

By the Hundred Twenty Fifth, he sends to Geofrey of Loroux to engage in the Defence of this Pope against Peter of Leon.

In the Hundred Twenty Sixth, Address'd to the Bishops of Limoges, Poitiers, Perigueux and Saintes, he vigorously defends the Cause of Innocent II. against Gerard Bishop of Angoulesme whom he accuses to have engag'd in the Interest of Peter of Leon thro' Ambition.

The Hundred Twenty Seventh is written in the name of Hugh Count of Burgundy, to William Count of Poitiers, whom he Admonishes to quit the Party of Peter of Leon, and to Acknowledge Pope Innocent.

In the Hundred Twenty Eighth, St. Bernard Reproaches Count William, in that having once procur'd peace to the Church of Poitiers, he had afterwards drove the Clergy of Hilarius out of the City. He Advises him to cease that Persecution.

In the Hundred Twenty Ninth, he Counsels the Genoese to live Peaceably with the Citizens of Pisa, and to continue faithful both to the Pope and Emperor.

In the Hundred and Thirtieth, he Advises likewise the Pisantines by reason of the great Affection they had to the Pope.

By the Hundred Thirty First, he puts the Milanese in mind of their reconciliation with the Church of Rome, and Pope Innocent, and earnestly exhorts them to continue their Obedience and submission accordingly.

The Three following are written to the Clergy and People of Milan upon the same Account.

In the Hundred Thirty Fifth he rejects, with a great deal of Humility, the Praises which Peter Bishop of Pavia had given him; and moreover commends that person for his Charity.

In the Hundred Thirty Sixth, he desires Pope Innocent to Pardon a Man that was dispos'd to make satisfaction.

In the Hundred Thirty Seventh, he implorés the Clemency of the Empress upon the Milanese, whom the Pope had not receiv'd into favour till after they had Acknowledg'd Lotharius for their King and Master.

A New Ecclesiastical History

In the Hundred Thirty Eighth, he requires Henry King of England to Assist Pope Innocent.

In the Hundred Thirty Ninth, he excites the Emperour Lotharius to revenge the Church upon Schismatics.

In the Hundred and Fortieth, he recommends the Pisantines to this Prince.

In the Hundred Forty First, he sharply Reproaches Humbert Abbot of Igny for having quitted his Abby.

In the Hundred Forty Second, he condoles the Monks of the Abby of the Alps for the loss of their Abbot Guarin, who had been advanc'd to the Bishoprick of Sion in Switzerland.

In the Hundred Forty Third, he excuses his long Absence to the Monks of Clairvaux, assuring them that he has been no less concern'd than they about it, and exhorting them to Persevere in their Duty.

The Two following Letters are written upon the same Account, with the same Tokens of Tendernefs and Affection.

All these Letters were written under the Pontificate of Innocent II. from the year 1132 to the year 1137.

In the Hundred Forty Sixth, he congratulates Burchard Abbot of Balere, inasmuch that the care he has taken to reform his Abby has not been fruitless, and says the Glory of it is due only to God.

The Hundred Forty Seventh, is a Letter of Thanks to Peter, Abbot of Cluny, for having Comforted him in the pains he had been at in procuring Peace to the Church. He therein expresses his satisfaction in that the Schism was at length extirpated thence.

The following is a Letter of Compliment written to the same.

In the Hundred and Forty Ninth, he Admonishes this Abbot not to take so much pains to bring the Monastery of St. Berthin to subjection.

In the Hundred and Fiftieth, he Commends Pope Innocent for having made a Reformation in the Monastery of Vezelay, St. Bennet on the Po, and those of St. Meme, and St. Satyre. As likewise for the resolution he had shewn at Liege in refusing to grant Investitures at the request of the Emperour Lotharius, and for Excommunicating the Clerks that disturb'd the Church of Orleans. He exhorts him to employ the like Zeal in opposing Philip, Nephew to Gislebert Arch-Bishop of Tours, who had seiz'd upon the See of that Church.

The Hundred and Fifty First is Addressed to this Philip, whom he acquaints with his concern to see him engaged in so pernicious an undertaking. These two Letters were writ in the Year 1133.

In the Hundred and Fifty Second, he writes to Pope Innocent in Favour of the Bishop of Troyes, who was molested by his Clergy. He there says, that the Insolence of the Inferior Clergy occasioned by the Bishop's neglect, has every where disturb'd the Peace of the Church: That Bishops give Holy things to Dogs and throw Pearls to Swine, who afterwards turn upon them and trample them under their Feet: That such as they prefer, such are they oblig'd to bear with; that they first enrich them with the Spoils of the Church without correcting them, and afterwards they are forc'd to submit to their Insolencies, for Priests that enjoy the Fruits of other's Labours live without Gratitude to their Benefactors, insomuch, that their Iniquity most commonly proceeds from their abundance. Towards the end of this Letter, St. Bernard excuses himself for not having gone to wait on the Pope as he had been desir'd.

In the Hundred and Fifty Third Address'd to Bernard, Prior of the Charter-House of Portes, near the Town of Bollay, which had desir'd of him an Exposition of the Canticles, after having spoken of this Work in a very humble manner, he promises to transcribe and send his Exposition at the beginning of that Book.

In the following Address'd to the same, having sent him this Discourse, he expresses his Sorrow that he had not leisure to go Visit that Charter-House.

In the Hundred and Fifty Fifth, he Acquaints Pope Innocent, who had given this Prior a Bishoprick in Lombardy, that he is very worthy of that Honour, but that he is not a proper Person for the Place, insomuch, that the Lombards being a headstrong wicked People, a young Man that has always Liv'd in a Cloyster, would find it a difficult matter to govern them, so that he desires this Pope to bestow on him another Place.

In the Hundred Fifty Sixth, he Recommends to this Pope the Church of Orleans, whose See was vacant.

In the Hundred and Fifty Seventh, he Recommends to Haimeric, Chancellor of the Church of Rome, the Provost and Canons of the Church of Meun, in the Diocess of Orleans. These Two Letters with the foregoing, from the Hundred and Fifty First, were written in the Year 1135.

The Hundred and Fifty Eighth is written to Pope Innocent, concerning the Murther of Thomas Prior of St. Victor in Paris, who had been kill'd near Gournay, by the Relations of Thibaud Arch-Deacon of Paris, in his return with Stephen Bishop of Paris, to the Abbey of Chelles, whither they went to make a Reform in that Abbey. The Bishop of Paris was so concern'd with this Assassination that he after pronounc'd Excommunication against the Murtherers and all their Adherents, reserving to himself only their Absolution, he retir'd to Clairvaux, whence he wrote to the Pope, and to Geofrey Bishop of Chartres, his Legate, to encline them to do Justice upon the Assassines. This Letter St. Bernard writ to the Pope in his Name to exite his Zeal against so detestable an Action, and to beg of him to Punish the Arch-deacon of Paris, as being Accessary to this Murther.

The following Letter is that which was writ to the Pope in the name of the Bishop of Paris, upon the same Account,

About the same time there was another Murther Committed on the Body of Archembaud, Sub-Dean of the Church of Orleans; at the Instigation of a Canon of that Church. St. Bernard writes also concerning this Murther to the Pope, by his Hundred and Sixty First Letter, to the end, that so Barbarous a Crime might meet with an exemplary Punishment, not only in the Person of those who had committed the Crime, but also in those who were the cause of it.

There are moreover Three other Letters which follow those, which are the Hundred Sixtieth, the Hundred Sixty Second, and Hundred Sixty Third, by which, he Recommends this Affair to Haimeric, Chancellor of the Church of Rome, and to another Cardinal.

Geoffrey Bishop of Chartres, the Pope's Legat, upon occasion of these Murthers, Commanded the Bishops of the Provinces of Rheims, Roan, Tours, and Sens, to meet at the Council of Jorre to Condemn the Authors thereof, pursuant to the utmost rigour of the Canons. We have not the Transactions of this Council of Jorre, but we are Assur'd by a Letter of Pope Innocent II. Address'd to the aforesaid Bishops, that they Excommunicated all that were in the least concern'd in these Murthers. The Pope confirms their Decree by this Letter, and because it seem'd to him that this Judgment was not severe enough, he order'd farther, That no Mass should be Celebrated in any of those places where these Murtherers were found, and that Thibaud, Noterius, and all others concern'd in the said Murthers should for ever be depriv'd either of enjoying or acquiring any Benefice. He pronounc'd also Anathema's against any that receiv'd or conceal'd these Assassines. All this hapned in the Year 1133. as Father Mabillon testifies in his Notes.

The Hundred Sixty Fourth Letter of St. Bernard is writ to Pope Innocent, concerning the difference which arose in the Church of Langres, about the Election of a Bishop, in the room of William, who Dy'd in 1138. Peter Arch-Bishop of Lions, and Hugh Duke of Burgundy, would have chosen a Monk of Cluny, yet Robert Dean of the said Church, Pontius the Arch-Deacon, Otric, and the other Canons would not acquiesce in this Election, but demanded an Accustom'd liberty of choosing whom they pleas'd. The Pope writ to them not to make choice of any without the Advice of some Pious Men, whereupon, they had recourse to St. Bernard, and promis'd to do nothing but with his Consent. This Arch-Bishop of Lions Agreed to, and the Pope likewise approved of the Choice they had made of St. Bernard, who was then at Rome. In his return, St. Bernard understanding that they were about to Consecrate a Bishop of Langres at Lions, which he thought not worthy, and whom the Dean and Canons would not receive, he went immediately to the Arch-Bishop, and represented to him, that having agreed to be determin'd by him, they ought to do nothing without him. The Arch-Bishop laid all the blame on Hugh, Son to the Duke of Burgundy, but promis'd, that for the future there should be nothing done without his Knowledge. St. Bernard propos'd to leave the matter to a Debate in a general Convocation of the Bishops and Clergy. That Monk of Cluny who was about to have been Elect'd, dar'd not appear, but being arriv'd on Friday went away on Saturday. The Arch-Bishop of Lions at the same time wrote Two Letters to the Chapter of Langres, quite contrary to each other, for by one, he order'd them to proceed to an Election, and by the other, told them that he had not altogether reject'd, but only put off to another time the Ordination of this Monk of Cluny. Whereupon, this Monk observing his Ordination to be stopp'd, went to the King, and obtain'd from him an Investiture, and afterwards assign'd a day for his Ordination. Soon after Falcon Dean of Lions, Pontius Arch-Deacon of Langres, Bonami Canon of the same, with two Monks of Clairvaux, Appeal'd to the Holy See, and Cited thither as well the Person that would have been Consecrated, as the Persons that would have Consecrated him. St. Bernard inform'd the Pope of all matters that related thereto by this Letter.

In the following Letter written to Dean Falcon, and Guy Treasurer of the Church of Lions, he commends them for the Zeal they had shown in this Affair.

Notwithstanding the Appeal to the Court of Rome, yet the Arch-Bishop of Lions, and the Bishops of Autun, and Macon, Installed and Consecrated the Monk of Cluny, which extremely nettled St. Bernard, for he wrote very earnestly about it to the Pope and Cardinals, in the Hundred Sixty Sixth, Hundred Sixty Seventh, and Hundred Sixty Eighth Letters. At length he wrought so much upon his Holiness as to cause him to disapprove of this Election, and to give the Chapter leave to proceed to a New Election, after having taken Advice of St. Bernard. Whereupon, they immediately went to wait upon him accordingly, and he after having made them all Friends, sent them back to make their Election, as he Acquaints his Holiness by the Hundred Sixty Ninth Letter. Hereupon they Elect'd Godfrey Prior of Clairvaux, a relation to St. Bernard, who having met with some difficulty on the Court-side, St. Bernard writ the Hundred and Seventieth Letter to Lewis the Younger, in which, he protests that no body had a greater Veneration for His Majesty than himself, and afterwards Assures him that the Election of his Prior to the Bishoprick of Langres was altogether against his Intention and good liking, since it depriv'd him of the principal Comfort of his Age and Infirmary, yet that he must nevertheless submit to the Will of God: That it was neither in the power of himself nor the King to oppose it; and that he was perswaded His Majesty would not attempt it, but leave the Church of Langres to remedy its Affliction, having been long vacant together with that of Rheims: That he humbly thank'd His Majesty for what he writ him thereupon, and would have been conformable, had not he seen the danger of delays, as likewise that the Revenues of that Church were in Huckster's hands: That this was that which gave him the greatest trouble, and procur'd no small Dishonour to His Majesty, it being his Duty to preserve the Goods of the Church: That the Election had been made altogether according to Form; That the Person Elect was faithful, for that he would not have been for him had he not first consented to do Homage to His Majesty for the Lands held of the Crown; That he had all along this Precaution given him; That he was not yet put into possession, nor yet enter'd into the City; That for his part he had meddled but little with the matter, tho' he had been Invited to do it by the Clergy and People, and that the Oppression of several and Prayers of Good Men might well have engag'd him deeper in it: That as the case now stands, it was for his Majesty's Honour and the Publick Good to defer the Confirmation no longer, and that if he did not Return an Answer by those that gave him this Letter, he would peradventure raise the Spirits of divers Religious Men against him, and moreover Prejudice the Revenues of the Crown annex'd to this Bishoprick. There is great likelihood that the King comply'd with St. Bernard's request, for the year following, Falcon Dean of the Church of Lyons, having been Elected Arch-Bishop thereof, Godfrey and St. Bernard wrote in his favour to Pope Innocent, which are the 171 and 172 Letters.

In the Hundred Seventy Third, St. Bernard recommends to Falcon the Monks of the Monastery of Beniffon-Dieu.

The Hundred Seventy Fourth is the famous Letter which he writ to the Canons of Lyons, concerning the Feast of the Conception which they had newly Introduc'd. This Letter he begins with Commending of the Church of Lyons which (says he) "Has always been Preferable to all the rest of France not only on account of the Dignity of its See, but also by the strict Order there kept. For is there any where a better Discipline to be found, a greater Authority Establish'd and of a more venerable Antiquity, principally in regard of Ecclesiastical Duties, it having never hitherto introduc'd any Novelty, nor suffer'd its self to be debauch'd by any change? This has been the occasion (continues he) that we can never enough wonder that some of you could have the Boldness to Introduce a Feast which the Church has not the least knowlege of, which neither is supported by reason, nor back'd by any Tradition: Are we to think our selves more knowing or Devout than our Fore-fathers? and is it not a dangerous Presumption to pretend to do what they thought not proper? But (say you) we ought to Honour the Mother of our Saviour: Why so we ought in all reason, but still the honour paid to a Queen demands Discretion. This Royal Virgin has no need of false Honour having Several true Titles, and being of a Quality truly Honourable. Honour then the Purity and Piety of her Life, Admire her supernatural Fecundity and Adore her divine Off-spring; Commend her in that she conceiv'd without Concupiscence, and brought forth without trouble: Affirm that Angels respected her, All Nations have desir'd her, that the Patriarchs and Prophets have been acquainted with her, and that she was chosen above all Women, and Prefer'd to all her Sex. — The Church teaches me to have an Uncommon Veneration for the day when she dy'd, and when she was receiv'd with an unexpressible Joy into Heaven. The same Church learns me to honour the day of her Birth, being verily perswaded that like Jeremiah and St. John Baptist, she was sanctify'd in her Mothers womb. Yes, the Mother of our Lord was Holy before she was Born, and therefore the Church cannot err in believing that the day of her Birth was also Holy, nor in keeping it solemnly as such: I also am thoroughly perswaded that she was endu'd with so many Graces that not only her Birth was sanctify'd, but also all the rest of her Life, which was exempt from all Sin; a favour that never yet was granted to any Other of the Off-spring of Man. — What then are we able to contribute to these Honours? Let her conception also have Honours (say they) since it preceeded her Birth, because had not this Conception preceeded, her Birth could not have been extant to be honour'd. Very well! for the same reason any one might Celebrate the Feasts of their Father and Mother, and mount upwards even to their remotest Ancestors. Then we should have a prodigious Number of Feasts indeed, and which would be more proper for the Eternity of the other Life than the poor circumscrib'd Limits of this. But there is a Book produc'd where this Feast is Authoriz'd, as they pretend by Divine Revelation. Why this might very well be, and I myself could sooner compose one in favour of any of my Ancestors. For my part I am not willing to Credit any of these Books which have neither Reason nor Authority on their side: For what Consequence is there that a Conception must be Holy because the Birth was so? was it made Holy by its Precedence? Whence had it this Sanctity to communicate to the Birth? and on the contrary is it not because this Conception was not Holy, that it was thought necessary to Sanctifie the Virgin afterwards? Whence proceeds the pretended Sanctity of this Conception? Will any one say that it was occasion'd by Grace to the End that she might be conceiv'd Holy? But then she could not receive the Appanage of her Divinity before she was Divine, and that she could not possibly be before her Conception. Some will say perhaps that she was conceiv'd and sanctify'd in the same Moment, but that is what they cannot reasonably make out, for how can Holyness be where sin is? and how can any one deny that sin is not to meet where Concupiscence is to be found. If they will not Affirm she was conceiv'd by the Holy Ghost, which I presume no body will Offer to Assert? so that not having been Sanctify'd before her Conception, because she then was nothing, nor at her Conception, because she was then in the State of Sin, she must have been sanctify'd in the womb of her Mother after her Conception, and that tho' her Birth was Holy her Conception was not. In a word her good Fortune of being conceiv'd in Sanctity, is owing only to Jesus Christ, for all the other Children of Adam have been conceiv'd in Sin. This being thus, what reason can there be for Introducing a Feast of the Conception? How can it be maintain'd that a Conception which proceeds not from the Holy Ghost, but rather from sin, can be Holy? Or how could they conjure up a Holy-day on Account of a thing that is not Holy in it self? The Church may have reason to boast indeed of a Feast which honours sin or Authorizes a false Holyness; Yet whatever People may think she will never be brought to Approve of an Innovation contrary to her Usual Custom that being the Mother of Rashness, Sister of Superstition, and Daughter of Levity. Moreover if they had proceeded rightly in Introducing this Feast, they should first have consult'd the Holy See, and not follow'd blindly and without Deliberation the suggestions of some hair-brain'd Idcoats. St. Bernard adds that he has understood this error, was in other Places; That he had hitherto forbore taking Notice of it out of a Veneration, he had for the Holy Virgin which proceeded to spread it self over the whole Church, of which he was a Member, he could no longer dissemble his resentments without Offending all. He concludes, with saying, that he submits his Judgment to the more Sage and Experienc'd, and chiefly the Authority of the Church of Rome, to whom, he reserves the Decision of this matter, being ready to alter his Opinion if the Holy See shall be of another Mind.

Some Authors have undertaken the Defence of the Feast of the Conception of the Virgin, and among others, a certain Person has written a Treatise on this Subject, commonly Attributed to St. Anselm, wherein, he attacks St. Bernard without naming him. Likewise an English Monk call'd Nicholas, writ a little after St. Bernard's Death against his Letter. This Monk has been refuted by Peter Abbot of Colles; and at the same time Poton Priest and Monk of Prom blam'd those that had receiv'd three new Feasts, which were that of the most Holy Trinity, of the Transfiguration, and of the Conception of the Virgin, all which he esteem'd very extravagant. In the Century following, John Belesb, and William Durand, Bishop of Mande, disapprove also of this Feast, but notwithstanding it was Authoriz'd in the Fifteenth Century by the Council of Basil. It must here be understood with Father Mabillon, that St. Bernard means by Conception that same instant, in which the Body of the Virgin was Conceiv'd, and not with the School-Divines the moment of the Union of the Soul with the Body, for he could not have overthrow'd those that say that she was Sanctify'd this Instant, but only such as maintain she was Sanctify'd before she was animated, if he should have compar'd her Sanctification with that of Jeremias and St. John Baptist, but he plainly insinuates that she was not Sanctify'd before her Soul was United to her Body. Thus it may be observ'd, that St. Bernard had no very favourable Thoughts of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary.

The Hundred Seventy Fifth Letter of St. Bernard, is an Answer to one writ to him by the Patriarch of Jerusalem, wherein, he Recommends to him the Knights of the Cross. This Patriarch was William of Flanders, who had been formerly a Hermit at Tours.

The Hundred Seventy Sixth is written in the Name of Alberon, Arch-Bishop of Treves, to his Holiness Pope Innocent. This Arch-Bishop not being able to go in Person to wait on the Pope, writes him this Letter, to assure his Holiness of the unfeigned Obedience of the Churches on this side the Mountains; and moreover exhorts him not to concern himself at the loss of Benevento and Capua, which Roger of Sicily had taken from him, and likewise assures him, that the Emperor Lotharius was preparing to march to his Relief. This Letter was written in the Year 1135.

The Hundred Seventy Seventh is also written to the Pope, in the Name of the same Arch-Bishop, who complains of the Fatigue and Care he is like to undergo in his Arch-Bishoprick. He says, he accepted it not without regret; that he is plagu'd by his Suffragans who are young persons of Quality, and who rather oppose than assist him; that Right, good Manners, and Religion, are extinct in their Suffraganships; that he thinks himself oblig'd to Acquaint his Holiness with what he will not give him leave to reform; that notwithstanding, he undergoes patiently all these Affronts rather than act any thing contrary to the Obedience he owes to the Papal Chair. But that he begs of his Holiness to consider that these Injuries fall on the Papal See, and that the Contempt had of him renders also the Holy See despis'd: That in a word, he has several more complaints to make to him, of which his Holiness may be better inform'd by the Deputy he has sent.

In the following Letter written also in the Name of the former Person, and Address'd to Pope Innocent. St. Bernard lays open all the causes of Complaint which the Arch-Bishop of Treves had against the Pope, grounded upon the frequent usage of Appeals, which brought all matters before the Holy See, and quite destroy'd the Authority of the Arch-Bishops and Bishops. Observe how St. Bernard represents this matter to the Pope. I speak to you, (says he,) with a great deal of Freedom, because I have a more than ordinary Affection for you, which could not be, should I use Dissimulation. The Arch-Bishop of Treves his Complaint is not his alone, but proceeds from the Sentiments of several others, and chiefly those that love you best. They complain that Justice is no more to be found in the Church, that the Keys thereof become of no use, and the Episcopal Authority is rendred Despicable, by reason that the Bishops have now no more power to revenge the Injuries done to God, nor to punish the Offences committed in their Diocesses. The fault of all which is laid upon you and the Court of Rome. It is affirm'd that you abolish what they have well establish'd, and that you have establish'd what they abolish'd with Reason; That all Criminals and disobedient Persons, whether they be of the Clergy or Laity have immediately recourse to you, and boast when they return, that they have not met with Protectors who ought rather to have been Punishers of their Crimes. What a shame is this! What occasion for Laughter to the Enemies of the Church! Friends finds themselves Confounded, the Faithful Affronted, Bishops become the Subjects of Scorn and Contempt, and your Authority much lessen'd by the weakness of your Decisions. 'Tis those only have a true value for the Holy See, who labour heartily to procure the Peace, and advance the Grandeur of the Church of Rome. Why therefore will you your self weaken your own Strength? He afterwards proceeds to represent to the Pope the mischiefs occasion'd in the Churches of Toul, Verdun, and Metz, by the Protection which the Holy See has unadvisedly bestow'd. He Accuses the Bishops of Metz, and Toul, of Tyranny and Misgovernment, and complains that the Holy See has upheld them in it, and particularly that the Bishop of Metz had quash'd a free Election made with all form, in his Chapter, and plac'd by his Authority, a Probationer in the Church. At length he gives the Pope an extraordinary Character of the Arch-Bishop of Treves, assuring him, that he is a much more faithful Person both to the Church and the Holy See.

In the Hundred and Seventy Ninth, and Hundred and Eightieth Letters, he Recommends to this Pope the Affair which this Arch-Bishop had with the Abbot and Monks of St. Maximine and desires his Holiness to revoke the Brief which these last had obtain'd. One of the greatest Advantages of the Holy See, (says he,) is, that it can revoke whatever it finds it has been overseen in granting. It is certainly very just and commendable that a Person should not get any advantage by his Crime; and above all with the Holy See and Sovereign Bishop. This is what engages me in a boldness to request your Favour, in behalf of the Arch-Bishop of Treves, and to lay before you such instances of his Integrity as I am pretty well assur'd will succeed. All his Crime is having wrested a Monastery out of the hands of Laicks, and endeavouring to purge it of its Errors.——May God always fortifie your Holiness with his Divine Grace, that the Monks may at no time over-reach you: These Monks that hunt not after Liberty more than they fly Order and Discipline.

The Hundred and Eighty First, is a Letter of Thanks to Haimeric, Chancellor of the Holy See.

In the Hundred and Eighty Second, he writes very earnestly to Henry, Arch-Bishop of Sens, concerning his inflexibility, which, he says, has procur'd him a great many Enemies.

In the Hundred and Eighty Third, he exhorts Conrade King of the Romans, to be Obedient to the Pope.

In the Hundred and Eighty Fourth, he excuses himself to Pope Innocent, for not being able to send him some Religious Persons, as he promis'd, by reason of three late Foundations he had made.

In the Hundred and Eighty Fifth, he exhorts Eustace who had possess'd himself of the Church of Valence, not to persist in his design thro' a false Glory, and by being Advis'd by Flatterers who play'd upon him.

In the Hundred Eighty Sixth, he recommends to Simon Son of the Chastelan of Cambray, the Monks of the Monastery of Vaucelles, and desires him to confirm the Donation which his Father had made them.

The following Letters were writ in the Year 1140. against Peter Abaelard.

The Hundred Eighty Seventh is Address'd to those Bishops that were to Assemble at the Council of Sens all whom he exhorts to promote zealously the interest of Religion.

In the Hundred Eighty Eighth, he makes the same Entreaty to the Bishops and Cardinals of the Court of Rome. He in general accuses Peter Abaelard of Contemning the Fathers; raising trifling Questions upon elevate Subjects, and, in a word, for confiding too much in his Wit, and not contenting himself with the plainness of Faith, and afterwards descending to particulars, Read (says he, to those to whom he writes) Peter Abaelard's Book, which he calls his Theology. It is easie to be found, because it is to be Sold, and there are a great many Persons at the Court of Rome who Read it. See there how he advances upon the Holy Trinity, the Generation of the Son of God, the Procession of the Holy Ghost, and several other matters which both the Ears and Minds of Catholicks are but little Accustom'd to. Read likewise another which is said to be his Book of Proverbs, but which is Entitled, Notice Teiplum: There you may observe how full his Works are of Sacrilege and Errors. What strange Opinions has he concerning the Soul and the Person of Jesus Christ, of his Descent into Hell, and the Sacrament of the Altar; of the power of binding and of loosing, Original Sin, Concupiscence, the Sin of Pleasure, the Sin of weakness, the Sin of Ignorance, of the Action of Sinning, and the Will of Sinning. If you find hereby that I have reason to be mov'd, be you also the like, but that you may not be so to no purpose, be sure to bestir your self suitable to the Rank, Dignity, and Authority of your Power. Lay these Works of Darkness open, Reprehend and Condemn them publicly, and stop the Mouths of those that speak Evil.

In the following Letter to Pope Innocent, he expresses his concern in that Schism had not been sooner extinguish'd, and that the Errors of Peter Abaelard, and Arnaud of Bresse had not sooner beenabolish'd. He Acquaints his Holiness, that he has been invited by the Arch-Bishop of Sens, to enter the Lists with Abaelard. That he came at the time appointed, and in the Presence of the King, Bishops, Abbots and several Learned Men, he produc'd divers Articles against him, but as they were going to be Read, this Heroe all of a sudden went out of the Assembly, and Appeal'd to the Judges that he had chosen, which I hope (says St. Bernard,) will not be approv'd of. In his Absence, the Articles propos'd were examin'd into, and found repugnant both to Faith and Truth. He concludes this Letter by earnestly exhorting the Pope not to grant protection or encouragement to a Person that was at variance with the Establish'd sentiments of St. Peter.

The Hundred and Ninetieth is a Treatise against the Errors of Peter Abaelard, which is also inserted amongst his Opuscula.

The Hundred Ninety First is written to Pope Innocent, in the several Names of Sanson, Arch-Bishop of Rheims, Fosselin Bishop of Soissons, Geoffrey of Chalons, and of Aloisus of Arras, against Peter Abaelard. They are made to Accuse him of Presumption, Error, and Heresie, and also observe, that his Book of the Trinity has already been Condemn'd to be Burnt by a Legat of the Holy See; and moreover, that having been lately Accus'd by the Abbot of Clairvaux, to avoid his Condemnation, he had Appeal'd to the Holy See, without cause or reason, against the Judges which he himself had made choice of; And that the Bishops who were Assembled about that Affair would not Decree any thing against him out of respect to the Holy See, but only Condemn'd some few Articles drawn out of his Books. In a word, that it was necessary that his Holiness should apply some speedy remedy to a mischief which daily increased.

In the Hundred Ninety Second, he Counsels Guy, Cardinal of the Church of Rome, not to favour the Errors of Abaelard on account of Friendship for his Person, and to frighten him the more from it, he tells him, that he treats of the Trinity like Arrius, like Pelagius of Grace, and like Nestorius concerning the Person of Jesus Christ.

In the Hundred Ninety Third, he writes to another Cardinal Nam'd Ives, acquainting him that he is surpriz'd that Abaelard should find many Friends and Protectors at Rome.

By the Hundred Ninety Fourth Letter, Pope Innocent Answers Henry Arch-Bishop of Sens, Sampson Arch-Bishop of Rheims, the Bishops their Suffragans, and St. Bernard Abbot of Clairvaux, that he has been been as much concern'd for the Novelties advanc'd by Abaelard, as joyful at the Zeal they have shewn to oppose him in his Innovations, and declares that by the Advice of the Bishops and Cardinals of the Church of Rome, he had Condemn'd the Articles which they had sent him, and all the false Doctrines of Peter Abaelard, together with their Author, on whom he has enjoin'd perpetual silence, as being a Heretick; and moreover, that he esteems all the Followers and Defenders of these Errors, to be worthy of being put out of the Communion of the Church.

In the Hundred Ninety Fifth, he Counsels the Bishop of Constance to expel Arnaud of Bresse out of his Diocese, he having already been driven out of Italy and France for his Errors.

In the Hundred Ninety Sixth, he gives the same Advice to Guy the Pope's Legat, to whom this Arnaud was retir'd for shelter.

In the Hundred Ninety Seventh, he reproves Peter Dean of Bezanson, for disturbing the Abbot and Monks of Cherlieu.

In the Letter following, he earnestly Recommends their Case to Pope Innocent, who refers it to John Abbot of Bonneval, then Bishop of Valence, and to the Bishop of Grenoble. These determin'd in favour of the Abbot of Cherlieu. But Peter not being willing to acquiesce in their determination, continu'd to importune the Holy See for redress, which occasion'd St. Bernard to write the Hundred Ninety Ninth Letter to Pope Innocent, to beg of him to confirm the Judgment Pronounc'd by the Bishops.

The Two Hundredth is written to Ulger Bishop of Angers, concerning a difference between this Bishop and the Abbess of Fontevault.

In the Two Hundred and First, he admonishes Baudouin Abbot of the Monastery of Realino, and recommends to him in particular three things, First, to instruct others by his Discourse, Secondly, to give them good Example by his Works, and Thirdly, to apply himself to Prayer.

In the Two Hundred and Second, he exhorts the Clergy of Sens not to proceed too rashly in the Election of an Arch-Bishop, but to wait for the Opinion of the Suffragan Bishops, and consent of the Persons of Rank in the Diocese to prevent that befalling them which hapned before to the Churches of their Neighbourhood, Orleans and Languedoc. He Recommends to them, moreover to proclaim a Fast, Assemble the Bishops, Summon the Monks, and in fine, to omit none of the requisite Ceremonies in this Election. This Letter was written after the Death of Henry, Arch-Bishop of Sens, who was succeeded in the Year 1144, by Hugh Abbot of Pontigni.

In the Two Hundred and Third Letter, he Counsels the Bishop and Clergy of Troyes not to suffer the Sub-Deacon Anfelle to be Marry'd and carry Arms.

The Two Hundred and Fourth, contains a Christian Compliment to the Abbot of St. Aubin.

The Two Hundred and Fifth, is an Answer to the Bishop of Rocheſter, who wrote to him somewhat severely about causing Robert Pallus to Live at Paris, when he thought it necessary.

In the Two Hundred and Sixth, he Recommends one of his Kindred to Melifenda Queen of Jerusalem, and wishes her a long and happy Reign.

The Three following Letters Address'd to Roger King of Sicily, contain nothing remarkable.

The Two Hundred and Tenth, and the Eight following, are Letters of Recommendation Address'd to Pope Innocent. In the Two Hundred and Thirteenth, he complains that this Pope took little or no notice of the Reconciliation made by his means with Peter of Pisa. In the Two Hundred and Sixteenth, and Two Hundred and Seventeenth, he Complains that Radulphus Count of Vermandois, having put away one Wife and Marry'd another, was seemingly vindicated by the Court of Rome. He likewise Commends Thibaud Count of Burgundy, for taking the part of the first Wife which was his Niece. In the Two Hundred and Eighteenth, he justifies himself to the Pope against a suspicion had of him concerning the Goods of the Cardinal Ives, assuring his Holiness that they had been embezzled contrary to his knowledge.

The Two Hundred and Nineteenth is Address'd to Alberic, Bishop of Ostia, Stephen of Palestrine, Igmar of Frescati, and Gerard Chancellor of the Church of Rome, concerning a difference which hapned between the King of France and the Pope, on account of the Arch-Bishop of Bourges. This Arch-Bishoprick being vacant, the King had given the Clergy of Bourges leave to choose any other for their Arch-Bishop than Peter, whom the Pope had cast a favourable Eye upon. He was nevertheless Elected afterwards, and Consecrated at Rome by the Pope. Whereupon, the King having made an Oath, that he should never be Arch-Bishop during his Life time, would not receive him, but declar'd War against the Count of Champagne, to whom he was retir'd. This caus'd the Pope to interdict the Dominions of France, and it was upon this occasion that St. Bernard writ this Letter, by which, he wills the Prelates of the Court of Rome, that they might have learnt by the Persecution of Guibert, and undertakings of Burdin and Peter of Leon, how much Schism is to be dreaded, and how hazardous it is to raise any difference between the Regal and Sacerdotal Power. That therefore they must Act with Prudence, and manage Matters with Lenity not to incur the danger of a New Schism: That he can by no means excuse the King for having made an Oath, which it was both a Crime and Sin to keep; nay, though he was in a manner forc'd to perform it, being a custom among the French to observe any, though never so unjust; that his Intention was not to excuse the King of France, but ask Pardon for him; and lastly, that the concern he was in, his Age and Majesty, do in some measure deserve it, without being like to do any great wrong to the Church.

In the Two Hundred and Twentieth Letter, he writes to King Lewis, that he cannot hinder the Anathema's being renew'd against Radulphus; and endeavours to persuade his Majesty, that that ought not to set him at variance with Count Thibaud.

In the Two Hundred Twenty First, he speaks high to this Prince, and takes a great deal of Liberty to reprove him, Affirming that he is an Enemy to Peace; that he has violated the Treaties which he has made; that he has communicated with Excommunicated Persons; that he has encourg'd Murthers, Theft, Robbery, and the Destruction of Churches; that not contented to Assume an Authority over the Church of Bourges, which did not belong to him, he also hinders the Church of Chalons from having a Bishop, as likewise permits his Brother to seize upon the Revenues of the Bishopricks. He Admonishes him to forbear speedily these Exactions, and prevent the anger of God by Repentance after the Example of the King of the Nirvites.

In the Two Hundred Twenty Second, he writes to Josselin Bishop of Soissons, and Sugerus Abbot of St. Denys, likewise the Kings Minister, concerning the occasions pretended at Court for making War upon Count Thibauds as also touching the wrong which the King did to the Churches.

These Letters written with all the freedom imaginable, extremely incens'd the King and his Ministers against St. Bernard, who having understood as much by the Answer which Josselin sent him, he signifies again to him in the Two Hundred Twenty Third Letter, that perhaps he had been a little bold, but that his Presumption was meerly caus'd by Grief, and the Zeal he had for the Welfare of the Church, and moreover that it was to have been wish'd that they had made use of the same Liberty, and endeavour'd to reclaim the King by the like Admonitions.

In the Two Hundred Twenty Fourth, he acquaints Stephen Bishop of Palestrine with the damage which the King had done to the Churches of France, putting him in mind that he ought to Repent, having written to Rome in favour of this Prince.

In the Two Hundred Twenty Fifth, he exhorts Josselin to endeavour a Peace.

The Two Hundred Twenty Sixth is written to the King in the Name of Hugh Bishop of Auxerre, as likewise in his own, wherein he Admonishes this Prince, who had just before frustrated a Negotiation begun at Corbeil, to renew the same and to have more advantageous thoughts for the good of the Church.

In the Two Hundred Twenty Seventh, he conjures Josselin to use his Interest that no damage may come to him especially from the King, who was not a little incens'd against him. All these Letters were writ in the Years 1142 and 1143.

The Two Hundred Twenty Eighth, is a very Civil Answer to a Letter of Peter Abbot of Cluny's lately written to him, whereby he gives him to Understand that he could heartily wish to renew the Friendship that had formerly been between them, and which was now Interrupted by some differences as well on account of the Bishop of Langres, as by reason that Pope Innocent had discharg'd the Order of Cisteaux, of the Tithes which they paid to Cluny.

The following is the Answer which Peter of Cluny gives to this Letter, in which after having heap'd on St. Bernard, a great many Complements, he searches into the Reasons, why the Orders of Cluny and Cisteaux, which ought to live in good Intelligence with each other, so continually jar and disagree; and he makes it plainly appear, that they have no reasonable Cause to be so divided: For in the first place, if their Difference be about Lands or other temporal Goods, they have proper Judges who may regulate those Matters, and make Peace between them. Secondly, they ought not to disagree about their Monastical Observances, because if the different Customs of different Churches, hinders not the Union of the Spirit and Charity among Christians, no more ought the diversity of Practices and Ceremonies to be a cause of Division among Monks, who although they are all of one Order, yet may have different Usages and Customs, St. Bennet himself having been sensible that his Order might be subject to some Moderation or Explication. He then brings examples of these Differences, and shews that both Orders may observe their Customs separately, and with simplicity of Heart, without condemning each other in them. Thirdly, he affirms that the different Colours of Habits ought to be a less subject of Division, since nothing is more ridiculous than for Men to fall out on such trifling Accounts. And lastly, he lays the blame on the Spirit of Pride, which (he says) had divided the Monks of Cluny and Cisteaux; the former being unwilling that the latter should be prefer'd to them, and the latter glorying that they had been restorers of the Order, and of Monastick Discipline. He concludes by exhorting both Parties to live in Peace, and to preserve a mutual Esteem and Value for each other.

In the Two Hundred and Thirtieth he writes to the Cardinals of Ostia, Frescati and Palestrine, to relieve the Church of Mets, which for some time had rather been in the hands of a Woolf than a Shepherd. He speaks of Stephen Bishop of that City, and Nephew to Pope Calixtus II. who came to the Bishoprick whilst he was young, which occasions St. Bernard to say, that he began like a little Woolf, but now being become a great one, he ravaged the Herd of Christ by Rapines, Conflagrations and Murthers.

The Two Hundred Thirty First is written to the same Cardinals, in favour of the Abbot of Lagny, accus'd at Rome to have refus'd receiving the Pope's Nuncio, to have torn his Holiness's Letter, to have imprison'd certain Monks, and to have given divers Lands of his Monastery to his Relations. St. Bernard after having exceedingly commended this Abbot, proceeds to reply to his Acculations. First he says he did not entertain the Nuncio which his Holyness sent into England, by reason that the Provost Humbert promis'd to do it for him; that the Letter which he was accus'd to have torn, was yet whole; that he never imprison'd any Monks, but only sent some that were of a very turbulent Spirit to other Monasteries, and as for giving away the Monastery Lands to his Relations, he never did without a Clause of Reversion, and a Rent reserv'd according to Custom, and which likewise was executed in presence of the Bishops of Soissons and Auxerre, and of Thibaud Count of Champagne, Conservator of the Rights and Privileges of the Monastery. As to the rest, he said it was unaccountable that a proud, rebellious and ambitious Monk, should obtain his Liberty of the Holy See. Formerly (says he) you have been accus'd of domineering over the Clergy, and the Consciences of all the World, contrary to the precept of the Apostle; and now you add something more to this Presumption, in showing an Inclination to dispose absolutely of all Religious Persons; insomuch, that I know not what remains for you so desire more, unless you would likewise command over the Angels. I do not impute this to my Lord Pope Innocent, who might easily have been overpersuaded, being but a Man, and I beg of God not to impute it to him, not in the least doubting, but when he shall come to a knowledge of the Truth, he will abhor the favouring of so pernicious and dangerous a Person as that Monk was.

In the Two Hundred Thirty Second, he writes to the same Cardinals, that if the Abbot of St. Theofroy, commonly called St. Chaffre, in the Diocess of Puy in Vellay, be guilty of those things whereof he is accused, they ought not to favour, but speedily punish him.

In the Two Hundred Thirty Third, he writes to John Abbot of Busey, in the Diocess of Nantes, perswading him to return to his Abby, which he had quitted for some time before.

In the Two Hundred Thirty Fourth, he desires Herbert Abbot of St. Stephen of Dijon, to pardon one of his regular Canons, though he had written injuriously against him.

In the Two Hundred Thirty Fifth, written in the Year 1143 to Pope Celestine II. He writes very bitterly against William, who had got possession of the Arch-Bishoprick of York, being guilty of several Crimes which he was not clear'd from but by a false Oath. The Cause was removed to Rome, and he obtain'd of Pope Innocent a Bull in his Favour, whereupon St. Bernard begs of Celestine not to suffer so ill a Man to continue in possession of the Arch-Bishoprick of York.

In the following Letter he writes upon the same subject, and after the same manner, to the Prelates of the Court of Rome.

In the Two Hundred Thirty Seventh, he writes to the same, concerning the Elevation of Bernard, Abbot of St. Anastasius, to the Sovereign Pontificate (Eugenius III. who succeeded Lucius II. in the Year 1145.) He admires how they could draw him out of his Cloyster where he was at quiet, to bring him into the World, and lay the whole Care of the Church upon him, which he says makes him very much doubt whether he will be able to sustain the Weight, and therefore recommends to them to support him therein.

The Two Hundred Thirty Eighth is Addressed to Pope Eugenius, then but newly rais'd to the Holy See. St. Bernard acquaints him with his Joy, intermixt with Grief and Fear for his Elevation to that Dignity. And afterwards he exhorts him to sustain with Apostolick Zeal, the sublime Ministry which was committed to him, and to endeavour to answer the Opinion people generally had of his Virtue. He writes to him particularly concerning the irregular Lives of the Arch-Bishop of York and the Bishop of Winchester. At length he recommends to him to abolish the wicked Custom crept into the Court of Rome, of bestowing Favours for Money; and moreover admonishes him to remember at all times that he is a Man, and to think often of Death by Reflecting how little time the Pontificates of several of his Predecessors have lasted.

In the Two Hundred Thirty Ninth, and the Two Hundred and Fortieth, he writes again to the Pope against the Arch-Bishop of York, and presses his Holiness to suspend him.

The Two Hundred Forty First is written to Hildefonsus, Count of Tholouse, concerning the Errors of Henry, Disciple to Peter de Bruys, whom this Count favoured. "How many Disorders (says he) do we every Day hear that Henry commits in the Church of God? That ravenous Wolf is within your Dominions cloathed in a Sheeps' Skin, but we know him by his Works. The Churches are forsaken, the People are without Bishops, and the Bishops are no more respected. In a Word, the Christians are without Christ, the Church are like Synagogues, the Sanctuary despoil'd of its Holiness, the Sacraments look'd upon as prophane Institutions, the Feast days have lost their Solemnity, Men grow up in Sin, and every day Souls are born away before the Terrible Tribunal of Christ, without being first reconciled to and fortify'd with the Holy Communion. In refusing Christians Baptism, they are denyed the Life of Jesus Christ. A Man that Teaches and Acts so contrary to the Will and Word of God, cannot be from God. And yet alas! he is hearkened to by many, and finds those that are ready to believe him. He would have People believe that the Church of God is at an End, and reduc'd only to that small number that he imposes on: After having been driven out of France, he nevertheless finds an Asylum in your Dominions. Consider with your self, Great Prince, if this Person does you any Honour; he is an Apostate; for after having quitted his Cloyster to live loosely, and not being willing to tarry in his own Country, or rather having been whipp'd out of it, he went about begging his Bread, and Preaching for a wretched Sustenance, and whenever it hapned that he got any thing over and above, he did not fail to consume it at Play, or at other means more shameful. This famous Preacher has been often found with Women of ill Lives. Inform your self therefore, I beseech you, how he has been driven out of Laufane, Mons, Poitiers and Bourdeaux, and what Reputation he has left behind him in those Places. St. Bernard sends this Prince word, that he is coming to reform the Disorders that this Prince has caused in the Churches of his Dominions; that he has Authority for that Purpose; that he shall do his utmost endeavours to extirpate this pernicious Plant, with assistance of the Bishops, and particularly by the Authority of the Cardinal of Ostia, who will be sent on purpose by the Holy See. He takes notice to him, that it will be for his Interest to receive this Cardinal Kindly, and to joyn his Authority with theirs, to the end, that the Pains they shall take for the Salvation of him, and his People may not prove of no effect.

In the Two Hundred Forty Second, written by St. Bernard after his return from this Country, he exhorts the People of Tholouse to stun Hereticks, obey their Bishop, exercise Hospitality, and not to suffer any Preachers among them, but such as have either Ordination from their Bishop or the Pope.

These Letters were writ in the Year 1147.

The Two Hundred Forty Third, is Address'd to the Lords and People of Rome, after they had driven out Pope Eugenius III. He reproaches them severely for this Action, and conjures them to reconcile themselves speedily to him.

A New Ecclesiastical History

In the Two Hundred Forty Fourth, he exhorts Conrade, King of the Remans, to Re-establish the Pope, and Punish the Rebels of Rome; giving him to understand, that it is as much for his Interest as for that of the Holy See, that the City of Rome which is Metropolis of the Empire, should be under his Subjection.

In the Two Hundred Forty Fifth, he Commends the Zeal which Pope Eugenius shew'd in opposing King Lewis the Younger's obliging Elias Bishop of Orleans to quit his Bishoprick.

In the Two Hundred Forty Sixth, he Recommends this Bishop to the Pope, being before but an humble Monk, and entrears his Holiness to take pity on his Condition, and to provide for the Payment of his Debts, out of the Revenues of his Bishoprick.

In the Two Hundred Forty Seventh, he Prays the same Pope to permit Sampson, Arch-Bishop of Rheims, to make use of the Pallium which he had been forbidden, on account of his having Crown'd King Lewis in the Church of Bourges in presence of the Arch-Bishop of that City.

In the Two Hundred Forty Eighth, he advises this Pope not to suffer himself to be over-reach'd by the Bishop of Seez, who was coming to wait on him, to get himself re-establish'd.

In the Two Hundred Forty Ninth, he recommends to the same Oribert the Prior of Chaise-Dieu, Bishop Elect of Valence, chosen in the Year 1145.

In the Two Hundred and Fiftieth, he Acquaints the Prior and Monks of Portes, that they ought not to take it amiss that the Pope would not allow one of their Fraternity to be Bishop, though he was chosen. He says, that perhaps his Holiness would not admit of him, because he was too Young, and that he would have nothing to be said afterwards against the Election. And as for his own part, he says, he never oppos'd it in the least. Afterwards, he tells them, that he is sorry that the Abbot of Troyes had written to them so very harshly, and he concludes his Letter with these Humble Words. My Monstrous Life and my Afflicted Conscience Cry towards you for Compassion, for I am a kind of Amphibious Creature, that neither live altogether as an Ecclesiastick nor a Recluse; and it is now a long while since I have quitted the Life of a Monk without forsaking the Habit. I esteem it needless to acquaint you with what you may easily hear from others, that is, what I do, what I employ my self about; what hazards I expose my self to in the World, and through what dangers I am compelled to go: If you are not acquainted with these I beseech you to inform your selves of them, and when you have thoroughly learnt them, to favour me with your Advice and Prayers.

In the Two Hundred Fifty First, he intercedes to Pope Eugenius in behalf of the Monks of Baume, whom this Pope had punish'd by changing their Abbey to a Priory, for their having slighted the Authority of the Holy See.

In the Two Hundred Fifty Second, he conjures the same Pope to put in execution the Sentence pronounc'd by Innocent II. against the Arch-Bishop of York.

The Two Hundred Fifty Third is an Answer to a Letter from Hugh Abbot of Premontre, who had made several Complaints against the Monks of Clairvaux. St. Bernard tells him, he did not do well to complain of him and his Order, since he has always had an esteem for that of Premontre, and that he has done them several Services upon divers occasions: He brings several Examples of what he asserts, and at length justifies himself against what that Abbot had alledged against his Order. Towards the end, he admonishes them not to break the Union betwixt them, Acquainting them that for his part he shall never be wanting in the Duties of Charity and Friendship.

In the Two Hundred Fifty Fourth, he Commends Guarini, Abbot of the Alpes, in endeavouring to reform his Monastery, and exhorts him, not to discontinue so good a Work out of fear of not being able to accomplish it while he lives, since the short time we have to live is not sufficient excuse for not endeavouring to make our selves perfect, and that such as do not labour after a progress in Spiritual Affairs go backwards instead of advancing.

In the Two Hundred Fifty Fifth, he exhorts Lewis the Gross, King of France, not to hinder the holding of a Council which he believes necessary for the good of the Church. It is of the Council of Pisa that he speaks, conven'd in the Year 1134, so that this Letter ought to precede the others by many Years.

In the Two Hundred Fifty Sixth, he exhorts Pope Eugenius not to be disheartned because of some losses the Christians had sustain'd in the East, but to succour and assist them to his power. He moreover tells him, that he was more than ordinarily surpriz'd when he heard that he was pitched upon for General of the Army, that was to go thither, being no ways qualify'd for that Employ.

In the Two Hundred Fifty Seventh, he writes to this Pope in favour of Philip, who was become a Monk of Clairvaux, after he had been suspended from his Bishoprick of Tarentum, and desires his Holiness to be kind to him.

The Three following Letters were writ concerning Rualenus, who had been chosen Abbot of St. Anastasius. St. Bernard after having requested of his Holiness by the first of these Letters to discharge him from his Burthen. In the Second, consents that he shall continue it, since his Holiness desires it, and by the Third, he Admonishes this Abbot not to be uneasie under his Vocation.

In the Two Hundred Sixty First, he desires Eugenius to take off the Excommunication pronounc'd against the Abbot of St. Urban, who had bestow'd the Habit of that Order on a Knight Templar.

The Two Hundred Sixty Second, is a Letter of Recommendation to the Pope, in favour of the Monks of Monzon.

The Two Hundred Sixty Third is Address'd to the Bishop of Soissons, in favour of the Abbot of Chefy.

The Two Hundred Sixty Fourth is a Letter from Peter, Abbot of Cluny, to St. Bernard, in which, he extreamly Commends St. Bernard, and begs of him to send him his Secretary Nicholas.

The Two Hundred Sixty Fifth is St. Bernard's Answer, in which, he rejects the Praises given him, and moreover informs him, that he cannot send the Person he desires, by reason, that he was with the Bishop of Auxerre, where he was so Sick that it was impossible he should come to Clairvaux without great inconvenience.

The Two Hundred Sixty Sixth is written to Sugerus, Abbot of St. Denys, a little before his Death. He exhorts him to prepare courageously for Death, and professes a great deal of Friendship for him.

By the Two Hundred Sixty Seventh, he tells Pope Eugenius that he was grossly deceiv'd when he rais'd to the Ecclesiastical Dignity a Person Convicted of Crimes and Condemn'd for them, by Lambert Bishop of Angoulême, and therefore begs of his Holiness to revoke what he had done.

In the Two Hundred Sixty Ninth, he sends him word that he would not have him give Credit to a Letter he lately wrote him, about a Person who had over-reach'd him by a Recommendation from the Bishop of Beauvais.

In the Two Hundred and Seventieth, he writes again to the Pope, in favour of Anthelmus, Prior of the Great Charter-House, who having expell'd some of his Monks for Disobedience and Irregularity, they had gone to Rome, and obtain'd a Re-establishment from the Pope. St. Bernard says, that from the first foundation of this Order, he had never heard that a Carthusian who forsook his Cloyster had ever been receiv'd again, without making ample Satisfaction; that these Monks who had thus forsaken their Order did yet worse in returning to it. "And what good (says he to the Pope) does your Holiness believe, that these Monks could do, whose leaving their Monastery was an effect of Disobedience, and their returning to it the Product of Pride? They rejoyce for the Ill they have done, and insult over those whom they have Offended; and, in a word, they even Triumph for having obtain'd the Victory. The Prior is no more Prior; he bears his Office with regret, not being willing to see the Destruction of his Order, and he would have left his Monastery long since, could he have gone out alone.——Consider therefore most Holy Father, (continues he) how you have been over-reach'd, and what Punishment he deserves, who has thus deceiv'd you!——Take Care then that the Prior be restor'd, to the end, that Inquiry may not Triumph over Justice. He afterwards Acquaints the Pope with the Death of Raymond, Abbot of Cisteaux, and that Gozvin, Abbot of Bonneval, had succeeded him. This Abbot Dy'd in the Year 1151. This Letter therefore belongs to that Year.

In the Two Hundred Seventy First, he excuses himself to Thibaud, Count of Champagne, for not caring to be concern'd in promoting his Son's having Benefices while he was but a Child, and this for Conscience sake, well knowing that Ecclesiastical Dignities ought only to be bestow'd upon such as are able to acquit themselves of their Functions, and moreover, it being not allowable for one person to enjoy several Benefices at a time, unless by Dispensation or some other considerable reason that the Church may have.

In the Two Hundred Seventy Second, he exhorts the Bishop of Laon, (Gautier Abbot of St. Martin who was made Bishop of that See in the Year 1151.) to be reconcil'd to the Bearer of that Letter.

The Two Hundred Seventy Third, is written to the Abbot and general Chapter of Cisteaux: He gives them to understand that he could heartily wish his Affairs would give him leave to Assist in their Chapter, and moreover Admonishes them to Labour in the Reformation of their Order.

In the following he thanks Pope Eugenius for the Letter full of Charity and Zeal which he had written to his Chapter, and moreover entreats him to continue always the same good will towards his Order. He acquaints him towards the End that he is Sorry that he had taken from them Hugh Abbot of the Three Fountains, to make him a Cardinal.

In the Two Hundred Seventy Fourth, he gives this Abbot of the Three Fountains, to Understand, that he Repents having writ to Rome, in favour of the Nephew of Hugh Bishop of Auxerre then lately Dead.

In the Two Hundred Seventy Fifth, he Acquaints the Pope with the Disturbances that had hapned in the Election of a Bishop to the Church of Auxerre, and what he had been Inform'd by one of his Monks, sent thither concerning the double Election there made.

In the Two Hundred Seventy Sixth, he Acquaints him likewise that the will of the late Bishop of Auxerre, had been made by suggestion of Deacon Stephen, at whose Request he had given his Nephew several Benefices and Church-Lands.

In the Two Hundred Seventy Seventh, written also to the Pope, he recommends to him Peter Abbot of Cluny, who was on his Journey towards Rome, and begs that his Holyness would not give him leave to quit his Abby altho' he should desire it.

The Two Hundred Seventy Eighth is a Letter of Recommendation to the Pope in favour of Henry Bishop of Beauvais.

In the Two Hundred Seventy Ninth, Address'd to Henry Son of Thibaud Count of Champagne, he begs of him to do Justice in behalf of the Abbot of Chatillon, on the Lord of Belfort, whose Servants had taken several Cattle from him.

The Two Hundred and Eightieth is written to the Pope concerning the Election of a Bishop of Auxerre. The Pope having Understood that there were two different Elections, deputed St. Bernard, with two other Persons to proceed to a New one, St. Bernard and one of the Electors pitched upon one Person who is thought to have been Alain who got the better, but the Third gave his Vote for another. Hereupon St. Bernard prays the Pope to procure the Consent of the Third Person, Assuring his Holyness, that he could not have thought of a more proper Person to serve the Church, and to prevent the Designs of the Count of Nevers upon the Church of Auxerre.

A New Ecclesiastical History

The Two Hundred Eighty First contains a Reprimand which he gave the Abbot of Cherval, for the Liberty he had taken to talk injuriously of him.

In the Two Hundred Eighty Second, he exhorts Lewis the Younger, King of France to give his Consent to the Election which had been made of a Bishop of Auxerre.

In the Two Hundred Eighty Third, he writes to Pope Eugenius touching the restitution demanded by the Monks of the Monastery of the Mirour, of the Order of Cîteaux, upon the Monks of Gigny of the Order of Cluny, of 30000 Sols. Hereupon the Abbot of Cluny and St. Bernard had endeavour'd to accommodate the Difference; and the Monks of Gigny, having little to say for themselves, St. Bernard has recourse to the Pope, that he would be pleas'd to do justice in behalf of those of the Mirour.

In the Two Hundred Eighty Fourth he recommends to this Pope the Arch-Bishop of Rheims, the Bishop of Arras, the Abbot of Aucourt, and some others.

The Three following Letters were written in favour of Odon Successor of Sugerus in the Abby of St. Denys. The Two First are Address'd to the Pope, and the Third to Hugh Cardinal Bishop of Osia.

In the Two Hundred Eighty Eighth Address'd to Andrew his Uncle, a Knight Templar, he acquaints him with his concern for the ill Success of the Croisade occasion'd by the ill Conduct of the Christian Princes, and says he hopes to see that Enterprize accomplish'd before he dies.

In the Two Hundred Eighty Ninth, he gives wholesome Advice to Melisenda Queen of Jerusalem.

In the Two Hundred and Ninetieth, Address'd to Hugh Cardinal-Bishop of Osia, he writes against the Conduct of Jordain des Ursini, Cardinal Legate of the Holy See in Germany. That Legate (says he) *has left behind him shameful Marks of his Expedition where-ever he has been, for he has fill'd all the Churches of Germany, France, and Normandy with Sacrileges. It is said that he has done a great many Ill Things unworthy of his Character, Robb'd the Churches where-ever he came, and every where plac'd Young Men in Ecclesiastical Dignities; That several have paid him great Sums of Money to keep him out of their Country; That by his Emissaries he has Extorted and Exact'd Money from those places whither he could not go himself: In a word he is become the By word of the World: Every Body slight and speaks ill of him: The Poor Monks and Other Clergy complain of him: Those of his Profession have the greatest Abhorrence of his Life and Conversation; and Lastly he has little resemblance with John Paperans, who was Legate at that time in Ireland, and who was justly Honour'd and Rewarded for his faithful and Prudent Ministry. That he had for some time been Jealous of him, but that he all along hop'd that God would convert him or that he would berray himself as he now had done. In the Three Hundred and Sixth, he acquaints the Cardinal of Osia that he has not been able to encline the Monks of the Three Fountains, to Elect Nicholas for their Abbot whom this Cardinal desir'd might might succeed in this Abby, yet notwithstanding the Monks had chosen Tivolve; that he knew nothing in that Person which could deserve that Dignity, and that if he had a mind to out him of it, for his part he would not oppose it.

In the Three Hundred and Seventh, he excuses the Conduct of the Bishop of Beauvais to this Cardinal, altho' he says he does not deserve it. In the Three Hundred and Sixteenth, he desires also Henry Arch-Bishop of Sens, and Haimeric Chancellor of the Church of Rome, not to oppose the Restitution of some Ecclesiastical Goods, which a certain Lord has a mind to make to the Monks. "When Laicks (says he) who are in possession of Churches or Church-Revenues have a mind to quit them, it is commendable; and when they are disposed to give them to the Ministers of God, it is doubly so. But this being to be done only by the hands of the Bishop, he cannot refuse it without being guilty of two Faults, nor content to it, without being cause of two good things. This Lord requests a thing of you which you ought to have asked of him; for which do you think does it better become to be in Possession of Church Revenues, a Soldier or a Saint? No body that has heard of this Action, but has been surprized. Make then no more difficulties to receive from Laicks what belongs to the Church and the Ministers of God's Word.

In the Three Hundred and Seventeenth, written from St. Bernard to Geofrey Prior of the Monastery of Clairvaux; he gives him to understand that the Church of Rome is at present in Peace; that the party of Peter of Leon have done Fealty and Homage to Pope Innocent; that in like manner, all the Clergy that had sided with that Cardinal were come over to the Pope: And in fine, that God having thus fulfill'd his Wishes, he shall be speedily on his Return. The four Letters following are likewise Address'd to Sugerus, whereof the two first are Letters of Recommendation. The Third is concerning the Estate the Church of the East was then in; and in the last, says that he is sorry that this Abbot is accus'd of the disturbances in the Kingdom, and wills him therefore to do his utmost to prevent 'em, and not to suffer any in his Abby, which are any ways the cause of them.

In the Three Hundred Eighty Second, written to Leontus Abbot of St. Berthin; he expresses his Gratitude for the Favours he has received from him, and moreover acquaints him, that Thomas of St. Omer who had left his Order to come to his of Clairvaux, could not possibly return.

In the Three Hundred Eighty Third, Address'd to the same, he thanks him for the many proofs of Friendship which he has received from him. The following Letter contains the like, being Address'd to William Patriarch of Jerusalem.

A New Ecclesiastical History

In the Three Hundred Ninety Fourth, he blames the Arch-Bishop of Lyons, for having depos'd the Abbot of Aisnay, and admonishes him to revoke his Decree.

In the Three Hundred Ninety Fifth Address'd to Alovisus Bishop of Arras, he acquaints him that Thomas a Monk of St. Berthin being enter'd into the Monastery of Clairvaux, cannot reasonably be expected to return to Berthin.

In the Three Hundred Ninety Sixth written to Ricuin Bishop of Toul, he excuses himself for having receiv'd into his Monastery a Clerk of his Church without knowing of him.

In the Three Hundred Ninety Seventh written to Odon Abbot of Marmoutier, in the Name of Hugh Abbot of Pontigni and of St. Bernard, they give him to understand that his Monks ought not to take it ill that they have lost some Churches which they pretended to by the Arbitration and final Determination of Geoffrey Bishop of Chartres, and Thibaud Count of Champagne, therefore perswades them to acquiesce in that Judgment. They further Observe in this Letter, that Churches and Church-Revenues belong naturally to the Clerks who are Oblig'd to serve at the Altar, and consequently ought to live by it. When the Profession of Monks and the Examples of their Predecessors learn them that they are to get their living with the sweat of their Brows, and not to subsist on the Profits of the Church. Nay even tho' the Church should be neglected by the Clerks they are not to partake of the Revenues tho' they do of the Trouble. For (says he) with what Face can you, O Monks, pretend to the Wine of the Vines which you have not planted, and to the Milk of the flock which you have not govern'd? How comes it that you would exact some thing from them for whom you never did any Service? And if you will needs lay claim to it, why don't you Baptize their Children, Bury their Dead, Visit their Sick, Give Benedictions in Marriage, Instruct their Ignorant, Reprimand Simmers, Excommunicate such as despise Instruction, and give Absolution to Penitents? In a word why don't ye Open your Mouths and Preach, you whose duty it is to live in Repose and silence? But it is a most Odious thing to reap where you did not Sow, and live upon the gains of another. Lastly St. Bernard says that altho' they had the right they pretended, yet ought they not to Dissent from their Abbot who had already Agreed to the Judgment of the Arbitrators.

In the Three Hundred Ninety Eighth he writes to Guy Abbot of Montier-Ramey, and to the Monks of his Monastery who had desir'd St. Bernard to compose Lessons and Hymns for them to read on the Feast of St. Victor, whose body they pretended was bury'd in their Church, to which he Answer'd that he durst not undertake a work so much above his Capacity, and which requir'd a Person of greater Authority, of a Life more Holy, and who was master of a better Style. He Adds moreover that in the Celebration of so solemn a Feast, New Prayers of small Authority ought not to be made use of, but rather Authentick and Ancient Compositions which may be proper to edify the Church, and which Savour of Ecclesiastical Gravity. That if there be a Necessity for something new and the subject so requires it, such Pieces ought only to be us'd as command respect from the Grandeur of their Style and the Pious Life of their Author. As for the rest (says he) the Expressions therein contain'd ought to be of Unquestion'd Veracity; They ought to inspire Justice, Teach Humility, Inculcate Equity, Enlighten the mind, Model the Manners, Exterminate Vice, Instill Devotion and restrain the Liberties of the Senses. The Singing ought to be Grave, without intermixing any thing either Effeminate or Rustick. It ought to be Agreeable without being too delicate, and should Affect the Heart by surprizing the Ear. And in a word it should comfort sadness, and Appease Discontent, but not drown the Sound of the Words but rather encrease it; for it is no small disadvantage to a spiritual Life when the Charms of Singing divert the Attention from Thoughts, and fix them rather upon Modulating the Voice, than comprehending the sense of the Words. These are the Sentiments of St. Bernard concerning Prayers and Celebrating the Divine Office, and altho' he had all the Qualifications which he requir'd in an Author of this kind, yet would he not undertake what was requested of him, and contents himself with sending only two Sermons on the Life of St. Victor to the Monks of Montier-Ramey.

The Three Hundred Ninety Ninth is a Letter of Recommendation which he gave to a Monk of the Monastery of St. Michel, who was about to go in Pilgrimage to Jerusalem. He endeavours to dissuade him from this Design by reason that he thought a Monk, however Criminal he were, could not do Penance better than within the Walls of his Monastery. He desires Lelbert Abbot of this Monastery to receive him.

The Four Hundredth is another Letter of Recommendation granted to Robert a Monk of Liesies that his Abbot might use him more kindly.

The Two Letters following contain nothing remarkable.

In the Four Hundred and Third Address'd to Henry Arch-Deacon of Orleans, he Answers to a Question propos'd to him, to wit, If a Child who was in Danger of Death had been baptiz'd by a Laick under this form. I Baptize you in the Name of God and of the Holy and true Cross, whether the Baptism had been Valid; or whether providing the Child had liv'd it must have been Baptiz'd again. St. Bernard is of the mind that it had been well Baptiz'd, because he cannot think that the difference in words can prejudice the Truth of the Faith, and the good Intention of him that Baptiz'd it. His reason is because under the word God the Trinity is comprehended, and by Adding the Holy and True Cross he had made mention of our Saviour, That when one is baptiz'd according to the Custom of the Church in the Name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and as we may read in the Acts of the Apostles that some were baptiz'd in the Name of Jesus Christ only, it cannot be doubted but that those who have been baptiz'd in the Name of the Holy Cross, have been sufficiently sanctify'd, inasmuch that the Confession of the Cross implies the Confession of Jesus Christ Crucify'd. Moreover that in respect of him who had baptiz'd, his simplicity and good Intention excus'd him, but nevertheless that if any should endeavour to introduce this manner of Baptism they would be Inexcusable. This Opinion of St. Bernard disagrees with that of the Divines, who maintain that Baptism of this kind is ipso facto Null and Void.

The Four Hundred and Fourth is Address'd to Albert a Recluse Monk, who desir'd of St. Bernard that he might fast after his own fashion, and Permit Women to enter into his Cell. St. Bernard Answers that he has no power to Command him, but that he has several times Advis'd him to Eat at least once a day to receive no visits from Women and to live by hard Labour.

In the Four Hundred and Fifth he takes Notice to an Abbot that one of his Monks was qualify'd to be Profess'd, and therefore he ought not to dispense with him.

The Four Hundred and Sixth is Address'd to the Abbot of St. Nicholas in the Woods, to whom he recommends a certain Monk.

In the Four Hundred and Seventh he blames Odon Abbot of Beaulieu, for not having paid a Legacy to a Poor Man, and tells him he had better have Sold a Chalice from the Altar, than have suffer'd this Person to want.

In the Four Hundred and Eighth he recommends to William Abbot of the Regular Canons of St. Martin of Troyes a Clerk who had a mind to retire from the World, and who was not able to undergo the way of Living at Clairvaux.

In the Four Hundred and Ninth Address'd to Rorgon Abbot of Abbeville, he makes him a compliment upon his desiring to see him, and desires him to bestow a spare piece of Ground belonging to his Abby, to the Monks of Alchy.

In the Four Hundred and Tenth he recommends to Gilduin Abbot of St. Victor of Paris, Peter Lombard who was come from Bulloign in France, and had been recommended to St. Bernard by the Bishop of Lucca.

The Letter following is written upon the same subject to a young Man who had enter'd into a Vow to embrace a Monastick Life.

By the Four Hundred and Fifteenth he exhorts a Man to perform the Vow he had made to become a Monk of Clairvaux.

In the Four Hundred and Sixteenth he Answers a certain Person who had complain'd to him that he had had no share of the Alms given by Count Thibaud, that he was not concern'd in the Distribution of them.

The Two following Letters contain nothing remarkable.

These are all the Letters which are most commonly Ascrib'd to St. Bernard tho' Father Mabillon has Added some others which are doubtful, and might very probably have been written by other Persons. He also adds some Charters which may reasonably admit of the same doubt, all which nevertheless continue the foregoing Numbers.

The Four Hundred and Nineteenth is An Exhortation to Probationers the which Father Mabillon believes does not belong to St. Bernard, by reason that the Stile is more restrain'd, and contains Maxims unlike those of St. Bernard, such as this, That we must Praise God even for our Damnation. It likewise appears to me that this Letter differs in stile from those of St. Bernard.

The Two following Letters are also Unlike the stile of St. Bernard.

The Four Hundred and Twenty Second is only a short Billet Address'd to King Lewis.

The Four Hundred and Twenty Third is a draught of a Letter concerning the Croisade which might probably be his as well as the Letter following. He therein recommends the Son of Count Thibaud going to the Holy War to Emanuel Commenes Emperour of Constantinople.

The Four Hundred and Twenty Fifth is a Copy of the Twenty Sixth Letter of St. Bernard.

The Four Hundred and Twenty Sixth is a Judgment by Arbitration pronounc'd by St. Bernard between Hugh, Bishop of Auxerre, and William Count of that City.

The Four Hundred and Twenty Seventh is a Letter from Geofrey Bishop of Chartres, to Stephen Bishop of Paris, by which he advises him to Refer himself to St. Bernard touching the dispute he had with Stephen de Guarlande.

The Four Hundred and Thirtieth is a Letter from the same written to St. Bernard which contains an Apology for his Monastery.

The Four Hundred and Thirty First is also from the same written in the Name of Siebaud Abbot of St. Leon to Abbot William, to excuse him for having Answer'd the Calumnies of Herbert with too great severity.

The Second Tome of St. Bernard's Works, comprehends divers Treatises, whereof the first is Entitled, Of Consideration, divided into V. Books, and Address'd to Pope Eugenius III. to serve him for Instruction. The Consideration he treats of in this Work, is as himself desires it, the Thoughts which he employs in search after Truth, and more particularly relating to the Duties of his Profession. In the first Book, he shews that the Condition of a Sovereign Pontiff would be but very unhappy, had he no regard to himself, for it would be a very indiscreet thing of him to spend all his time in hearing and deciding other Mens Differences, and all the while neglect to employ himself sometimes in Contemplation. He exclaims against the great number of Causes that are brought into the Ecclesiastical Courts, as likewise against the many Abuses committed there. He shews that this is more consistent with the Secular Power than the Ecclesiastical. He says he would not have Eugenius follow the Examples of his Predecessors, who applied themselves more to Business than Contemplation, but that he should imitate St. Gregory, who when Rome was threatened to be besieged by the Barbarians, labour'd on an Exposition of the most difficult passage of the Prophet Ezekiel. He there proves that Consideration serves to form and employ the four Cardinal Virtues. Lastly, he takes Notice of the unbecoming Bickerings at the Ecclesiastical Bar, and exhorts Pope Eugenius to endeavour after a Regulation.
